Honolulu Turf Items.

The new pacing horse lately imported by Wm. Cunningham is one of the handsomest and perhaps the speediest harness animal ever brought to Hawaii. His speed on Kapiolani Park route remains yet to be tested. His going qualities as shown in the States are of record.

"Our Boy" is the name of this horse in the register. He is 9 years old, a son of Vernon Boy, sired by Nutwood, a Wilkes with a record of 2:18 3-4. "Our Boy's" time as given in the current Year Book is 2:12½. The name of the horse, by the way, has been changed by Mr. Cunningham to "Wela ka Hao." Tom King and a few other horsemen took part in the baptismal Wednesday evening. Wela ka Hao is a shapely and stylish chestnut sorrel, good form and free action and without any tricks at all though of fine spirit and great courage. His worse beating in the campaign of last season was by Javelin, 2:08, a daughter of Creole. Creole, 2:15, is now owned here and will be in the races of March 17 and June 11th. He has done some wonderfully fine pacing on the Park track. Mr. Cunningham will drive Wela ka Hao himself. He was up behind Gladys, the gray mare, last season and is a clever man in the sulky seat. Mr. Cunningham remarks, however, that he cannot hope to get all the speed out of his horse that the professional drivers of the States were able to produce.

Another game pacer that Wela ka Hao will meet here at the same time he faces the starter with Creole will be Ralph, as game a harness horse as ever looked through a bridle. Ralph has never yet on the local track been forced to do his best.

James Quinn of the back firm of King street has a pacing horse called Violin that may be fit for work on the track by the 17th of next month. Quinn has not yet been known to send to the track a slow or inferior animal and his friends will all want to play this especial violin.

Mr. McDonald, the blacksmith, has in the hands of Nat Goodwin, the trainer, a horse that is not light in color and that is said to be "dark" for the 17th. According to the reports of the day the speed of this entry or candidate is ranged between that of an express train and telegraph. McDonald is a veteran horseman and would not be at all likely to have anything but approaching the best to be met.

"Jack" Gibson, the well-known trainer and expert driver, has in his string at the park four pacing horses, all of them threatened with violent attacks of speed. One is L. L. McCandless' importation that arrived too late to be trimmed for the meeting last year. Another is Norton's Lady Elector, a very promising candidate for any sulky event.

Mr. Decker, of Maui, is expected to bring to town in a week or a pacing mare fit for the class here introduced and at least three "bangtails."

Gus Schuman has in training Sympathetic's Last, the famous mile runner and half-mile sprinter that has done some turns that surprised everybody around the track.

The Halsteads are expected to have on hand to carry the Waiulus colors, Magnet and a few others, with one or two good ones. Island horse races will be featured at the meet on the 17th as well as at the Jockey Club session in June.

The promoters of the extra meet on the 17th of March are at present very well satisfied with the outlook.

Reverting again for an instant to trotting or pacing horses, it should be told that track and driving here have always been considered, together with the change of air, a handicap of from five to fifteen seconds.—Honolulu Advertiser.

From a Prominent Trainer.

Mr. Henry O'Neill, prominent horseman and trainer, at Prairie du Chien, Wis., writes as follows: "I have used Quin's Ointment for several years and always with the best results. It is a great absorbent and will do all that is recommended." For Curls, Splints, Spavins, Windpuffs and all bunches Quin's Ointment will prove a success. If you cannot obtain it from your druggist it will be sent by mail or express prepaid on receipt of $1.50 per package to any part of the United States. Address W. B. Eddy & Co., Whitehall, N. Y. For sale in San Francisco by Messrs. J. O'Kane and J. A. McKerron.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.

We find ABSORBINE very beneficial. Yours truly,
J. HORTON, Carpenter.

Geldings as Racers.

Are geldings more useful as racehorses than stallions is a question which has often been discussed, and, though it may seem a trite subject to revive, it is, nevertheless, interesting in that it brings up many pleasant reminiscences of the turf when unsexed horses were more prominent than in late years. The mention of the names of Parole, Monitor, Checkmate, Barnum, Bootjack, Drake Carter, Warfield, Crickmore, Strathmeath, Sir Hugh, Raceland and Banquet will suggest racing careers that make strong arguments in favor of a more frequent use of the knife. Each of the above-named horses was on the turf a good number of years, and in their day were brilliant performers. It is a fact that geldings are easier to train, and, being more quiet, there is not that great strain on the nerves and sinews which is against the stallions, and renders their lives on the turf, as a rule, shorter than those of geldings. Again, the gelding process would tend to curtail the breeding of "weeds" and thus eventually be a great benefit to racing, as well as an improvement of the breed of horses. Every two-year-old colt which, under favorable conditions, does not show merit should be gelded, for, while performance is not always a guarantee of a successful stud career, it is, nevertheless, a very powerful element to be considered in estimating the worthiness of horses to be patronized for breeding purposes. If a horse has not himself high-class racing qualities it is not likely that he can transmit them to his progeny, for the foundation stone of breeding is the theory that like produces like. The rule, however, is not infallible, for there are many first-class racehorses which proved failures in the stud, and the converse of the proposition, that horses of little merit on the turf sometimes prove successful sires is equally true, yet in the general lottery of breeding all favorable chances must be taken advantage of, and there is certainly a stronger probability of good results from a horse which has a record, backed, of course, by proper breeding.

The gelding of Parole, Monitor and others has been looked on as a misfortune to breeding, but the question, would they have been as great performers if they had been left entire, is a proposition in rebuttal of the misfortune idea. They might or might not, but it is certain that they could have been no better, with a strong probability that they might not have been so good. In view of the present status of the thoroughbred pedigree in this country in consequence of inbreeding and commingling of the various fashionable families, almost every horse which appears on the turf has a good enough lineage to breed to, but, in making a choice, high-class performance should be a sine qua non and all which do not come up to a proper standard after a fair trial should be "added to the list." Many horses are improved by gelding and become useful racehorses, or they can be relegated to other purposes for which they would otherwise be of no value. If more colts were gelded and mares which have never produced racehorses were put to breeding other styles of horses and mules the thoroughbred interests of the country would be greatly benefited and the race track stables would not be filled with a lot of worthless "crabs" of no use whatever except to furnish a claim to a badge of admission to the track for trainers who handle them.

The Gallopers at St. Louis.

Concerning horses owned by St. Louis turfmen, the Republic says:

"Barney Schrieber's big band of 2-year-olds at his farm in St. Louis County are reported to be in excellent shape. The big Balgown—Ohio Belle colt has had all the surplus fat worked off him and is now as hard as nails. Miss Marion, a beautiful bay filly by Himyar, is exceedingly promising, and the Balgown—Pennyroyal colt is another one in high favor with the stable hands. Sain and a dozen broodmares purchased by Mr. Schrieber in California this winter will arrive at the farm shortly.

"A lot of stuff has been printed in the papers lately about Charley Patterson's wonderful two-year-old filly May Hempstead, by Patron—Lilly Hempstead. May Hempstead won the Bayonet Stakes and another race at New Orleans, and is now being touted as the filly of the year. She was shipped south from Memphis. J. C. Cahn of St. Louis has a filly at Memphis that can give May Hempstead cards and spades, so the Memphis rail birds state. The filly in question is the beautiful chestnut by Chance—Playingfields, that carried off the blue ribbon at the St. Louis Fair last fall. She certainly is a gem of the first water. Her dam, Playingfields, is the mother of that good race horse, Hurlingham.

"John Huffman, another St. Louis horseman, thinks he will be able to give May Hempstead a game if she comes to the St. Louis meeting. Huffman has a full sister to the famous Deerfoot, by Hindoo—Dreamland, that is said to be as fast as a ghost. Another filly in the Huffman string out of the famous Tulla Blackburn, is highly thought of. Her mother certainly was a race mare of the first class, and if Huffman's two-year-old can run anywhere near as fast as her mother could, Johnny will certainly have a corn-cracker. What'er Lou, Our Chance, Dare II and the rest of the older horses in the Huffman stable have wintered well and should be heard from early this spring.

"Louis A. Cella and Joseph Sippy left for Hot Springs last night. On their way south they will stop over in Little Rock and have a look at Bill Sippy's string at Clinton Park. Bill has Assignee, Merry Monarch, Achieve, Whirlaway, Doctor G. and other well known performers in his stable. These horses were wintered in St. Louis and were shipped to Little Rock about two weeks ago.

"J. H. Payne, the East St. Louis stockman, is having his good horse Harry Duke prepared over the Madison track. Harry Duke is in the Montgomery Handicap, to be run the first day of the Memphis spring meeting, and his owner will probably ship him south for this stake. The distance is one mile and a sixteenth, and the handicapper has placed 108 pounds on Harry Duke. The report that Dr. Bernays had bought Harry Duke was a mistake. The doctor was negotiating for the horse, but he could not see his way clear to pay the price demanded by Mr. Payne.

"The Hasbrouck yearlings at Goodwood are a grand looking lot. Eddie Gaines went out to see the old horse when he was in St. Louis recently and expressed himself as being greatly pleased over his condition. He wrote Billy Barrick of New York that Hasbrouck was in great shape, and his first batch of youngsters was the finest ever seen around this country. Mr. Lucas states that he will probably dispose of the Hasbrouck youngsters in New York."

More About Altamont.

In our last issue we placed before our readers a notice and advertisement of grand old Altamont, who has been leased of Jay Beach by J. M. Nelson of Alameda for the season of 1898. Each year, from the beginning of his career, Altamont has continued to contribute to the history of the American harness horse through his own performances and the performances of his descendants until the simple record of these contributions has become, in itself, an enviable eulogy. The following condensed statement in the advertisement eloquently indicates the nature of that record:

Sire of six 2:10 performers.
Sire of Chehalis, two miles 4:19½, the champion two-mile harness horse.
Grandsire of Klamath, 2:07½, the champion trotter of the Pacific Coast.
Sire of Alto, 2:09½, the champion trotting stallion of the Pacific Northwest.
Sire of seven new 2:20 performers for 1897.
Sire and grandsire of all the 2:10 performers ever produced in Oregon and Washington.

Aside from Altamont's superior individuality, his blood lines offer a splendid out-cross for the leading trotting and pacing families of California. Without a personal knowledge of the many adverse conditions which have confronted Altamont during his lifetime, it is impossible that one should have a full conception of the merit of his work. His entire stud work has been confined to the States of Oregon and Washington, yet he is the sire of six 2:10 performers, and the grandsire of Klamath 2:07½. This showing would be remarkable for any horse, no matter how great his advantages might have been, but with Altamont it can be reckoned no less than phenomenal.

Many highly-bred stallions, representatives of nearly all the leading trotting and pacing families, have been taken to Oregon and Washington. Out of this whole number, appropriately situated for comparison with each other, Altamont emerges as the sire of six 2:10 performers, and the grandsire of that great campaigner Klamath, 2:07½, while the lowest record obtained, by the get of all his combined, is 2:11½. The better class of mares available in California, and the better opportunities which will now be offered for the development of his progeny, will enhance the value of all his sires, and must certainly add much to the high reputation which he already enjoys.

Morning Scenes at Ingleside.

To one unacquainted with the preliminary work of a great race track, an early morning visit is a perfect revelation. The sight of a hundred horses working out on the track at one time, such as can be seen at Ingleside any morning from six to nine o'clock, is one that is worth a hundred times the expense attached to it, which is the carfare alone. Here it is in the early hours of morning that one sees the unvarnished side of track life. Instead of the silken jackets that dazzle the eye as they come under the wire during the races, it is the stable boy who is in evidence; the boy whose hope is that he may some day become a Tod Sloane or a Charley Thorpe and receive the plaudits of an admiring public.

These little fellows are there to the number of hundreds. They represent all ages and nationalities, but on the whole are a well-behaved lot of boys. As they pass and repass each other in the long try-outs of the morning, jocular references are made, but there is no obscenity indulged in. The trainers are a quiet set of men, much more so than one would expect to find among a class where speculation is an every day feature. A quiet determination is all that separates them from the spectator. They watch their horses move about the track, catching the time here and there, but aside from the frequent glances at their watches and an occasional signal given to the rider there is nothing to indicate that their all is perhaps to be staked upon some event of the day.

THE Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern line, with its daily service of through Pullman and Tourist Sleeping Cars, to all Eastern points, and all meals served "a la carte" in dining car, offers "comforts in travel" nowhere reached in a higher degree of perfection. Passengers leaving San Francisco on the 6 P. M. train arrive in Chicago in 3½ days, and avoid the necessity of changing cars en route. For tickets and sleeping car reservations call on or address R. R. Ritchie, General Agent, No. 2 New Montgomery street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco, Cal.

The New York Show.

The twenty-second annual bench show of the Westminster Kennel Club held February 21-24 in Madison Square Garden, New York, it is claimed has been the best the club has ever given. It was surely the largest in point of entries and financially. One thing in particular about this year's show which is pleasing to the management is the fact that there have been so few complaints about judging. Formerly a great many owners of dogs which failed to win prizes made Superintendent Mortimer's life miserable by lodging objections to the decision of the judges in the various classes, but this dissatisfaction was almost entirely missing this year. The absence of the challenge class, in which formerly so many old dogs reigned without opposition for years, did away with "walk-overs," and this change was welcomed by the majority of the exhibitors.

The actual number of dogs entered was 1330, duplicate entries brought the entry list up to 1703. The judges and breeds assigned to them were as follows:

St. Bernards, Newfoundland dogs and pugs, Miss A. H. Whitney, Lancaster, Mass. Great Danes, Mr. J. Blackburn Miller, New York. American foxhounds, Dr. A. C. Heffenger, Portsmouth, N. H. Pointers, Mr. Chas. Heath, Newark, N. J. English setters, Mr. Wm. Tallman, Greenboro, N. C. Irish and Gordon setters, Mr. George Jarvis, New York. Bulldogs, Mr. John Matthews, Boston. Terriers, Mr. J. F. Holt, Colliers, Mr. Robt. McEwer, Byron, Ont. Poodles, Mr. Chas. D. Bernheimer, New York. Beagles, Mr. H. F. Schellhass, Brooklyn, N. Y. Bloodhounds, mastiffs, Russian wolfhounds, deerhounds, greyhounds, English foxhounds, old English sheep dogs, Dalmatians, basset hounds, French bull dogs, dachshunds, all terriers (except Boston terriers), whippets, Italian greyhounds, toy spaniels, schipperkes, Pomeranians and miscellaneous class, Mr. George Raper, Wincobank, Yorkshire, Eng.

The following is a summary of the awards:

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

F. F. Worthington has a fine promising St. Bernard pup for sale (King Frisco—Jess D.). It is well marked and large boned.

Mr. John Heffernan of Stockton has bought of C. A. Sumner of Los Angeles the imported fox terrier bitch Richmond Reason. She is from the kennel of the wellknown judge, George Raper.

Mr. T. J. Walker, owner of the Lathrop Kennels, Lathrop Cal., has been on a visit to this city. He is one of our enthusiastic fox terrier breeders, and has in his kennel some choice specimens by Warren Crack.

Wild Night won the Waterloo Cup, coursing for which was concluded on February 18th. The winner was bred from Herschel stock. Real Turk and Cissy Smith divided the Waterloo Purse and Genitive won the Plate.

The case of rabies which broke out in the fox terrier kennels of W. W. Howard of Los Angeles, has caused quite a scare in that city, and for the present at least will affect the sale of dogs. Mr. Howard's loss was quite a heavy one, as he had some well bred terriers, but he, with the proper spirit, had all the dogs killed.

CHARLESTON, S. C.

DEAR SIR—I take special pleasure in recommending Glover's Mange Cure for mange in any of its stages. After curing the disease it leaves the skin of the animal in an excellent condition. As a flea-destroyer it has no superior in the market.

Very truly yours,
THOS. B. GIBBS, Farrier and Horseshoer.

The winnings of the foxterrier dog, Veracity, owned by George H. Gooderham of Toronto, Canada, at the New York show must have pleased his owner very much, to win the Grand Challenge Cup at the first time competing for it is certainly very gratifying to Mr. Gooderham. We have in this city two pups by Veracity, one owned by Thomas Howard and the other by J. B. Martin. Mr. Martin's bitch Golden Jewel is again in whelp to Veracity.

Kennel Registry.

Visits, Sales, Whelps and Names Claimed published in this column free of charge. Please use the following form:

SALES.

C. Leonard (Stockton) has sold a cocker spaniel bitch (Viscount—Bessie Trotwood), whelped Jan. 27, 1897 to C. B. Goetz, Charles Town, Jefferson County, W. Va.

C. Leonard (Stockton) has sold a cocker spaniel bitch (Royal Dandy—Daisy S.) whelped Feb. 14, 1897, to C. B. Goetz, Charles Town, Jefferson Co. W. Va.

F. F. Worthington has sold a St. Bernard bitch pup (King Frisco—Fanny K.) to A. F. Ryan, Tuscon, Ar., February 20, 1898.

WHELPS.

W. P. Strachan's (San Francisco) fox terrier bitch Trixie (Warren Sage—Stiletto) whelped February 24 1898, 6-2 dogs to J. B. Martin's Golden Flash II (Blemton Reefer—Blemton Spinaway).

W. H. McFee's (Los Angeles) St. Bernard bitch Princess Louise (Melrose II—Lady Thornton) whelped February 12, 1898, 12—to Duke (Mascot Bernard—Nellie).

W. H. McFee's (Los Angeles) fox terrier bitch Blemton Spinaway (Ch. Blemton Victor II—Spinster) whelped February 20, 1898, 3-2 dogs, to same owner's Blemton Reefer (Ch. Venio—Ch. Rachel).

THE GUN.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES.

If secretaries of gun clubs will send us the full scores of their regular monthly shoots we will be pleased to publish them; but we must receive the copy on Wednesday to insure its insertion that week.

Coming Events.

May 29-30—California Inanimate Target Association. Annual tournament. Ingleside.
March 6—Olympic Gun Club (open-to-all-tournament), Ingleside.
March 6—Reliance Gun Club, Webster street, Alameda.
March 20—Empire Gun Club vs. Garden City Cyclers Gun Club—Trophy Shoot. San Jose.
March 13—Empire Gun Club. Practice shoot. Alameda point.
March 6—Golden Gate Gun Club. Pacific Tournament grounds, Alameda Junction.

The Game Law.

The open season for shooting quail, doves, deer and wild duck as fixed by the State law is as follows: Doves, 15th July to 15th February. Mountain quail and grouse, 1st September to 15th February. Valley quail, wild duck and rail, 1st October to 1st March. Male deer, 15th July to 15th October.

The clerks of all the Boards of Supervisors have advised us that no changes have been made this year, but the ordinances passed last year hold good if they do not conflict with the State law. The following counties have not passed any ordinances that alter the open season as provided by State law: Amador, Butte, Inyo, Modoc, Mono, Mendocino, Mariposa, Nevada, Napa, Plumas, San Bernardino, San Diego, San Joaquin, Santa Clara, Sacramento, Solano, Sonoma, Santa Cruz, Siskiyou, Tehama, Yolo and Yuba.

Olympic Gun Club Shoot.

The Olympic Gun Club will commence the season to-morrow at their Ingleside grounds with an open-to-all blue-rock tournament. The following programme is scheduled: First event, 15 singles, $1 entrance. Second event, 20 singles, $1.50 entrance. Third event, 15 singles, $1 entrance. Fourth event, 25 singles, $2 entrance, $10 added. Fifth event, 10 singles, (expert rules), $1 entrance. Sixth event, 20 birds, (handicap), $1.50 entrance, $10 added. Event No. 6 is open to all who have participated in three or more of the preceding events. Entries for this event must be made before the start of event No. 5.

In the handicap event high guns to win. The number of moneys will be determined by the number of shooters. In events 1 and 3 there will be three moneys; events 2 and 4, four moneys and event 5, two moneys, class shooting.

The club extends a cordial invitation to all shooters. The first event will start at 10 A. M. sharp. The Mission-street cars will take visitors direct to the grounds.

California Wing Club.

The twenty-sixth annual meeting of the California Wing Club was held Thursday evening, February 24th, at the office of Dr. S. E. Knowles. Reports submitted show the affairs of the club to be in fine condition and financially strong. Mr. Arthur Bennet was placed on the roll of active members. The directors were empowered to purchase medals which will be competed for during the coming season; the shooting for which will be under the American Association Rules of 1893. The following officers were elected for the ensuing year: Dr. S. E. Knowles, president; A. Roos, vice-president; C. A. Haight, Secretary and treasurer; L. D. Owens, I. R. D. Grubb and H. C. Wagner, directors. The first shoot this season will be held at Ingleside, on the Olympic Club grounds, Sunday, March 20th. All subsequent trap shooting during the season will be held on the first Sunday of each month at Ingleside.

They May Shoot Again.

The Woodland Democrat speaks as follows concerning the recent match at Sacramento:

"Henry Stelling and his friends are unable to account for his fall-down on Washington's birthday. His score made in the match with Otto Feudner is so poor that he is not convinced that Mr. Feudner can beat him. He is seriously considering the advisability of challenging Mr. Feudner for another match, and it is said there is considerable Davisville money ready to back him."

Be this as it may, Mr. Feudner when approached, on the subject expressed his readiness to give Mr. Stelling's a return match. He states that he is perfectly willing to shoot for any amount from $500 to $1000; but if the match is to be for only $100, he insists on naming the ground, and rightly, too; he claims business duties are of more importance than a two or three days' trip from town for a comparatively small stake in the event of his winning, to say nothing of his expenses.

A Klondike Tent.

Of the many necessary and practical articles the demand for first class Klondike outfits has brought to the attention of people contemplating a trip to the frozen north, nothing will appeal so strongly to one's desires as a warm and secure shelter—this means success to most adventurers in that region. In this respect we will call the attention of our readers to an ideal tent recently devised and manufactured for the Alaskan trade. This tent is made of stout canvas and can be easily waterproofed. It is rectangular in shape, one side wall being somewhat higher than the other. The four walls are securely attached to a tarpaulin bottom, making the tent water and wind proof, it can be erected on snow or frozen and swampy ground without any discomfort to the occupants. A post at each corner and short guy ropes will hold the structure in position. The flap on one side affords egress and ingress and is so arranged as to be properly secured, against any inclemency of the weather. In the event of a heavy windstorm, the posts can be taken down and one finds his house transposed into a comfortable and secure sleeping-bag. These tents are made in different sizes, accommodating one, two, four or six people, and when stowed and packed make a roll similar to a pair of blankets. The utility, simplicity and convenience of this cloth house makes it adaptable in any season or locality for the camper-out.

The E. T. Allen Co., 416 Market street, this city, have these tents in stock and also make them on special order. The cost is comparatively moderate.

Empire Gun Club.

The commencement shoot of the Empires for the season will be held on Sunday, March 13th on their grounds at Alameda Point. The programme for 1898 is as follows:

Regular club shoot on the second Sunday of each month--8 to 10 A. M. practice shooting--10 A. M. open-to-all 25 bird match to classify for the moneys in succeeding match--20 breaks, 1st class; 17 to 19 inclusive, 2d class; 14 to 16 inclusive, 3d class; under 14, 4th class. Immediately following, 25 bird match, 50 cts. entrance, $20.00 added, 40, 30, 20 and 10 per cent to class winners. Ties will be shot off at 10 birds (2 cts. each) until decided--1 P. M., 25 bird match, entrance 75 cts., for club championship gold medal for 1898--2 P. M., 20 bird match 50 cts. entrance, for gold medal, competition to be between members who shoot throughout the whole season.

All shooters are invited to participate in any club event (for birds only at 2 cents each). Money and medals can be won only by club members not shooting or intending to shoot against the club in team competition.

To-morrow will probably see a number of the club members on the grounds engaging in practice for the coming match with the Garden City Cyclers Gun Club.

California Powder Works.

The plant of the California Powder Works located at Santa Cruz is at present the scene of great activity. Mr. W. C. Peyton, the Superintendent, has been called upon to make the works double their output of heavy ordnance powder daily, hence matters are booming under his direction. The tests by U. S. Government officials recently have proven the powder made by the California Powder Company to be the best manufactured in the world for modern high power guns. Thus another of our home institutions happily shows the efficacy and certainty of California resources.

Special Match.

Tomorrow at the Ingleside grounds a special match, at twenty-five birds will be shot for the Pacific Coast Amateur medal. The contestants are Geo. Hinkel and J. Shackleton; both gentlemen are up to date in trap work, considerable interest is manifested in the result.

Trap-Shooting.

The Reliance Club hold their first shoot this year to-morrow at the Webster Street grounds, Alameda.

The Golden Gate Gun Club open their trap-shooting season at the Pacific Tournament grounds, Alameda Junction to-morrow.

CARTRIDGE AND SHELL.

W. E. Murdock made a fair bag at Reclamation last Sunday.

Jules Bruns and John Karney bagged thirty cans at Sears Point on Sunday last.

Geese are very plentiful in and around Los Banos. They can be hunted until April 15.

P. W. Watson made a bag of twenty-five cans, sprig and greylucks at Point Reyes last Sunday.

On the Empire Grounds, Sunday, Huie and a friend bagged fifteen ducks and E. Schultz got twelve.

Al Shuman was in the vicinity of San Jose on Sunday; he made a bag of one dozen wild pigeons.

San Bruno gave J. Schackleton the opportunity to shoot fourteen teals, cans and spoonneys Sunday last.

B. Sherock tried Newark last Sunday for the final duck hunt of the season, his bag was sixteen birds.

Harry Hosmer and A. Roos collected a web-footed dividend of sixty-eight cans, sprig and teal at San Pablo on Sunday.

D. Holden had good shooting at the Bridges Saturday and Sunday, his score for the two days' hunt was seventy three ducks.

C. Shaw hunted at Felton, Santa Cruz county, last Sunday and bagged a dozen quail. He reports thousands of wild pigeons in that section.

L. R. Larzalere and J. R. Burfiend had their good-bye shoot on the Spooney Club ground last Sunday—the bag was sixty sprig, teal and spoonneys.

On the Greenwing grounds at Los Banos last Sunday, H. E. Carter, A. M. Shields and E. Cramer bagged 150 geese and ducks during the morning shoot.

A. M. Shields, C. D. Bianchi and N. F. Hillegas had a shoot on the Greenwing Club grounds at Los Banos recently, the combined bag was 250 ducks and geese.

F. W. King and A. D. Lockwood bagged five dozen quail near Jenny Lind, Calaveras county, last Sunday. King likes the working of his pointer Maximus better than ever.

At Alvarado last Sunday on the Pastime Ark location. George Franzen bagged forty-eight cans, bluebill and spoonneys; whilst C. Klevesahl had a bag of twenty of like variety.

Hunters galore worked the shooting grounds on the eastern bay shore last Sunday, many good bags were made, there was plenty of wind and rain and ducks were flying in all directions.

Geo. Franzen has been an enthusiastic and hard-working hunter during the past season. He shot over the ground selected by the Lincoln Club at Alvarado. His total bag for twelve trips was 277 ducks.

Saturday and Sunday was combination day at many of the arks and shooting cabins. An hour or two's shooting and then a general overhauling preparatory to stowing away the outfits during the close season.

Mr. Peter Smith, who, for a number of years past, has been connected with Messrs. Clabrough, Golcher & Co., contemplates a change of location and business. Mr. Smith will, in the course of a few weeks, take a lucrative and responsible position with the Anaconda Copper Mining Co., at Anaconda, Montana. Mr. Smith is well known to sportsmen of the city and coast, and has been particularly identified with football and other field athletic events for some time past, during which period he has won the esteem and good-will of a host of friends.

The thoroughly international nature of the Grand Prix may be gathered from the following figures in regard to the nationality of the 139 shooters: Forty-five Englishmen, forty Italians, thirty Frenchmen, seven Belgians, six Austrians, five Germans, three Russians and one each from America, Spain and Turkey. The American was a Mr. W. Rogers. The Grand Prix was shot for first in 1872, and in that year America scored its only victory, the first prize being taken by Mr. Lorillard. Since that time there have been twenty-six contests, the Englishmen scoring eleven victories, the Italians eight, the Austrians three and the French and Belgians two wins each.

The West is going to make a big bid for first honors in the coming Grand American Handicap, an extremely large delegation being booked to arrive from points west of the Ohio river a few days prior to the date set for the Interstate Association's great event, which will be commenced on March 23d next, after a preliminary day at the Elkwood Park traps by way of practice on March 22d. Last year a Westerner, Hon. Thos. A. Marshall of Keithsburg, Ill., won the great event; his victory has undoubtedly much to do with the friendly invasion this year. But an additional incentive for a good-sized delegation from the West is furnished by the earnest desire on the part of Western shooters for the removal of the scene for the Grand American Handicap of 1889 to Chicago or some other point such as St. Louis, Kansas City or Cincinnati.

Coming Events.

March 5—Regular Saturday contest of the San Francisco Fly Casting Club, 2 P. M., Stow Lake, Golden Gate Park.

March 6—Regular Sunday contest of the San Francisco Fly Casting Club, 10 A. M., Stow Lake, Golden Gate Park.

Fly-Casting Club.

The annual meeting of the San Francisco Fly-Casting Club was held last Monday evening in the rooms of the State Board of Fish and Game Commissioners, Flood building. The incumbent board of officers during the past year conducted the affairs of the club in such a satisfactory manner that the re-election of all the officers was the result of the selection for club government during the coming year, viz. President, Walter D. Mansfield; vice president, John P. Babcock; secretary, Horace Smythe; treasurer, H. F. Muller; executive committee, George C. Edwards, James S. Turner, F. H. Reed, Willis E. Bacheller and C. G. Young.

A letter was read from F. N. Peet, president of the Chicago Fly-Casting Club. The letter called attention to an open-to-the-world tournament to be held at Grand Rapids, Mich., in June next. Mr. Peet expressed confidence that the casting at this tournament would result in the establishing of a new world's record for long-distance casting. It was promised that one or more members of the Chicago club would be in attendance at the open tournament to be held in this city in September.

President Mansfield in his annual report suggested that in future at Stow lake, distance casting be done with the wind, instead of due north and south, without any account being taken of winds blowing across the course from east or west. It was suggested that this system was followed in the East and that it should be used here if it was desired that records should be broken in the September tournament. The suggestion of the president in this regard was embodied in a resolution and was made a rule of the club for the government of future contests.

The next meeting of the club is to be held in the new rooms of the Fish Commission, in the Mills building.

Fly-Casting at Stow Lake.

To-day at 2 P. M. and to-morrow at 10 A. M., the second of the series of events for the season, under the auspices of the San Francisco Fly-Casting Club, will take place at Stow Lake. Considerable interest is shown in the bait-casting event on the programme. This style of casting bids fair to have many devotees and to develop expert work and high scores in the near future.

Fish and Game Commission.

The State Board of Fish and Game Commissioners are now located in new and sunny quarters on the seventh floor of the Mills Building, having moved from their old offices in the Flood Building this week. The change is an acceptable one and convenient for those having business with the commission.

The Monterey News notes the following appointment: "We are pleased to note the appointment of S. M. Duarte as Deputy United States Fish Commissioner for this district. Mr. Duarte has held the position before, several years ago, and is thoroughly conversant with the duties required of him."

Paper mill creek was boiling over on Sunday owing to Saturday's rain. Anglers were not numerous in consequence.

Max Berges made a nice catch of steelhead at Schellville last Sunday.

TERMS—$25 FOR THE SEASON

SEYMOUR WILKES was sired by the King of the Wilkes family, Guy Wilkes, 2:14½, dam Early Bird, by Playmail (brother to Barney, 2:25½); second dam Lucy, by Odd Fellow (son of Chloroform); third dam by a son of Williamson's Belmont; fourth dam by Blackhawk 767. Playmail was by Mike 3103 (he by Vermont 322, out of the Peniger mare), out of Kate McDonough (dam of Ella Lewis 2:27, and grandam of Saladin, 2:05½).

SEYMOUR WILKES stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds. He is a seal brown in color, and in conformation is one of the most symmetrical of any in California. His qualities as a level-headed, game and speedy race horse are known to all horsemen. He is the fastest son of the mighty Guy Wilkes, and on his maternal side traces to the very best of sires and dams. He has an iron constitution, and all owners of good mares that want horses that will have breeding, size, bone, quality, good disposition and extreme speed should not overlook this horse. His service fee is placed at a very low figure considering his merits. He never was bred but to a few mares, and his progeny are models of perfection. Mares can be shipped direct to the ranch via steamer "Gold." The best of care taken of them on the farm, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Pasturage $3 per month. and 12 in 2:15 or better. Won 13 races out of 17 starts as a three-year-old,

ZOMBRO, 2:11 (Registered No. 28,029), brown stallion, foaled in 1892, stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds, and is one of the most perfect formed horses in America. His career on the turf in 1895 stamps him as one of the greatest three-year-olds the world has ever seen.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, sired by McKinney, 2:11½, son of Alcione, by George Wilkes.
ZOMBRO, 2:11, first dam Whisper, by Almont Lightning, son of Almont 83, dam by Mambrino Pilot 29.
ZOMBRO, 2:11, second dam May Berry, by Kentucky Clay 194, whose dam is also the dam of Mambrino Patchen and Lady Thorne, 2:19½.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, third dam by Edwin Forest 49.
Whisper, the dam of Zombro, was bred and raised by Gen. W. T. Withers, of Lexington, Ky., and is a handsome brown mare, 16 hands high, weighing 1,150 pounds. She has never been beaten in the show ring, always carrying off first prize.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, won the first prize over all three-year-old stallions at the Horse Show in San Francisco in 1895.
This grand stallion will make the SEASON OF 1898 at SACRAMENTO RACE TRACK, from FEBRUARY 1st to JULY 1st, 1898. Terms, $50 cash at the time of service, with usual return privileges.

Torso sired the following winners: Torsina, Joe Roger, Torello, True Love II., Tortosa, Una Que Amo, Torsion, Torsolene, Myrtle H., Tortenson, Sister Ella, Solution, Hearso, Torsida, Sculptor, Torchdance, The Shrew, Vana, Odds On, Cosina, Caricia, Restless, Our Johnny, Sweet Liberty, Tesa, Finanza (dead) and Merry Lass (dead).

During his two years of turf career, Torso won nearly $45,000. His full sister, Aurelia, was one of the best mares of her day, winning $20,385, and her first foal was last season's capital two-year-old performer, Aurelian. Their dam, imp. Santa Lucia, also threw the winners, Tasso and Aureole. She is a daughter of the triple event winner, Lord Lyon, and through him obtains the potent blood of Paradigm, who produced Achievement, and two of whose granddaughters are the dams of Ladas and Glare, two of the best two-year-olds in England in 1892.

Algerine, the sire of Torso, was a superior race horse, winner of the Belmont Stakes, etc., and is by Abd-el-Kader, out of Nina, by Boston. Abd-el-Kader (a full brother to the good four-miler, Abd-el-Koree), although badly hiped, was a fine race horse at all distances. He won a dash of four miles at Saratoga, in 1869, in 7:31 1/4, a very creditable performance. Nina, the dam of Algerine, was one of the best race mares of her day. She was a winner at all distances, from one to four-mile heats, in good time, and produced Planet, one of the best horses in the country at all distances, and a successful sire, also Echequer, Ninette, Eclipse, etc.

Torso was a brilliant two-year-old. He won the first of the Double Events from a field of nine and also the second Double Event with a five-pound penalty, making his weight 123 pounds. In the Surf Stakes he beat Cayuga, St. James and four others, and in the Flatbush he defeated Reclaire, Onaway, Burlington and three others.

At three years of age he won the Lorillard Stakes, 1 1/2 miles in 2:36 1/4, from Tournament, Banquet, Badisha, Devotee, St. John, Burlington and Protection, a high-class field; was second to Burlington for the Brooklyn Derby, in front of Tournament, Padisha, Lisimony, Kenwood and four others; was second for the Equinoctial Stakes to Reclaire, beating Tournament and others, and carrying nine pounds more than he won, and was third for the Omnibus Stakes, 1 1/2 miles, carrying a penalty of five pounds.

TERMS $50 THE SEASON.

(WITH USUAL RETURN PRIVILEGES.)

LIMITED TO TWENTY-FIVE MARES.

ALTAMONT shares championship honors with Baron Wilkes, a horse of great opportunities, in having six 2:10 performers to his credit. He has taken a leading position among the foremost trotting sires of the country under such conditions that phenomenal ability alone has saved him from oblivion. A very small proportion of his progeny has been trained, and an extremely small number of these by competent men. As a partial illustration of his meagre advantages, it may be stated that he has never produced a colt from a pacing-bred mare or from one with a fast record. Nor until 1897 had he ever been crossed with a descendant of George Wilkes, Electioneer, Dictator, Sidney or Dexter Prince. Oregon and Washington have produced seven 2:10 performers, and EVERY ONE of these are ALTAMONTS.

ALTAMONT is a horse of iron constitution, and at twenty-three years of age is in the full vigor of his prime, a sure foal-getter, and, except for his blindness—the result of an accident—is without blemish. He has never sired a sorrel, all of his colts having been solid colors—bays, browns or blacks.

NOTE—Bessie Rankin, by Altamont, sold November, 1897, brought the highest price obtained for a harness horse at public auction in California during the year. Address

If Monterey begets colts like himself he will prove to be the poor horse-breeder's friend, for it will cost but little to get them to a race. Monterey had only four and a half months' training prior to starting in his first race, which he won in 2:21, and won his last race in 2:13 3/4, all training and racing inside of five months.

He was injured last season in shoeing. The day before he went an easy mile in 2:11 1/4 in the presence of three thousand people. He seems all right, and I predict Monterey will soon hold the harness record. If he gets the record I expect his colts will be very valuable.

MONTEREY has a bold and square way of going, such as is now in demand for road horses. He is thoroughly game; in fact, I never drove a gamer horse; is level-headed; legs as clean as a yearling's, and has the strongest foot I ever saw on a horse. He is a chestnut, 15 3 in height, and weighs 1,200 pounds. Come and see him.

Son of Sidney, 2:19 3-4, Dam Hattie, by Com. Belmont.

MONTEREY, 2:13 3-4.

One of the Gamest Sons of Sidney and One That Will Be a 2:05 Performer This Year—Some Facts Regarding This Grand Horse.

There is no denying the fact that well-bred broodmares that have proven through their produce that they are worthy of being placed in the great table are almost invaluable. Away up in Montana, in that land of sunshine, snow and silver, Wm. H. Raymond bred a large number of mares which he purchased in Kentucky to his grandly-bred stallion Commodore Belmont, and among these was the mare Barona, by Woodford Mambrino. The result of this union was the mare known to all students of turf literature as Hattie, the dam of Montana, 2:16<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>, and Monterey, 2:13<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>, the subject of this sketch, and both of these performers are by Sidney, 2:19<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>.

Before alluding at any length to the breeding and merits of this great sire, let us glance through the tabulated pedigree of Hattie. Her sire, Commodore Belmont, was by Belmont 64 (the greatest son of Abdallah 15), out of Miss Gratz, by Commodore (the latter a son of Mambrino, out of a mare by True American, he by Volunteer, a son of Messenger, out of a mare by imp. Tom Bogus). The dam of Miss Gratz was by Whip, a son of imp. Whip, out of Speckle Back, by Celer.

Commodore Belmont never had many opportunities in the stud, yet his roll of honor has emblazoned on it the names of such trotters (he never sired a pacer) as Carrie Belle, 2:23<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Doncaster, 2:28<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Evening Star, 2:29; Geranium, 2:28<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Meteor, 2:28<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>, and Gale, 2:27<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>. His daughters have produced Gallette, 2:26<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Monterey, 2:13<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>; Montana, 2:16<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Iago, 2:11; Leap Year, 2:26<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Redalia, 2:26<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Gloster, 2:29; Ilton, 2:28<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>, and Bitter, 2:30. For speed and gameness all the trotters that trace to Commodore Belmont are famous.

Barona, the dam of Hattie, is by Woodford Mambrino, a horse that stands as high, if not higher, than any son of Mambrino Chief for the extraordinary good qualities of his progeny. His sons were great as sires. Abbottsford, Pancoast, Mambrino Russell and Princeps are only a few of the many that are keeping his memory green. His twenty-three daughters have produced some of the greatest campaigners in the country, and their work has only just commenced.

The second dam of Hattie (or, more properly speaking, the third dam of Monterey, 2:13<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>) was by another sire of famous trotters, Alexander's Norman, sire of Lula, 2:15 and Queen May, 2:20, and of the sires, Blackwood and Swigert, both of which have improved the trotting-horse interests of America. His daughters have produced such performers and sires as Norval, 2:14<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>, May King, 2:21<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>, Storm King, 2:29<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>, and nineteen other trotters. Is it any wonder, then, that Monterey is entitled to be considered a well-bred stallion? Let us look a little further. The next dam was by Grey

Eagle, the famous four-mile race horse whose fame is untarnished by the ravages of time, and the next dam was by a thoroughbred. Surely, with such a strong maternal line, he should be a race horse, but even with this the greatness of his sire is not overshadowed for Sidney, 2:19<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>, stands high to-day among the most phenomenal sires of early and extreme speed. Although his owner, G. Valensin, has passed away, and the stock farm at Pleasanton has been sold and the band of broodmares which browsed in the paddocks there are scattered to the four winds, nevertheless, every owner of a colt or filly by Sidney knows he has an animal that has a level head, splendid disposition and extreme speed, and as the years roll on and the Sidneys become rarer their value will enhance. No better evidence of this is needed than the fact that few, if any, can be purchased to-day, even as hard as times are. His list of wonderful performers keeps increasing, and his 2:20 lot is as follows: Sidmont, 2:10<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Gold Leaf, 2:11<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Adonia, 2:11<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Thistle, 2:13<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Monterey, 2:13<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>; Oddity, 2:13<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Lillian S., 2:14<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Faustina, 2:14<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Lady H., 2:15; Sidwena, 2:15<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; La Belle, 2:16; Sidwood, 2:16; Montana, 2:16<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Ramone, 2:17<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Edna R., 2:17; Thelma, 2:17; Mephisto, 2:17<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Sidmor, 2:17<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Cupid, 2:18; Sister V., 2:18<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Hummer, 2:18<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Fleet, 2:18<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>; Longworth, 2:19; Cassie, 2:20.

These performers in the 2:20 list include many record-holders, but besides these, Sidney's list contains twenty-nine others in the 2:25 and twenty more in the 2:30 list, a strange yet wonderful showing for a stallion not sixteen years old, and eclipses that of all other trotting-bred stallions of his age known. Sidney, 2:19<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>, was by the great campaigner, Santa Claus, 2:17<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>, out of Sweetness, 2:21<sup>1</sup>/<sub>2</sub>, by Volunteer, second dam Lady Merritt, a great broodmare by Edward Everett (sire of Judge Fullerton and twelve other 2:30 performers), he by Hambletonian 10; third dam by Harry Clay, record 2:29 to wagon, and sire of the dam of Electioneer. With such a well-bred sire of early and extreme speed as Sidney, 2:19<sup>3</sup>/<sub>4</sub>, and out of such a great broodmare as Hattie, Monterey is entitled to all the praise lavished upon him by everyone.

Monterey is advertised in this issue to make the season of 1898 at Alameda and the information embodied therein is so comprehensive that it is unnecessary to refer to it further. Suffice it to say that whoever breeds a mare to this horse can rely upon getting trotters and pacers that will not only race well but will fill every requirement looked for in the ideal road horse of America.

A aheim Horse Notes.

While at Santa Ana Tuesday, which has the honor of having the best mile track in the United States, if not in the world, we saw not only the home of some famous horses, two of them with reputations that are national, but the horses themselves—Klamath, Silkwood, and last, but not least Nutwood; the first owned by Gib Judd, the second by Mr. Willits, and the latter by Geo. Ford, Esq.

Silkwood has been suffering the past few months with a game leg, but his driver and lessee, Mr. Williams, is of the opinion that he will come round all right before the season of racing is on.

Silkwood is a magnificent looking animal, just such a looking one as we would select to struggle for a kingdom and bet our life on coming under the wire a winner. A powerful, a glorious looking fellow he is. He is growing in years however, and his glory is on the wane, but he don't look it to the casual observer. May his tribe increase.

The pioneer of trotters, the great Dexter, with old High Woodruff the prince of horsemen, made his best record; if we remember correctly, after he was seventeen years of age, and Fanny Fern and Goldsmith Maid were along in years before they showed up in their best form. We well remember when the Philadelphians went over to New York with the Maid to beat Dexter. She was an unknown quantity to the New Yorkers and the horsemen there backed Dexter to the last dollar and lost. Poor old High Woodruff staked everything he had on Dexter even to his house and lot. It is said at the time that the Philadelphian went home with nearly a half a million to the good. The New Yorkers, noble fellows that they were, redeemed Woodruff's home and gave it back to him. That was in the halcyon days of honest sport when the best horse went to the front. But we digress.

Klamath is undoubtedly the King of the turf to-day, of the trotting family of horses. He don't look it. He is a freak; a glorious one, however. He has few of the marks of a great trotter, except his wonderful power of chest and strong legs; but that is what he is. The re is no going behind the returns. The noble fellow has the distinction of having never gone in a race without capturing a part of the money generally first, but never last. His owner, Gibb Budd, a most pleasant, affable, unpretentious gentleman by the way, who has been with the horse ever since he turned the track, is very proud of his possession and well he may be.

Speaking of Klamath, Cash Harvey said that some person in one of the horse papers of the country wrote up a description of all the points required by the horse-maker. Klamath's measurements were sent him, and his record as a trotter, but the learned horseologist failed to have published. The moral of this is that one can't sometimes most always tell.

Among others we met in Santa Ana fond of good horses and a breeder of them, too, was George W. Ford, Esq. He, as we have already observed, is the owner of Neerut, one of the squarest, cleanest-limbed trotters we have ever seen on the track. He goes without boots or weights, and moves like a splendid piece of machinery. It was our pleasure to see a colt of his, a thing of beauty. Neerut had the misfortune while young to get severely injured in one of his limbs, but it does not seem to count against him in ease and perfect symmetry of motion. This horse will be heard from later on. In him Mr. Ford has a magnificent piece of property.

Cash Harvey, the Superintendent of the track and in a sense the life of it, has our thanks and the thanks of the Anaheim contingent who visited the Fair grounds Tuesday to see a few steppers of Orange county in motion, for courtesy shown.

The races, which were not made for records, showed some splendid material in the county, among the colts. The road horses put on the track came under the wire in less than three minutes.

In the third class John Baker's Holly, D. M. Dorman's Kalamity, Jim and G. H. Judd's Marguerite were entered. It was won in three straight heats by Holly, her owner driving; best time 2:52½. The second event was an Orange county colt race, half-mile heats, between H. W. Lawrence's Lawrence, an Alto Rex colt; E. T. Parker's Cash, a Silkwood colt, and H. Carter's Grand Nut, a Nuford get. It was handily won by Parker's Cash, the owner driving; best time for the distance, 1:13½.

It was a bright, pleasant day, and in company with C. Bruce, Major Federman, Capt. Smythe and A. C. Jennings, Esq., we enjoyed it to the full.

The Orange county track is something to feel a pride in and it is a pleasure to know that there are horsemen who do take pride in it.

At the spring meeting in May there will be races on this track worth crossing the continent to see.—Anaheim Plaindealer.

How to Popularize Light-Harness Meetings.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 7, 1898.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Knowing that you are in the line of progression, especially in the promotion of trotting-horse interests, and that you are always to the front in helping to lift the enterprise from old ruts in which it, for several years, has been floundering, I would, through the aid of your valuable paper, offer some suggestions.

The subjoined plan for heat racing, if adopted, I believe would prove to be a valuable innovation and virtually relieve the old-time popular sport of the many drawbacks and monotony with which it seems to have become lamentably handicapped. To insure a relief from this burden, to elevate the standard of trotting to a high degree, and place it on a level with the present popular running events, I would, among many other things, suggest the following:

Programme of the day's racing, with full particulars of each event.

Regularity and dispatch in all departments.

A permanent judge, fair and fearless in every respect.

A competent starter, with elevated platform inside the track.

All modern improvements, in plain view of the public.

Three moneys in each purse, divided sixty, thirty and ten per cent.

No race of more than four heats, i. e., say eight horses (A, B, C, D, E, F, G and H) start in a race of four heats, and A wins the first heat, then goes to the stable until the fourth and final heat. B, winning the second heat, likewise goes to the stable. The remaining horses then trot for the third heat, thirty minutes after which the three winners of heats trot the final and fourth heat for the purse, and the money to be divided accordingly as they finish. Thus a race is ended in four heats, and every heat becomes a race, free of any inducement to lay up a heat. On the contrary, a reward of a good rest for winning the first heat will induce the best effort of each horse to gain it, and so on to the finish. In this way, the laying up of heats would be fruitless, and consequently the public would "get a run for their money."

A Doctor.

Well known in San Francisco and whose reputation, established by many years of wonderful success in the healing of nervous chronic and private diseases, is unapproachable.

Who has devoted a life long study to his specialty and by his scientific and perfected system of treatment, has restored so many physical wrecks of young, middle-aged and old men placing them again safely upon the highway of health, bringing back to them vim, vigor, vitality and enjoyment of life.

Many who have sunk into the depths of despair from the failures which they have had would do to call and freely unburden their minds and explain, without fear or hesitation, the nature of their complaint. They will find in the Doctor the old proverb exemplified that:

"A friend in need is a friend indeed."

By receiving a thorough and searching examination, a proper diagnosis of the case, sound advice and where nature presents the possibility, a safe and speedy cure.

He cures, because his insight is far reaching, his experience vast and his study for the good of humanity increasing. Thousands of grateful patients who have applied elsewhere for relief in vain invariably couple with his name the phrase "When others fail consult Dr. Sweeney."

Write if you cannot call. No charge for advice by mail. A valuable book, "Guide to Health," free of charge. Address F. L. Sweeney, M. D., 737 Market street, San Francisco, Cal.

Long-Shot Conley.

Conley, the ebony-hued jockey, who is gaining fame and nicknames at San Francisco through the masterful way he has of landing long shots first past the post, is under contract to ride this season for Mr. W. F. Schulte, of this city. Conley, in a large measure, owes his success to the training and advice he received from Rolly Colston, Mr. Schulte's colored trainer. Conley was comparatively unknown in the racing world until last year, when he was brought into notice through riding Alleviate in all of her races. He first attracted attention, however, by the manner in which he rode and landed Mary Black a winner in last year's Debutante Stakes. Through a mistake his name was posted on the jockey board here last year as Conley, and a number of people remember him as the rider of Mary Black.

His ride in this race attracted the attention of Colston, and he got Mr. Schulte to engage the boy. For some time Conley had a hard row to hoe in getting outside mounts, but after he had put several of Mr. Schulte's horses first under the wire his services were in demand. After the season closed here Conley went to the coast, but could only get a mount now and then until he nearly gave the talent heart disease by beating favorites out a nose with old platers that did not look to have a ghost of a show.

The white riders then declared war on the colored boy, and about a month ago Colston was on the point of ordering Conley back to Louisville, as he was afraid the boy would lose his nerve and forget all that he had taken so much pains and trouble to teach him.

Conley stuck to his work, however, and now since he has beaten Tod Sloan twice in one day, and on the day that the celebrated jockey made his first appearance in America after returning from England, the colored boy is now one of the turf celebrities.—Louisville dispatch.

A Time Test.

Time is said to test all things. Truly, then, the thing that has stood a long time is well tested. For over fifty years thousands of rheumatic sufferers have been cured by Indian Vegetable Elixir. Both time and these sufferers have tested it with good result. It's a thorough cure. A dollar a bottle delivered. Address W. B. Eddy & Co., Whitehall, N. Y. Messrs. Eddy & Co. are also the owners of Quinn's Ointment which has been so extensively advertised in our columns for several years past, and what they claim you can rely upon. If you are afflicted with rheumatism, correspond with them.

THE Union Pacific Railroad Company has recently built some very fine resting stables, with box-stalls and other modern conveniences, including an outside paddock, at Ogden, Utah, for the free use of horse-owners shipping by this old and popular route, which will be highly appreciated. The "Overland Limited" leaving San Francisco daily at 6 P. M. for Chicago is now the finest and fastest train in the West composed of Pullman latest improved double drawing-room sleepers, dining cars and composite buffet smoking library cars, between Ogden and Chicago, also through tourist sleepers for the accommodation of passengers holding second-class tickets. For tickets and sleeping car accommodations call on D. W. Hitchcock, General Agent No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

CHARLEY THORPE declared Thursday that he stood ready to ride any galloper in the racing game, and Tod Sloan was joshed considerably for jumping off E. Coms. Thorpe is probably possessed of four or five times the amount of world's goods owned by "Toddy," the former's wealth being estimated at from $80,000 to $100,000 but Sloan is much younger and probably thinks more of the future than the veteran knight of the pigskin.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENT

EDITED AND CONDUCTED SOLELY BY JOSEPH CAIRN SIMPSON.

MY TRIPS WITH MR. F. J. BERRY.—Much pleased to meet Mr. Berry, of Chicago, a gentleman who has acquired international fame through his connection with the Stock Yard Exchange, and, consequently, the sale of horses for the past twenty-five years. "Sold more horses than any man in the world," and that by so large a margin that his record, on that point is likely to stand as long, and it may be longer than that of Arion, 2:10½, to "high wheels," when two years old.

His vast experience, natural acumen, aptitude to benefit by his close observation places him in the front rank of practical horsemen, at least that feature of horsemanship which covers animals that he has been so thoroughly identified with.

The owner and campaigner of fast trotters, an intimate knowledge of all classes of harness horses, from the diminutive Shetlander to the mammoth dray horse, from the two-minute pacer to the "high-actioned" coacher, from champion trotters to the kings and queens of the horse shows, not a class that he has not inspected, and when his memory brings them again before his mental vision a succession of eidolons, a longer line than the ghosts of Banquo or the spirits summoned by the Governor of Glubbdubdril to verify or disprove ancient history.

And yet with all this erudition, the vast amount of knowledge gained by so many years of close scrutiny and careful study, he was far from being "posted" on the greatest of all the tribes of horses, that which is known as thoroughbred. I use the past tense feeling that his education on this point has commenced, and though only a few letters of the alphabet have been brought to his view, there was enough in that first lesson to awaken an interest, and I am greatly mistaken in the man if he fails to pursue the study when opportunity offers. He held the same views which so many share, that thoroughbreds were practically useless outside of the race-course. Size, substance, form, disposition, nearly everything in fact, save the capacity to gallop fast, being no part of their inheritance. It may appear singular in the extreme that so many people who for years have been so intimately connected with horses should know so little about one division, and that the most noted of the equine race. Even a person in a position which apparently gives the opportunity for the closest observation, may lack the chance to obtain information, and likewise even among such a vast number of horses as passes through Mr. Berry's hands in the course of a year, (his regular business averages seven hundred a week), not a single specimen of the highest type of the thoroughbred be seen.

I am quite sure that Flambeau was a revelation to him. Racine was led out, "a nice little horse, fifteen and an inch" responded Mr. Berry. "Stand up beside him Mr. B." was my reply. When he put his hand, the palm being spread at right angles to his face—I knew that he would come very close to the mark. The same action with me gives fifteen and a half hands with exactness when care is taken to keep the perpendicular, and there were several inches above the extended digits. Racine is 16½, though like all well formed horses does not look as high as he is. When Flambeau appeared Mr. B. responded, "good size, eleven hundred." "Nearer thirteen hundred," was my reply. "Have you scales on the place? I would like to see that horse weighed, Mr. Merritt," Mr. Berry responded, and the request was complied with. Thirteen hundred and fifty-eight pounds was the report, Mr. B. having seen that the scales were balanced and moved the pea until there was a counterpoise. He took another good look and it is safe to say that when Mr. Berry guesses on the height or weight of a thoroughbred again he will come much closer to the figure. A paragraph went the rounds some time ago that a trotting-bred horse—I think a son of Onward—had a girth of eighty inches, and if any trotting-bred or thoroughbred could equal it. Several years ago I measured Flambeau and that was his girth then, though afterward Mr. Mulky told me that he had increased to eighty-four inches. At the late visit the tape had to be drawn quite tight to bring it to eighty-one inches, and as all connected with the stable said that they had known him to carry more flesh than at present Mr. Mulky's measurement was, without doubt, correct, and with that increase of girth his weight would probably reach fourteen hundred pounds or more.

"One swallow does not make a summer," according to the old adage, and Mr. Berry with his former belief of thoroughbreds lacking size may regard Flambeau as a phenomenon, but should he visit this country again a trip to Rancho del Paso will disclose quite a number of them from 16 hands to 16½ and weights from eleven hundred to over fourteen hundred pounds, and plenty others which would be classed as "big horses," big enough for any purpose save the heaviest slow draft.

It is of more than ordinary importance that Mr. Berry should have correct information on this point of horse-breeding as the position he occupies brings him prominently before the breeders of all classes of horses, and his opinion and advice highly valued by them. One of his objections to thoroughbred strains where high action is an indispensable requirement has a better basis. No trouble perhaps, in securing sufficient knee and hock action for speed at the trot, but the excessive bending of knees and hocks is rarely found. Fashions change, however, and the absurd craze which now prevails for the ungraceful and labored style is likely to be replaced by a preference for that more in accordance with the "poetry of motion."

The first excursion to Ingleside on Washington's birthday. The time well chosen to cicerone a resident of Chicago on his first visit to a California racecourse. Notwithstanding the "City on the Lake" can show so many fine racecourses, not the least apprehensions of ours suffering by comparison. But the life of racecourse or trotting track is the people assembled and it was a pleasure to call attention to the crowded grandstand, the bourse so densely packed, the esplanade a mass of people, and the balconies of the club house thronged with the beauty and fashion of the metropolis. Still more pleasant to point to grassy lawns, a profusion of flowers, at a time when the mercury might be away below zero in Chicago, the green mountains to the south, the grand old ocean, and Lake Merced a sheet of silver nestling among the verdant hills. Not a doubt of my friend appreciating all that he saw on that day at Ingleside, and the next day when we crossed the bay to Alameda, and from there to the Oakland track, he was also well pleased. He saw and admired Altamont and the other horses at Mr. Nelson's stables, and Mr. Nelson giving us a son of Silver Bow to drive he had a look at the track and boulevard, and readily agreed with me that for training ground for trotters and pacers it was unrivalled. We drove to Mr. Williams stables and he was greatly taken with Monterey and the big Silver Bow mare when he saw her move on the boulevard.

Palo Alto unquestionably came up to his expectations, and that this visit to California will be repeated at an early day is pretty well assured. His engagement in Oregon compelled him to depart on the day after the Palo Alto trip and he said that it appeared almost incredible how much he had accomplished in the way of sight-seeing in five days. Mr. Layng had escorted him to the Cliff House, Park and the other notable places in the vicinity of San Francisco, and wound up with a night (that is, the fore part of the night) in Chinatown.

So far as I can judge, the only disagreeable features of the five days were my disquisitions on the value of thoroughbred blood in harness horses, but I am firm in the belief that when his former opinion is learned to be, in a measure, at least, at variance with facts, he will take more kindly to the doctrine.

OBSTINATE CONSERVATISM.—Were it not that such large numbers of the people, connected with harness-racing, are so obstinate in their conservatism it would be difficult to understand the opposition to licensing drivers. No matter what the changes from the old practices proposed there is sure to be violent opposition, and when arguments are lacking clamor is depended upon to signify disapproval. It may be that there have been "solid reasons" advanced why the new rule is denounced, and that I have been unfortunate enough to have passed them without observation.

But if, after so many attacks in the different horse papers in the country, I have seen, without noticing a single sound plea to sustain the charges, it will be somewhat surprising that they should have been unnoticed. And when from every point of view I cannot see a chance for valid objections, when after due consideration I cannot discover a shadow of excuse for opposing the passage of such a law, the conclusion is inevitable that it is a wise addition to the code of the National Trotting Association.

Thoroughly tried and approved by the jockey clubs of America, and those of nearly every country where racing is properly managed that should be sufficient reason for awarding the trial to a cognate branch of the sport.

Not a new thing, however, in harness-racing as in New Zealand the practice of licensing drivers and riders, and also trainers has been in vogue for some time, and judging from the number of licenses issued, must be popular in that country.

In the Weekly Press, Dec. 1, 1897, under the heading of "Licenses Granted," by South Island Trotting Association, it is stated, "The following additional licenses have been granted up to Nov. 23d." "Riders and Drivers," over a hundred names in the appended list and with nearly as many names of licensed trainers. I am inclined to the belief that many of the methods of that far-away country of managing and handling running and trotting races can be copied to advantage. The starting gate and numbered saddle cloths have certainly proved to be "useful innovations," and as I have heretofore stated I have a great deal of confidence that their plan of handicapping harness horses can be incorporated advantageously into our programmes. When licensing drivers was first agitated I was in favor of restricting it to professional drivers, but the difficulty then arose—what should constitute a professional? And that would not be a very obtuse question, the simple definition, one who drives horses for pay, sufficient to cover the point.

GRATIFYING INTELLIGENCE. "There was no desire to modify your rule against laying-up heats. An honest endeavor on the tracks to enforce it would result in a higher standard of racing." These two short sentences embodied in a letter received from Major P. P. Johnston some time ago were wonderfully gratifying to me, though it might seem that the labor expended on the many articles I wrote ament the question before the meeting of The Congress was thrown away. Something akin to building big forts and mammoth battleships when the war cloud was no larger than the wing of a humming-bird.

Far better pleased than if there had been a severe contest to gain the victory, as it is an endorsement that gives the rule more force, inasmuch as it may be termed unanimous approval by the highest tribunal in the country.

"An honest endeavor on the tracks to enforce it would result in a higher standard of racing."

There is no half-heartedness in these words, no attempt to qualify the meaning, not a mere opinion, an authoritative statement from one who is eminently fitted to render a true judgment, an imperative answer returned by one who has been in the best position to arrive at the conclusion expressed.

A higher standard of racing. What objection can be offered to securing that much desired result. The dogma that it is the duty of drivers to lay up heats was completely overthrown when the law to prevent and punish such transgressions was allowed to remain without an effort to displace it from the book of statutes.

With the honest endeavor to enforce the law as its place in the code implies, in fact commands, there is no one with any pretensions to any knowledge of racing, that will have the hardihood to advise that breaches of the law be condoned.

And should the "turf journals" of the country, especially those which give prominence to the sports of the track, unite in demanding that there shall be honest endeavors to enforce that law as well as the others in the code, there is an absolute certainty that few, indeed, of the main associations which will allow it to be violated in the future as it has been in the past. Then a higher-standard of racing and with that a largely increased attendance, whereas non-enforcements lowers the grade, therefore it would appear that there should be no break in the ranks of the advocates of fair play.

THE CHAMPION ON HIS JOURNEY.—Adbell, who holds the championship of the world for trotting yearlings, started on his Eastern trip on Thursday's Overland, in company with thirty-five others of Palo Alto breeding. A grand array of youngsters, certainly of the same high standard of former consignments, but the one that is best entitled to the foremost place is the son of Advertiser and Beautiful Bells. I saw him when he trotted in 2:23 at San Jose in 1894, and felt so confident that he could beat twenty that one who thought to the contrary could have secured a wager to the full extent of my ability to post all I had the right side of the controversy.

That he has done nothing in the three seasons that have elapsed since he won the garland has been a puzzle to people at home and abroad, at least to all that have not been closely connected with Palo Alto affairs. With my limited knowledge it would seem presumptuous to even hazard a conjecture and to prophesy that he would still do something commensurate with his yearling performance only governed by a sort of infatuation. This much I do know that when a two-year-old Adbell had grown out of shape. "One end at a time" as the old-time horse folk called it, being disproportionately high at the withers, and now that his form will bear close scrutiny and stand the examination, and that I saw him moving squarely and with plenty of speed at Palo Alto late last fall, there are some reasons for the optimistical belief. The only thing in the way that I can see is that, but his temper may have been a little soured and that he would not "behave himself," or refuse to do what he could last season. That is merely conjecture and there may be nothing to interfere with a successful campaign the coming season. Admitting it, however, and the chances are that a change of location and careful handling will overcome the propensity. That by long odds the fastest of the Beautiful Bells family at the age, though Bell Bird is not far behind 2:26½, should be doomed to rest on that one great effort, when there is no apparent cause for inability to repeat, or it will be better to say, make record now in keeping with maturity and fully developed powers, it will be somewhat of an anomaly should he fail. I shall be greatly disappointed if the future does not show that Adbell will yet secure a very high niche in the equine Temple of Fame.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

LOBOS, winner of the third race Thursday, is undoubtedly the best two-year-old seen thus far this season in California. He ran the four furlongs in 0:47½, and could have made it faster had he been pushed. He is the first of the get of imp. Golden Garter to race, and we predict right now that this English horse will make one of the very best sires in America. Certainly no horse in this country has in his veins the blood of so many classic stake winners as has Golden Garter, while Temblor, dam of Lobos, is from one of the most distinguished racing families in America, the one that Reporter, Tallulah, Miss Ford and other celebrities came from. H. Mason, Lobos' owner, gave $2,500 for him. Mr. M— say the colt does not like the Ingleside track and has never shown any speed over it either in trials or in public. We congratulate his owner on the possession of such a rare good one, and it shows that he is a good judge of embryo cracker-jacks.

The Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern line, with its daily service of through Pullman and Tourist Sleeping Cars, to all Eastern points, and all meals served "a la carte" in dining-car, offers "comforts in travel" nowhere reached in a higher degree of perfection. Passengers leaving San Francisco on the 6 P. M. train arrive in Chicago in 3½ days, and avoid the necessity of changing cars en route. For tickets and sleeping car reservations call on or address R. Miller & Sibley, of Franklin, Pa., owners of St. Bel, brother of late Bell Boy, write, "We have used Quinn's Ointment with great success and believe it fulfills all claimed for it. We cheerfully recommend it to our friends." For Curbs, Splints, Sprains or Bunches, it has no equal.

Price $1.50.

Sold by all druggists or sent by mail.

QUINN'S OINTMENT FOR HORSES

stands at the head of all veterinary remedies. Such troubles as Sprains, Curbs, Windpuffs, Splints, Bunches have no terrors for a horse if the master keeps and applies Quinn's Ointment. All well-known horsemen speak of it in the highest terms:

THE SULKY.

A. B. SPRECKELS has an Altivo colt out of Gracie S., 2:22, that he expects great things from.

PRESIDENT DANIEL CAMPAU says the Detroit Driving Club will not give a running meeting this year.

MONBELLS, by Monaco, 2:19½, out of Beautiful Bells, 2:29, is the best colt ever the grand old broodmare had.

DON'T forget the big speed sale to take place under the auspices of J. N. Nelson at the Alameda race track, April 20th.

ED LAFFERTY, the popular horseman, has been engaged by the Pierce Bros. to take charge of the Santa Rosa Stock Farm.

GRACIE S., 2:22, by Speculation, dam of Dione, 2:14, is in foal to Cupid, 2:18, and will be bred to Monaco, 2:19½, son of Electioneer.

A. B. SPRECKELS great trotting mare Hulda 2:08½, has a beautiful bay colt by Cupid 2:18. She will be bred to Dexter Prince, Monday.

HAMBLETONIAN WILKES has been shipped from the Green Meadow Stock Farm to Pleasanton, where he will make the season of 1898.

WALDSTEIN is getting some very fine mares at Humboldt. He was bred to the dam of Arthur W., 2:15, and also to the dam of Humboldt Maid, 2:13½.

ANDY McDOWELL will have the wonderful speedy mare Lena N., 2:10½, to handle this year. Lena won considerable money at the Montana races last week.

AN addition to the list of Electwood 2:29½, by Electioneer, comes to hand in Electropoise, who took a trotting record of 2:26 at Fond du Lac, Wis., last September.

LANARAT, 2:25½, is by Good Gift (Electioneer's Good Gift, now owned in Russia), son of Electioneer and out of Lou Whipple, 2:26½, by Whipple's Hambletonian.

THE nine year-old horse Golden Gateway, by Guy Wilkes—Sable Hayward, has been purchased from Mr. H. Fleischman, by the Austrian government, for breeding purposes.

TWO of Kentucky's most successful breeders and trotters James Miller and Timothy Anglin, are lying at death's door. The latter has been confined to his bed for the past two months.

WILLIAM SIMPSON has added Keepsake, by Pancoat, the dam of Tommy Britton 2:11½, to the Empire City Stud, having bought her of "Uncle Tommy" Britton, of Lexington, Ky. She will be bred to Hummer.

THERE is a Wildcat colt at the Aptos Stock Farm that is pronounced the finest individual ever seen on this farm. This youngster is out of Laureola, by Benefit, second dam Laura C., 2:29½, by Electioneer, etc. It has size, style and speed.

E. WILLETS & SON have recently sold to E. H. Harriman the two-year-old filly Polly Taylor, by Island Wilkes, out of Jet, by Piedmont; second dam by Gen. Benton. This is a very promising filly and will be placed in the hands of W. J. Andrews.

F. W. KELLEY, secretary of the P. C. T. H. B. Association arrived from the East Saturday, and is busy getting every thing ready for a meeting of the directors of this organization at which time business pertaining to the coming meeting will be transacted.

MANITOBA at last boasts of a 2:10 performer. George Laurence, of that province, has purchased, in Oregon, the pacing stallion Pathmont, 2:09½, brother of the trotter, Altao, 2:09½, by Altamont, dam Sally M., by Pathfinder. He will be used as a sire only.

PROBABLY the first animal foaled combining the blood of two stallions with trotting records below 2:10 is the two-year-old filly Dawn of Day, by Stamboul 2:07½, dam Jessica McCurdy, by Palo Alto 2:08½, bred and owned by R. H. McCurdy, of Morristown, N. J.

ORO WILKES, 2:11, goes to Canada. He sold for $4,700 at auction. All of his progeny brought good prices the same day. In May next Mr. Corbett will dispose of the balance of his stock, including many grandly-bred youngsters by Oro Wilkes. This sale will take place in this city.

KENTUCKIANS have noticed the ill effects of poor shoeing on horses and a number of the most prominent horsemen in the State are drafting a bill which they will ask the State Legislature to pass, requiring all horseshoers in the State to undergo an examination as to competency and to take out license before being allowed to work at their trade.

J. L. MCCARTY, who, with F. B. Walker, divides honors as the leading starting judge in the grand circuit in the East, is in California. Mr. McCarty has had a life-long experience with trotters and pacers, has a magnificent voice, and knows neither friends nor foes when officiating. He would be a most valuable man for the California circuit this season if he could be induced to remain.

THERE have been many inquiries as to how Star Pointer was shod last year. Here is Mr. Murphy's statement: "When Star Pointer paced his mile in 1:59½ at Readville, August 28, 1897, he was shod as follows: The front shoes were bar shoes and weighed 7½ ounces, with a toe clip and toe and heel calks on. The hind shoes were plain shoes weighing 5 ounces, with toe and heel calks on."

SAMUEL GAMBLE will have a carload of choice broodmares and stallions ready for shipment from the East to California soon. It is rumored he is making these purchases to stock a farm for a young millionaire, who is an ardent admirer of the trotting horse, Mr. Lester. Mr. Gamble is one of the best judges of a horse in America and without doubt his selections will be first-class in every respect.

ONE of the most important good road bills ever brought before the New York Legislature has been introduced by Senator Burns in the Senate, which calls for an expenditure of $12,000,000. The time is spread for road improvements over a period of seventeen years. Fifty per cent. of the expense is to be borne by the State, thirty-five per cent. by the owners of the land benefited. This bill should be acceptable to the farmers.

THE fashionably-bred trotting stallion Alta Vista, by Guy Wilkes, 2:15½, out of Amayrillis, by Director, 2:17, recently purchased at the Lexington sale for $975, will, it is said, be gelded, docked and converted into a park horse by his new owner, John Cudahy, the Chicago millionaire. Sam Gamble, who is collecting stock for a new breeding farm in California, offered Cudahy a big advance on the price paid by him for Alta Vista, but the Chicago man refused to sell.

THE State Board of Agriculture held a meeting last Saturday night to discuss questions relating to the State Fair this year, but no definite conclusion was arrived at. It was intended to elect a President, but the election was postponed till the 15th instant. Directors Cox, Matthews and Terry were appointed a committee to consult with the Chamber of Commerce and Manufacturers Association's Exhibit Committees, with reference to the exhibit at the Pavilion for 1898.

J. O. DICKINSON, Trappe, Md., brother to the late Major Dickinson, New York, has a promising four-year-old horse Watchman, bred at Pleasanton farm, California, by Direct, 2:05½—Dexter Princess, 2:24½. He has several colts by him out of well-bred mares. Two in particular he thinks will do. One is out of Alice Oates, 2:32½, and the other out of Ella B. 2:16, which was Major Dickinson's favorite driving mare, and is to be kept in luxury throughout her life, according to the terms of his will.

THE bay mare, Virginia Maid, dam of Mosul, 2:09½, and Nutwith, 2:29½, bred and formerly owned by William Ellison, of this city, but now the property of Louis Becker, of Baltimore, will be bred to Stamboul, 2:07½, this season. Her best son, Mosul, was sired by Sultan, and by such a show horse as Stamboul, son of Sultan. Mr. Becker is satisfied that the produce will be above the average. Virginia Maid, individually, is of the highest type, a rich bay in color, long, low and roomy. I recall few handsomer trotting-bred broodmares.

AT the Newark Farm, Newark, Del., a string of horses is now in training under charge of H. R. Tyson, and consists of Red Silk, 2:10, by Baron Wilkes; India Silk, 2:10½, by Prodigal; King Albert, 2:16½, by King Nutwood; Jacksonian, 2:13½, by Autograph; Arona, by Arion; Jane Pepper, by Norval; Miss Electroid, by Electroid; Jennie Rose, by Bay Rose, 2:04½; Lady Albert, sister to King Albert; Seaweed, by Nutwood, 2:18½; chestnut filly by Nutwood; Enone, by Potential; Avignon, by Advertiser; Alberta, by King Albert, and Cascade, by Alcantara.

TRAINER JOHN WEST says that Directly will go in the stud early in the season, which will preclude his racing. Just how long Frank Reed will keep the animal off the track is undecided. If Jo He goes right he will undoubtedly land much of the money in the 2:09 stakes, for he will be ready early, and West thinks that his mark will be lowered some. In the fall, Sherman Clay will contend in the stakes of the south, and should bring home "a piece of the money." Giles Noyes will be raced when West has nothing to drive in that animal's particular class.

AN authority has the following in the Farmers' Home Journal, and is a supposed cure for the malady known as heaves, viz: "Put the horse on grain food, allow him no hay or grass or any feed that will bulk in the stomach. Keep him free from dust and in a quiet place. Every morning pull his tongue out and with a paddle put on the back of the tongue a free application of pure pine tar. In a few days he will cough up great quantities of effete matter from the lungs, and a strict continuance of treatment will make the horse cease to heave." This is a simple remedy and worthy of trial.

THERE are two distinct trotting families known as Black Hawk. The founder of one was Vermont Black Hawk, also known as Hill's Black Hawk, a black horse foaled in April, 1833, and got by Sherman Morgan. His dam was also represented by those who knew her as a half-bred mare brought to the United States from the provinces. The founder of the other Black Hawk trotting family was a black horse with four white legs and a star in the forehead, foaled in 1837 and got by Andrew Jackson, a son of Young Bashaw. The latter was by the imported thoroughbred Barb, called Grand Bashaw.

THE coming meeting at Overland Park promises to be the most successful as well as the most interesting one ever held in the Rocky Mountain region. There will be a large delegation of horsemen with their horses from New Orleans. News comes from all parts of the State of Colorado that horses are being prepared for the races to be held in June, and Colorado has as good blooded horses as any state in the Union. Letters have been received from San Francisco stating that fifty horses from there will contend for the prizes here, including the stables belonging to Billy Randall, with Oster Joe and six others, Johnny Campbell with Senator Bland and nine others, Charles Sanders with six, Billy Stansfield with George Miller, and four others.

AT a meeting of the newly organized Denver Driving Club a constitution and by-laws was adopted, and the association was given a name, and officers to control the association were elected. The meeting was an enthusiastic one, and nearly everyone of the fifty members of the club were present. The officers of the club for the ensuing year are: J. Fred Roberts, president; Frank S. Smart, treasurer; Joseph Osner, vice-president; C. L. Mills, secretary, and a board of nine directors. A committee, composed of Joseph Osner, Dr. E. W. Bovett and C. N. Roberts, was appointed to take charge of the first matinee race given by the association, which will be held March 30th. The new club is now on a strong basis and will without a doubt be one of the strongest and most beneficial horsemen's organizations that Denver has ever had. Similar organizations in the East have become very popular and flourished for years, but up to the present year little interest has been taken by Denver horsemen in such an organization. The initiation fee will be $2 and annual dues $5.—Denver Field and Farm.

A. VAN SCHELLE, a representative of the government of Belgium, has arrived in the United States to investigate the character and breeding of the trotting horse. He was at Lexington during the recent sale of harness horses, interviewing prominent Kentucky turfmen. Secretary Horace W. Wilson, of the Kentucky Breeders' Association, says that Van Schelle was much pleased with the trotters he saw in the blue grass region, but found them to be of a lighter type than he had expected. The Belgian horseman is reported to have asserted that ringers from this country are so common on the other side that American horses may be barred from races altogether if some other means cannot be found to suppress the masqueraders.

THE will of Andrew M. Moore, the Philadelphia horseman and distiller, was filed for probate. It is estimated that the estate is worth $5,000,000. Practically all of it is left in trust for the benefit of his three sons, Albert H., George M. and Henry G., for life. It is estimated that A. H. Moore spent nearly $1,000,000 a few years ago in buying the sires and dams of noted trotters and in breeding and training operations. His father stepped in and took charge of the farm about two years ago, announcing that he was the real owner and that the son possessed no authority to sell any of the horses or contract obligations binding the farm. Director is at the head of the stud. He was purchased from Monroe Salisbury in 1893 for a reported price of $75,000.

A. A. AUSTIN was very ill in the hospital at Lexington and his friends were glad to see him recovered sufficiently to attend the Splan-Newgass sale in this city the past week. He purchased Rosa Sprague, the dam of McKinney, 2:11½, at private sale after the mare had been knocked down to A. D. Hughes, Fullerton, Neb., at $385, acting for C. F. Sayles, Pawtucket, R. I. While at Lexington he made two private purchases for J. Malcolm Forbes, Boston, securing for the Ponkapog Farm the yearling bay filly Ideal, by Baron Rogers, 2:09½—Florence D., 2:29½, the dam of the two-year-old Prince Otto, 2:23½, by Jay Gould, and the five-year-old bay mare, Baroness Zedalia, by Baron Wilkes—Lena S., by Electioneer; grandam Restless, by Kentucky Prince; third dam, Lady Rydyk, by Hambletonian 10.

IN view of the active efforts of Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture to stimulate the export trade of horses in the United States, and the success which has attended such efforts thus early, breeders of Canada are bestirring themselves in a like direction. At the annual meeting of the Canadian Horse Breeders Association at Toronto, it was resolved: "That in view of the fact that foreign horse trade of the Dominion for the last two years has shown a falling off, whereas that of the United States has increased, and that the government of that country is making strenuous attempts to further the improvement, we do petition the government Ottawa to appoint a commission of inquiry as to the best steps to be taken to develop the trade in horses with foreign countries, and to encourage the breeding of the same."

"AN interesting incident happened when I was in Honolulu," said Senator Morgan. "You know the natives are magnificent swimmers. They take to the water like ducks. One day a cargo of mules was being carried on a barge to a steamer lying off shore, when one of the mules jumped overboard and made for the shore. When he landed on the beach he looked around, and, seeing all the other mules still being carried toward the steamer, he went into the surf again and started in the direction of the barge. After he had gone some distance a great wave came along and turned him over. When he righted himself he was absolutely wild, and blindly headed out for mid ocean. The men on the barge watched him for a while, and then the captain asked if it was proposed to let the animal drown. Quick as a flash one of the Kanakas sprang overboard, swam at a tangent to intercept the mule, and, reaching the animal, climbed upon his back, and by clever tactics directed the animal to the steamer, riding him like a centaur in the water all the way."—Washington Post.

OUR Sacramento correspondent writes: Zombro 2:11, is being jogged by his owner Mr. Beckers, and is looking fine. Stam B., 2:11½, and Klickitat Maid 2:19½, and a green one is being jogged along by Wm. Eng. Thos. Holmes has Diamond 2:21½ and his half brother a very promising green one. Nelson McDaniel is handling a stallion and colt by Mr. Burton and they are doing well. Chauncey Cain has just arrived with a good looking lot of trotters from George H. Fox's farm near Clements. They are by Silver Bow 2:16. Mr. Cain will take time with these now and beat records with them hereafter. Mr. Eddy has two good youngsters. Vet Tryon has a string of ten very likely ones from Rancho del Paso and will be "right in it" on the California circuit this year. Highty Hogboom, one of the best drivers in the State is here and has six very promising Waldsteins. Humboldt Maid is looking fine and her proud owner says nothing will suit her like free-for-all this year. There is a filly by Waldstein; here that is a coker, she is only eleven months old and can show a 2:30 clip. Mr. Hogboom is as well pleased with her as he is with Eya Waldstein, a green three-year-old pacer that sailed down the homestretch Monday a quarter in thirty-four seconds.

A WRITER in the American Horse Breeder from Goshen, N. Y. says a number of ex-Senator McCarty's trotters arrived here last week in care of Mr. John Dickerson, which trainer Mr. McCarty has been lucky enough to secure, and he will add another spoke in the wheel of speed to the trotters that are reported to be at Goshen the coming season. The first one I saw Break O'Day, a black mare standing 15 2 hands, with a record of 2:11½, as a four-year-old, and she with foal by Axtell, 2:12. This mare shows fine breeding, and if she does not produce speed I shall be greatly disappointed. Her legs are as clean as a deer's. Flare Up, bay mare, standing 15 2, with a mark of 2:22 as a four-year-old, sired by Charles Derby, is all horse from top to toe. She is out of a dam with four in the list, including Javelin, 2:08½, whose record as a four-year-old was 2:22. The next is a four-year-old brown gelding by Axtell, which stands about 15 3, and is of the kind horsemen always like to look over, no matter how great a hurry they may be in. This fellow has been kept in the shade, and has no record. His dam is Amy, by Electioneer. I next looked at Fred S. Moody, a chestnut, standing 15 3, whose two-year-old record of 2:18 staggered the public, and his four-year-old record is 2:14. He is by Guy Wilkes, out of a mare by Montrose. In the next box I found the six-year-old stallion Fred Kohl, 2:12½, and he certainly is in splendid form. They will be on the circuit this year.

THE SADDLE.

THE Lord Chief Justice of England, Lord Russell, has a few horses in training at James Waugh's establishment, Newmarket.

MOSBRAE, who ran a good third yesterday, is the first of the get of imp. Watercross to start in America. He's a very good-looking fellow.

ED A. TIFTON, of Montana, will make quite a lengthy stay in San Francisco this time. He will be here in the interest of the big Montana race meeting.

H. T. GRIFFIN has shipped Martha II. and Allie Belle to Memphis. Capt. Piersal, Snowdown, Marquise and Attainment of the Blakely stable went on the same car.

ED A. TIFTON has bought of Dan O'Brien the bay mare Greenwich (9), by Himyar, dam Linda Green by imp. Australian for $1,500. She was bought for Marcus Daly.

IF in need of new saddles, horse clothing or jockey suits, call on John A. McKerron, 203 Mason street. He has a supply of the very best always on hand, while his prices are exceedingly low.

THE recent rains, while a source of inconvenience to race track patrons and a source of loss to the track owners, means dollars to the horse owners in the way of cheaper hay. Cheap hay means higher prices for horses.

WHEN Dan Honig was offered Rockefeller for $7 some kind friend told him his namesake had an income of $7,000,000, and Dan, being near-sighted, overlooked the six ciphers and said anything of that name must be sure money. So the trade was made.

THE beautiful English horse Green, by Childeric (son of Scottish Chief and Gertrude, by Saunterer) and Amber, by Nuneham, has been secured by Prince Poniatowski for the season of 1898. Green is bred on sire lines, and should be very successful at the stud.

OVER 190 thoroughbreds are at the Brentwood Stock Farm, Antioch. Barney Schreiber says it is the finest place for pasture in the United States. There has not been a sick horse on the place, and the way cripples recover from their lameness there is surprising.

MR. JOSEPH REDMON has bought his speedy horse Byron McClelland for the reported price of $5,000, and is negotiating for the purchase of the three-year-old colt, Dr. Black. It is rumored that he was acting in behalf of Marcus Daly, but the rumor hardly seems well based.

ACCORDING to Wm. Hayward, Louis Stuart's sister to Damsel, which was one of the most highly tried yearlings at Sheephead Bay last fall, has developed into about the grandest looking two-year-old he ever saw. Mr. Stuart bought the filly for $100. He recently refused $3,000 for her.

THE following have been declared from the Montgomery Handicap, which will be run the opening day of the spring Memphis meeting: Bing Binger, Seabrooke, Urania, Dacien, Milwaukee, St. Roque, Requitul, Basquil, Johnny Bohan, Brandywine, Lieber Karl, Sea Robber, Sligo II and Berclair.

THE once high-class race mare, Wandering Nun, foaled a dead yearling by imp. Brutus the other day at Frank Burke's La Siesta farm, in San Mateo county. A living foal by Brutus from such a mare ought to be worth a good deal of money, as the Nun is a half-sister to Crescendo and Bellucoso.

ARTHUR HEINRICH, once a star horse-pilot, but who foolishly refused to keep in the middle of the road, was ruled off the turf for life and became a rider on an outlaw track, attended the races yesterday. He had just arrived from St. Louis, his home, and tips the scale at about 140 lbs. at the present writing.

THE opinion is rapidly gaining ground that the starters should either stop using the gate or line 'em up against it and send 'em away flat-footed. In Australia or New Zealand, where it was first used, they wouldn't think of sending a field away on the fly. Several horses "took a run" at the gate Wednesday.

THE grand race horse and superb individual, Jack Richelieu, by imp. Great Tom—Envenom, by Enquirer, will make the season at Sacramento, and his service fee has been placed very low—$25. Tom Boyle has this splendid horse, one of best-bred ones in the country, (the winner of 40 races), and can be reached at 2422 F street, Sacramento, Cal.

CHARLIE PATTERSON, owner of Ornament, says: "I will match Ornament at a mile and a quarter against The Friar at any time during the Memphis spring meeting, for any purse the Memphis Jockey Club may choose to hang up, and I will bet $5,000 besides that Ornament will win. This is open not only to The Friar, but to any horse in the world, weight for age."

GERALDINE, A. B. Spreckels' famous mare that has won upward of sixty races, is at Menlo Stock Farm, and last week foaled a colt by Ravelston, son of Flambeau and Shannon Rose. Ravelston was one of the most promising colts in California, but went wrong. Geraldine will be bred to St. Carlo, as will also be fifteen other choice mares from Mr. Spreckels' Napa farm.

PEEP O'DAY in Charles Orr's stable, is considered as one of the most improved horses now in training at Brighton. The air at Brighton has done him a world of good. He has always been a delicate feeder, but now takes all he is allowed with an apparent relish. He has filled out and seems to have taken on about thirty pounds of good flesh since his appearance at Morris Park last season.

BYRON MCCLELLAND was not purchased for Mr. Marcus Daly but for a wealthy resident of Montana whose name is not divulged for the present. Byron McClelland, Serrano and John Havlin passed through Chicago yesterday in charge of Trainer J. K. Redmon, en route for Montana, where they will be raced next summer. Redmon will handle them and will also open a public training stable.

THE now famous "Toddy" Sloan did not make his appearance in the saddle at Oakland Tuesday. Tod says he will rest awhile. He may possibly ride a race or two at Ingleside, but is not sure. He has given second claim on his services this season to Messrs. Featherstone and Bromley, who have a good racing stable which includes First Mate, Howard S. Typhoon, Nick and other well-known horses.

IT was thought that with a string of forty horses Bromley & Co., would have the largest stable in training this year, but there is still a larger string. James E. Seagram, the well-known Canadian turfman, has fifty horses in training, which is probably the largest number that has ever been in one stable on this side of the Atlantic.—Daily Racing Form. Burns & Waterhouse had 55 in training at one time.

THE Denver meeting bids fair to be a great one. A special rate will probably be given California owners by the railroads, and among the owners now racing here that will undoubtedly stop over at the Colorado metropolis are: B. C. Holly, with Montallade, Fortunate and others; W. L. Stanfield, Johnny Campbell, with Senator Bland and the remainder of his string; Ollie Johnson, W. D. Randall and Farrar & Tuberville.

VICTORIS, winner of the first race Monday, was sold for $125 at the Reed (Oneonta Farm) yearling sale. She is a dead game one, and finished like a Firenzi. Toluca, who wound up third, was considered one of the prizes of the Kerr sale, and she's a sweet filly. Her sire is Nomad, her dam Sweet, by Hanover. Master Buck and Buena Ventura had the foot of the party, but did not stay by their colors as they should.

R. E. (GILL) CURRY, the popular reinsman, has abandoned the trotters and has the following horses at Lexington track: Hazel Greed, br g, 4, by Julien, dam Witch Hazel; De Capo blk c, by Julien—Orlie; Virginia R., ch f, 3, by St. Charles—Glenarigue; Viola H., b f, 4, by The Bard—Victress; unnamed b f, 2, by St. Leonards—Countess; unnamed b f, 2 by Guarantee—Lucerne; Pet Scott, b c, 2, by Logic—Elizabeth, G.

THE following names have been registered by J. Naglee Burke for his two-year-olds: Festoso, ch c, by Wildidle—Vedette; Fiero, br c, by Wildidle—Irish Lass; Fermo, ch c, by Wildidle—Sallie G; Forzato, ch c, by Wildidle—Andante; Focoso, ch c, by Flambeau—imp. Janet N; Feroce, ch f, by Wildidle—Flame; Fuga, ch f, by Wildidle—imp. Berna. Focoso is a full brother to Crescendo, who was the crack California two-year-old of his year.

GEORGE HANKINS, we understand, is at Seattle, Wash., negotiating for a lease on the track there, and also the one at Tacoma. If successful in leasing these courses he will give meetings there; the racing begins at Anaconda, Mont., the dates not, of course, conflicting with those announced by Manager Ed Tipton. Mr. Hankins is an old hand at the business of managing race meetings and should make a success of it in these thriving cities of the Northwest.

IT now appears that Judge Denny will not be returned to Messrs. McNaughton & Muir without a lawsuit. William Pinkerton declares he holds a clear bill of sale of the black horse and sees no reason why he should let the firm have him back. McNaughton says there was an understanding that when the horse had won the $5,000 advanced and interest thereon he should revert back to the firm of which he is a member. A suit will almost surely be instituted for the recovery of the horse within a few days.

WM. M. WALLACE's stable of horses was shipped from Lexington to Montgomery Park, Memphis, Tenn., Thursday, February 24th. The horses in the string were: Panmure, b c, 4, by Tenny—Queer Girl; Remp, ch c, 4, by Hayden Edwards—Onvrlace; Banished, b c, 3, by Longstreet—Exile; High Jinks, b c, 3, by Himyar—Alta Blue; Hampden, b c, 3, by Hanover—Antivola; Wheaton, b c, 3, by Potomac—Viola; Boltocrat, b c, 3, by Major Domo—Entricia; Bay colt, 2, by Favor—Mrs. Chubbs; chestnut colt, 2, by King Eric—Elemi; chestnut filly, 2, by Onondaga—Bonnie Harold.

AT least one shrewd horseman has discovered that Bermuda is an ideal place to develop thoroughbreds during the winter. This is J. W. M. Skinner, who has a stable of yearlings there which he purchased in this country. They include two youngsters of much promise—Wilgosskin, b c, by G. W. Johnson—Fanny Eslin, and Wibbisk, blk or gr f, by Fordham—Helen Broeck. The former is a beauty and grandly bred. His dam is by Sir Modred—La Scala, and therefore a half-sister to Sir Walter. Helen Broeck, the dam of Wibbisk, is by Ten Broeck, and the filly is a cousin in blood to Traverser, the noted three-year-old now racing with much success at San Francisco.—New York Sun.

ARTHUR HEINRICH, the jockey who gained much notoriety in turf circles about three years ago through his connection with the Little Pete scandal, which resulted in his being ruled off the turf, together with Jockeys Chorn and Chevalier, is paying California a visit. Heinrich was recently ruled off the outlawed Singler track, a battery having been found in his possession at the conclusion of a race. On Monday the disgraced rider was notified that his presence was undesirable on the grounds. He again put in an appearance Tuesday, and when told by President Thos. H. Williams Jr. to keep away from the track, attempted to assault the latter. He was taken from the grounds and placed under arrest.

WM. MCGUIGAN, who is at Little Rock, says that it will take a good colt to beat Bannockburn in the Tennessee Derby, and the son of Hayden Edwards—Bettie Blaise looks at though his owner and trainer is justified in making the remark; he looks fit and ready to race right now; he is a long striding and graceful colt, who has wintered remarkably well and has developed into a magnificent specimen of a race horse. McGuigan makes no bones of what he thinks of the colt, and says he will be the champion of Western three-year-olds. The Arkansas turfman will race thirteen horses this season. Boanerges has broadened and let down and looks to be strong and rugged. The Wadsworth—Glenadalis colt will prove another sensational performer for "Umbrella Bill," who also has a full sister to Ben Eder.

SAYS a turf writer in regard to the new racing bill in the Kentucky Legislature: "It would not be surprising if the final developments would show that Newport alone were the sufferer. It is a well-known fact that the ownership of the Louisville, Latonia and Oakley tracks is synonymous, Newport being owned by entirely different and commonly reported antagonistic interests. A few days ago one of the Cincinnati papers intimated that in the event of Senator Bronston's bill becoming a law, the Latonia people would declare their meeting off this year, and transfer the running of their stake events to Oakley, by which they would suffer nothing, as they virtually control that track also. In this way Oakley would absorb the racing programme for this year at Latonia.

S. E. LARRABEE has just returned from Rancho del Paso, where he has a few thoroughbreds. He reports the horses there all in fine condition, and that about 200 thoroughbred yearlings are being prepared for the annual sale. Mr. Mackey is paying more attention to the breeding of trotters this year than usual, and quite a number of thoroughbred mares will be bred to Bay Bird. In speaking of Bay Bird, Mr. Larrabee says: "He is a great color breeder, all his colts being bays, except one—a black—though his own sire was a roan. His colts are also uniform in conformation as well as color, and he is looked upon as being a very prepotent sire. Mr. Larrabee's mare Mollie L. (dam of Ben Holladay), by Longfellow, foaled of a bay colt, by imp Order while he was there.—North Pacific Rural Spirit.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY HANLON of The Jockey Club states that he believes the new issue of the Stud Book, the first to be issued since the copyright has been purchased from Col. S. D. Bruce, will be ready by June. Racing men and breeders are anxiously awaiting it, for it is some years since the last volume was issued, and with the multiplicity of stallions now in service it is difficult indeed to keep track of blood lines. T. B. Sidebotham, the public printer of Brooklyn, who will issue the book, has promised to furnish proof-sheets early in May, and then Registrar James E. Wheeler will put on a special staff of readers to revise them. The work is exceptionally difficult this year and the volume is extraordinarily large. It will comprise more than 1,500 pages.—[N. Y. Commercial Advertiser. Breeders should lose no time in forwarding all data concerning their studs which should be in the Stud Book, such as reports of foals, transfers or ownership, new mares entering the stud, etc.

THERE will be twenty stakes offered at Butte and Anaconda this season, as follows, entries to which close April 16th: The Montana Derby, $2,500, one mile and a quarter; The Daly Stakes, $2,000, one mile and an eighth; The Young Miss Stakes, $1,000, four furlongs; The Montana Hotel Stakes, $1,000, four and a half furlongs; The Last Chance Stakes, $1,000, five furlongs; The Bitter Root Stakes, $1,000, four furlongs; The Silver Bow Stakes, $1,000, four and one-half furlongs; The Northwestern Handicap, $1,000, five and one-half furlongs. The above are to be run at Butte. The Deer Lodge Stakes, $1,000, five furlongs; The Ogden Stakes, $1,000, five and one-half furlongs; The Yellowstone Handicap, $1,000, six furlongs; The Ravalli Selling Stakes, $1,000, one mile; The Silver City Handicap, $1,500, one mile and a quarter; The Copper City Handicap, $1,500, one mile and a quarter; The Butte Selling Stakes, $1,000, seven furlongs; The West Side Handicap, $1,000, one and one-eighth miles; The Anaconda Handicap, $1,000, one mile; The Smeltermen's Handicap, $1,000, five and one-half furlongs; The Hot Times Handicap, $1,000, four and one-half furlongs; The Inter-Mountain Stakes, $1,000, five furlongs. The circuit opens July 2d and ends September 10th. Secretary Ed Tipton will be here shortly in the interests of the associations.

A CHICAGO dispatch says that several interested in the Chicago Racing Association, including John Brenock, John and Ed Burke, have applied for the appointment of a receiver for Hawthorne track. Pence & Carpenter are handling the case for Brenock et al. They say it will take considerable time to file all the evidence in their possession. Last night Mr. Corrigan was seen by a reporter and said it was the same old fight between Burke and himself. Some time last summer the Hawthorne Association commenced suit against Brenock, and Burke heard of the suit and got in ahead by having the affairs of the association put in a receiver's hands. Mr. Corrigan says that the association paid a note of $51,700 on Brenock & Co. at their request, and held Brenock's stock as security, but the Secretary allowed Mr. Brenock to take his stock away. When the aid of the law was invoked last year the books were turned over to the court, and have been in its possession ever since "So far as embezzling a single dollar," went on Mr. Corrigan, "I wish to say that the books were experted by an accountant selected by the directors and he found that the association was indebted to me; about $5,000, and that Brenock and Burke owed the association $72,000. The association has been in debt to me ever since, while the others have not even paid the interest on the mortgages."

PARTIES recently arrived from Louisville tell me there is no chance whatever for the passage of the racing bill in the Kentucky Legislature. As for Illinois, all hope is gone regarding the racing measure for that State. Well, non-success does not matter much in Kentucky, and while it does matter in Illinois, it is still safe to assume there will be plenty of racing around Chicago during the season. I am informed the Harlem stakes will soon be announced, and I think Secretary Nathanson will be down here inside of ten days. He will go to Hot Springs to have a conference with Manager John Condon, who has been at that point during the winter. You can rest assured the Harlem stakes will be on a pretentious scale, for last year's meeting there was the greatest held in the West. The indications are there will be great racing this season all along the Western line. The Farmer-Hendrie syndicate meetings at Detroit, Windsor, Fort Erie and Toronto promise big things, for their stake entry lists for each point are unusually numerous. One of the early meetings of the season will be at Newport, and there all the stalls are already engaged. Memphis—well, there is hardly any use referring to the Bluff City, for while there have been failures elsewhere, no such word as fail has ever found a lodgement in connection with racing at Memphis, and all the indications point to a greater success than ever before. The clashing and crowding is likely to tell against Lexington, but at that, as the purses will not be large, and with no stakes, they may be able to make both ends meet.—"Broad Church," in N. O. cor. # THE WEEKLY BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN

JUDSON K. MOORE, PROPRIETOR.

The Turf and Sporting Authority of the Pacific Coast.

— OFFICE —

No. 313 BUSH ST., SAN FRANCISCO
P. O. BOX 2300.

TERMS—One Year, $3; Six Months, $1.75; Three Months, $1.

STRICTLY IN ADVANCE.

Money should be sent by postal order, draft or by registered letter addressed to JUDSON K. MOORE, 313 Bush St., San Francisco, Cal. Communications must be accompanied by the writers' name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith.

San Francisco, Saturday, March 12, 1898.

Notice to the Public.

With this issue, my connection with the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN as proprietor ceases, having sold the property to Mr. Judson K. Moore, who was at one time associated with me in the ownership of the paper. In the transfer of the property, I assume all liabilities contracted prior to March 8, 1898, while he becomes possessed of all outstanding accounts due the paper.

The pleasant relations which I have enjoyed while on the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, as editor and proprietor, for the past seven years, I hope to continue in the future as its editorial manager. In severing my connection as owner, I desire to extend my heartfelt thanks to the public for its generous patronage in the past and bespeak for my successor its continuance in the future.

Very respectfully, WM. G. LAYNG.

Referring to the above, I would say that in assuming the sole ownership of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN (with which I was at one time connected) it shall be my aim to maintain its past high standard, and by the addition of some new features, make it second to no paper of its class west of Chicago. To do this, requires a heavy additional outlay, but I believe that a State that ranks first in the excellence of its high-class stock farms, first in the point of its rod and gun sports, and third in point of the magnitude of its agricultural products, will warrant that expenditure. The paper is to be enlarged and otherwise improved. In making these changes nothing will be left undone to advance the interests of the horsemen, the breeders, the farmers, and the devotees of the rod, gun and dog. My purpose shall be to make the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN a welcome visitor in every household in the country. In order to cover the field contemplated a special corps of artists and writers has been engaged. These new features will appear in the issue of March 26th.

Trusting that the contemplated changes will meet with a degree of encouragement commensurate with the outlay, I am,

Very respectfully,

JUDSON K. MOORE.

THERE will be a scarcity of feed for stock in many portions of Southern California this year, and as the keen cattlemen of Nevada have passed a law quarantining California cattle, good pasture lands in the northern portion of this State will net their owners handsome returns this year.

"THE best hotel in America is the Palace." This is the opinion of all who have ever sojourned there. The rooms in the Grand Hotel are large and well ventilated and that is the reason why it is known as the horseman's headquarters.

SPACE has been so valuable on the steamships going to the gold mines of Alaska that shipowners have refused to devote any of it for the use of horses, consequently but very few have been shipped to the land of glaciers.

Do not overlook the Colusa race meeting. The greatest interest is being taken in this meeting by all horse-owners and their friends in Northern California.

NUMEROUS inquiries are being made of J. M. Nelson regarding his big speed sale, which is to take place April 20th, at the Alameda driving track.

Some Lessons Learned.

The recent sales in the East verify the statements heretofore made in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN that the light-harness industry is improving. Consignors to these sales say they had no idea trotters and pacers had so many friends, and as these friends seem to come from almost all parts of the world and they have purchased fine horses to take back with them, there is no doubt the presence of these American trotters will create a demand for more of the same kind, and the prices for such will advance at least fifty per cent. in the next twelve months.

The carriage and wagon manufacturers' journals, as well as those able periodicals devoted to the harness trade, claim that business in their particular lines has increased wonderfully since last November, and the extra demand for their manufactures is not confined to foreign countries, but in the United States in sections where good articles were heretofore seldom seen. Through out the Southern States there is a sentiment growing regarding good horses, which has been created through the efforts of the bicycle riders and the farmers for good roads. With good roads comes the desire to drive fast horses over them, and the presence of many fast teams makes bystanders feel as though everyone who can afford it should have fine turnouts.

The dispersal sales of so many large stock farms offer chances for seekers after the best to get horses for a few hundreds of dollars, which cost their former owners thousands. Then, again, there are opportunities at these sales for comparing these trotters not found any where else, for consignments that come from different sections of the country are stabled side by side.

Here, in California, there have been no importations of trotting stock for the past four years. Our breeders, like those in all other States, launched into the business of breeding light-harness horses without stopping to think that others equally enthusiastic throughout the East and West were also embarking in the business. The demand to get the best prompted the wealthiest and most influential men in the United States to vie with each other in the salesrings, consequently, prices approached the incredible. What was the result? While the coterie of wealthy enthusiasts did not increase in size, trotters and pacers increased in numbers. The quality improved, but the work of emasculation was deferred too long. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN was the first turf journal to advise owners to geld all the stallions that were imperfect, and in vigorous terms we predicted what the result of over-production would be. This was in 1893 when trotters were selling for thousands of dollars, and to the average farmer it looked then as if no business offered greater remunerative returns to them.

The work of weeding out the poor individuals has continued unceasingly; and, as it took seven years to bring horse values to their highest point, it took just three years to drop them lower than anyone ever dreamed they would go. When they reached that level it was found that breeding operations were almost at a standstill; for electricity and bicycles had done more to check them than anything else. And not only have they driven many horses out of the market, but owners as well. The men of wealth, who had invested so heavily, decreased their holdings in trotting stock, the number of "small" breeders were augmented, and the cream of the large farms found its way to the paddocks and small farms owned by intelligent and enthusiastic horsemen, who were close students of the breeding problem. All that they did not buy found their way to the peddlers, agons or were relegated to other hard work.

Breeders who followed our advice: "breed and weed," are satisfied that time has proven it to be good, for all well-bred, well-formed, sound and stylish horses led into the salesring during the past two months, brought better prices than they would if offered at any sale for over three years. It is only a question of a very short time until every farmer will consider his horses property that will increase in value every month. New buyers, new roads, and a contraction in horse breeding is as certain to increase the value of good horses, as it is, that the sun shines.

No Fear of Competition.

"Judging from the quality of trotters sent to Europe within the past few years, it would not be strange if within the next decade an international race could be arranged; and it is by no means a sure thing that America would win. Europe has bought many of our very best animals, and as the supply of world-beaters in this country is not over-plentiful, the owners from across the sea might reasonably be expected to put up a good fight for supremacy. International contests among turfmen, yachtmen, and, in fact, all forms of sports, have been immensely popular, and now there seems to be some chance for an international trotting race that would not be entirely one-sided. To be sure, the contestants would in all probability be American-bred, but that would only add to the interest in the affair. There is no doubt that the Europeans have selected the very cream of the market; in fact, they have given the market a stimulus that has not been felt for many years. Not only have fast and game trotters been sent abroad for racing purposes, but stallions and mares of great merit have been shipped, and from these may come a horse that would have a chance to take back a trophy or badge of merit that would be as eagerly coveted by Americans as the Queen's Cup is by English yachtmen. It behooves American breeders to strive to keep in the lead and produce a type of horse that can alone be raised in the United States. This cannot be done, however, by allowing Europeans to outbid us at the public sales when the best is offered."

The above article embodies many truths, but as long as we have a nation of progressive, thoughtful lovers of the American trotting horse there need be no fear that our cousins across the sea will out-breed or out-race the horses in this country. They may breed larger and heavier-looking horses, but it is doubtful if they will breed two-minute trotters for many years to come.

The Sword and the Cross.

The Biblical prophecy of "wars and rumors of war" seems to be on the eve of fulfillment. From all quarters of the globe there comes a spirit of unrest. In some cases it is still confined to military rumblings, in others it has assumed a state of unmistakable strife. The cause of all this discontent is greed. The weak nations look upon the strong with envy, the strong upon the weak as fit subjects of prey. After 1900 years of what is admitted to be most perfect civilization the world ever saw, we find ourselves resorting to the methods of the Dark Ages in the settlement of disputes.

The sword is still the arbiter of the world. The thing that was supposed to be forever sheathed under the benign influence of Christianity is again brought forth to bury itself in human flesh. Unless all immediate signs fail, the thing that has fertilized the soil of all nations with human blood will again be flashing in the sunlight of two hemispheres. With England trying to protect its ill-gotten territory against the piratical invasions of France, in Africa; Germany helping itself to China abroad and trying to repress socialism at home; Russia getting ready to slice up Turkey in Europe proper, and binding the two hemispheres by a band of steel, over which its millions can be moved at will; the United States preparing to do battle with Spain and incidentally Japan, it may be said that the spirit of Caesar is about to supplant that of Christ.

From this terrible fate there seems no plausible means of escape. It is the legitimate means of unchecked greed. As long as boys quarrel over a division of marbles and men wrangle over the possession of property, nations will continue to prey upon each other. It is money, not morality, that dominates the world. This is just as true to-day, as it was in the palmy days of the plundering Roman empire.

This is not a very flattering endorsement of modern civilization, but it means better prices for American breadstuffs, and for this reason we hail it with delight. We would much rather see peace, but if the world has actually reached that paradoxical position where plenty can only come out of want, and life out of death, we say let them fight.

ENTRIES for the dash races of the P. C. T. H. B. Association meeting will close June 1st. The programme will soon be ready for publication.

THE attention of our readers is called to the retirement sale of Thos. Smith of Vallejo. He is offering valuable trotters for very low prices.

WE would be pleased to have our readers send us lists of horses in training at the various race tracks in California.

F. W. COVEY, with the Palo Alto horses to be sold in New York City, left California on Thursday last.

For Sale.

TWINKLE TWINK is a good silly now, but Gouin, her rider, might have done better work over the stove in the stable than in the saddle. By the way, the winner of the race, Morcorito, belongs to Mrs. Nettie Harrison, whose horses have been signally successful.

Memphis a Sort of Thoroughbred Mecca.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., February 26 (Special.)—The horses which are known to be the most probable starters in the Montgomery Handicap are all doing finely. Ornament, Boanerges, Brandywine, Salvable, Linda, Ulysses, Performance, Harry Duke, Paul Kauvar and most likely Meadowthorpe and Sligo, of Schorr's stable, are being specially prepared for the opening stake at Montgomery park. Dr. Walmsley may also be a starter, and there are other possibilities, but these are known to be pointed for this event. With the exception of Boanerges at Little Rock, Salvable at Louisville and Performance at Mobile, the candidates are all at the track, and could not be in better condition. Patterson will ship his entire stable, and Schorr's Eastern division will be shipped direct to New York at the close of this meeting, April 30.

Wm. McGuigan, who is at Little Rock, says that it will take a good colt to beat Bannockburn in the Tennessee Derby, and the son of Hayden Edwards—Bettie Blaise looks as though his owner and trainer is justified in making the remark. He looks fit and ready to race right now. He is a long striding, graceful colt, who has wintered remarkably well and has developed into a magnificent specimen of a race horse. McGuigan makes no bones of what he thinks of the colt, and says he will be the champion of Western three year-olds. The Arkansas turfman will race thirteen horses this season. Boanerges has broadened and let down and looks to be strong and rugged. The Wadsworth-Glendalia colt will prove another sensational performer for "Umbrella Bill," who also has a full sister to Ben Eder.

The arrival of A. M. Orpen's horses from Toronto, Ont., swells the list to over 400 at Montgomery park. Brandywine will be a starter in the Montgomery Handicap. Orpen has a stable of eighteen. The two-year-old division are as follows: Ruth Black, Iroquois -Fradewind, a full sister to Gotham; Bridal Tour, Longstreet-Honeymoon; Laurentain, Salvatore-imp. Lady Cardigan; Girnington, Luke Blackburn-Jessica; Buenos Arayan, Clarendon-Blue Belle; Inspector Stephane, Inspector S. Theodore; Annihilator, Clarendon-Destruction; Simcoe, Longstreet-Tattoo.

J. W. Schorr and Son have brought the New Orleans division to the local track. Presbyterian is being "prepped" for the Crescent City Derby and will be shipped there to run in that event. Bangle will arrive here Monday from the Avondale Farm. Trainer Marklein says the colt has recovered from his injury, which was slight, and he will be sent right along.

The Down-Town Pool-rooms Must Go.

The "Breeder and Sportsman" is pleased to note that the report circulated yesterday to the effect that the California Jockey Club had agreed to furnish information to the downtown pool-rooms proved to be without foundation. So far as it was in the power of the association to prevent it, there was not a word sent out in regard to scratches, riders or results.

Instead of sending out the information, President Thomas H. Williams, Jr. gave strict orders that no one suspected of being in sympathy with the town-town pool-rooms be allowed to leave the grounds until after the races were over. In addition to this precaution, the scratches and riders did not appear upon the combination board until a few minutes before each race, so that it was impossible for the dives to make use of it, before the race was over. Nothing but direct Eastern business was allowed to leave the track, so it may be said that so far as the Oakland track is concerned the pool-rooms are dead.

For this the California Jockey Club deserves no end of praise. The dives which have become a stench in the nostrils of the decent element of San Francisco may continue to keep their doors open for the purpose of robbing the unsophisticated, but they will not do so by virtue of any favors shown them by the race track managers.

The gentlemen who are at the head of these associations have no designs upon the dollar that comes from the sale of manhood or the sale of womanhood; that is the exclusive tribute of the alley pool-room. The leeches who have fastened themselves upon the business of racing, and who hold forth in the dark alleys of the city, have no competition for this class of trade except such as is offered by the opium joint. If these deadfalls are permitted to exist as a menace to the morals of the youth, it will be due to the apathy of police court juries, and not to the endorsement of the race track associations. The "Breeder and Sportsman" feels that the two jockey clubs have done their share in the matter of suppressing these dives. The rest remains with the public and the police.

Some Lively Racing at Riverside.

There was some brisk racing at the grounds of the polo club at Riverside in celebration of Washington's birthday. The sport drew a good attendance and the track was in splendid shape. Following is a summary of the events:

First Race—One-half mile first class—Entries, G. L. Waring's Red Jacket, G. Reed's Monte Cristo, F. Fox's Lady Peach and R. L. Bettner's Lady Betty. Lady Peach did not start. Red Jacket on the pole got a good three or four lengths the best of the start, but was overhauled by Lady Betty and at the turn just beyond the quarter she was lapped on him.

Here Red Jacket ran very wide and carried Lady Betty right to the edge of the track, forcing her down the bank, which is some three feet high and off the track.

Red Jacket then came on and finished first, then Monte Cristo, then Lady Betty, she having been ridden back onto the track.

The judges, Messrs. Butcher, Hay, Alvord and Hewittson disqualified Red Jacket for the foul and awarded the race to Monte Cristo.

Mr. Bettner offered to run Lady Betty against Red Jacket at any time during the afternoon, but Mr. Waring would not agree.

Had it not been for the foul, in spite of the bad start, from appearances Lady Betty would have won handily.

Second Race—One-half mile, second class—Entries, C. E. Maud's Nancy Lee, A. Alvord's Jack Pot, G. L. Waring's Wonder and Santa Clara. Won by Wonder, Santa Clara second.

Third Race—One mile, third class—Starters, L. Schwarz's Saracen, M. E. Flower's Royal, Gilbert Allen's Inconnue, H. C. Maud's Polo Gim, H. Thompson's Dolly Varden. Inconnue set the pace and was passed on the far turn second time around by Saracen, who in turn was passed by Royal, very well ridden by Mr. Flower, who came on and won handily.

Fourth Race—Quarter mile first class—Starters, G. L. Waring's Red Jacket, F. Fox's Lady Peach, W. L. Pedley's Jubilee Queen and R. L. Bettner's Lady Betty.

Lady Betty off last, ran through the others in the stretch and won easily, beautifully ridden by Mr. Norton, with Lady Peach second.

This race showed conclusively that Lady Betty had been forced off the track by Red Jacket in the opening event, as in spite of several false starts on the same turn, she never showed the slightest disposition to leave the track.

The last event of the day was the quarter mile second class, with two starters, C. E. Maud's Nancy Lee and G. L. Waring's Santa Clara; won by the latter.

The general opinion of those in attendance was that Lady Betty was the best pony that has ever raced in Southern California. She is not only very fast, but can carry weight and go a distance.

Mr. Norton sustained his reputation as a crack gentleman jockey, and Mr. Flower, whose victory was very popular, showed surprisingly good form.

San Bernardino Races.

The race meet at the San Bernardino track was the best which has been attempted in this city in many years. In fact, many of those who attended maintained that it was the best racing programme which had ever been brought off in San Bernardino.

To begin with the attendance was excellent. It had come to be taken for a certainty that a race meeting could not be held here that would bring out enough people to pay expenses, but there was a big crowd yesterday. Indeed, a representative of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, who chanced to be in town, said the crowd was as large as would be expected on the northern circuits, when big purses were hung up.

And the races were without a slip or a jar. This was largely due to the men who had been placed in the judges' stand by the managers. The judges were Chas. Sears, T. A. Carter and E. J. Gilbert, and this was at once a guarantee that everything was "on the square." E. J. Gilbert officiated as starter in the mile races, while Frank Beam held the flag for the start in the short distances, and the horses were always sent away well bunched, and without any long waits at the post or between events.

There were no sensational feature in the racing, but interest centered in the three-minute pace and in the pole race.

Near the close of the day a Riverside man made a bluff that for $20 he would send his horse a faster quarter of a mile, trotting, than anything else on the track. J. H. Kelly promptly called him, and put Cleon out for the race. For the first 300 yards it looked as if the visitor would get all the money, but Joe Kelly simply outdrove him, and raked in the $20. The summaries are as follows:

One half Mile Trotting Race—Best two in three for three-year-olds.
Ferret, A. W. Simpson, driver.....2 1 2

The Dam of Klamath.

Mr. W. J. Harris of Spokane, Wash., writing to Jay Beach, Alameda, Cal., under date of March 1st, 1898, said:

"We have concluded to breed Lady Ophir to Altamont this season. I have always thought I made a mistake by taking her away from him when I did, as I got three of the best colts you ever saw by him, King Altamont, Arlone and Le Roi.

Arlone I sold for $1,000 last year. King Altamont and Le Roi I have now at Lewiston. Frank Enos is doing my training for me. Last season I sent King up to the Montana circuit, and though he was at no time in condition, the horse won $50 in second money and came home with a mark of 2:29½. They used hobbles on him last year and this year we do not. Frank Enos writes that the colt does not need hobbles and is one of the finest gaited horses that he ever sat behind. Let me know when is the best time to ship the mare, also if you have any mares going down from Portland or any where from up here, as it will come cheaper to ship them altogether. Howard Peel and T. C. Griffith of this city may have some to send down. I will see them in the next few days and find out.

I see by the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN that the old horse is still in good health and vigor.

Trusting that you and your family are in good health,

I remain yours respectfully, W. J. HARRIS.

Mr. Harris is an officer and large stockholder in the Le Roi Mining Co. which is one of the greatest mining properties on the American continent. He resides in Spokane, Wash. and is the owner of Lady Ophir, dam of Klamath 2:07½ and finds time to take an active interest in matters pertaining to the light harness horse.

[Special to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN].

Our Memphis Letter.

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 28, 1898.

Of the 675 stalls at Montgomery Park, over 450 of them are occupied, and that, too, seven weeks in advance of the meeting, an unprecedented record in the history of racing in this city; and the quality is in keeping with the numbers. This is shown by a glance at the names of the owners who are here: C. E. Patterson, T. P. Hayes, J. W. Schorr & Son, E. S. Gardner & Son, W. H. Laudermann, W. L. & R. K. Lewis, Senator J. S. O'Brien, J. C. Cahn, A. Cahn, W. W. Dardin, T. J. McHale, W. M. Wallace, E. F. Simms, Geo. C. Bennett, C. Creveling, T. Hurns, Stanton & Tucker, H. Stover, C. L. Applegate, Sam Oppenheimer, J. B. Gray, William Hayes, Timmons & Marks, Thomas E. Barrett, A. M. Orpen, V. D. Bond and portions of other stables are now at the park.

Other owners that have applied for accommodations are: William McGuigan, E. C. Headley, with six belonging to E. E. Corrigan and several of his own; W. D. Sippy and others from Little Rock, P. Dunne and E. F. McLean from Louisville and A. G. Blakely, Timmons & Marks (California Division), L. Ezell, J. M. Murphy, and possibly others will come from the Pacific Coast; John Brennock from Chicago and S. S. Brown from Mobile, Ala. Nashville will send a delegation headed by John C. Ferriss Jr., and it is a question as to how many will want stabling from there, while from New Orleans will come J. J. McCafferty, P. Tomlinson & Co., W. T. Woodward, T. A. McGee, C. DeWitt, W. A. Porter, H. Riddle, J. H. McAvoy & Co., R. Rome, W. C. Fessenden and numbers have applied for room who have no stake entries. Secretary Macfarlan is in a quandary as to where to put them all.

The warm springlike days bring out the horses in big numbers, and they are very forward in their work. McGuigan also is at Little Rock, Ark., says the colt that beats Bannockburn in the Tennessee Derby will win, and the son of Hayden Edwards—Bettie Blaise looks as if he might justify "Umbrella Bill's" remark. George Walker, who trains for J. W. Schorr & Son replies that Lieber Karl will say Quo Vadis (whither goest thou) to Bannockburn, when he gallops by him in the stretch for Tennessee's blue ribbon, ($5,000) and "Bob" Tucker part owner and trainer of Isabe, says that both of those worthies had better be keyed right to the minute (not the hour) when the Derby is decided or his colt will make a show of them, Isabe is a greatly improved colt, and has wintered well, his first start will be in the Crescent City Derby where his formidable opponent will be Schorr's Presbyterian.

Tennessee Derby tips are also going the rounds on Laudemans Goodrich, Bennetts, Etholin, Rieff's Jackanapes, Simms' Sacket, McLean's Gallivant, P. Dunn's Swango, and A. Cahn's Bequeath (full brother to Aquinas) and Libation. Col. M. Lewis will likely be the presiding judge, and Kit Chinn starter.

The meeting begins April 9th and continues nineteen days.

TRAVELER.

It Never Fails to Cure.

SINKIN, Mo., Nov. 10, 1897.

The Caustic Balsam you sent me is the best liniment I ever saw. It is all that you claim for it. I have tried it on horses, and my family have used it, and it never fails to cure. I am doing all I can for it, but people are afraid of it.

EUGENE STEERS.

No occasion to be afraid, as it is absolutely a safe and reliable remedy for any one to use.—L. W. Co.

The Great Buyer.

NEW YORK, Aug. 20, 1895.

The Speed Sustaining Elixir is the most beneficial compound I ever saw. I have seen it win many races this season.

E. DE CERNEA.

DR. J. W. MERROW, of Akron, Ohio, has sent Ed Lafferty, 2:16, brother to the great California race horse and sire Diablo, 2:09½, to W. L. Rice, at Canal Dover, O., to be trained.

San Jose Bench Show.

The following communication concerning matters relative to the San Jose dog show has been submitted by Mr. C. R. Harker, and will be of certain interest to intending exhibitors and fanciers:

EDITOR BREEZER AND SPORTSMAN:—Dear Sir: If the demand for premium lists is any indication, the dog show at San Jose March 30, 31, April 1 and 2, will be away beyond our most sanguine expectations. Although the list has been out but a few days, there has already been twenty-three entries made, the first edition of 1000 of the premium lists has already been exhausted, the continued demand requiring another edition, which will be forwarded promptly to those not receiving it, upon application to the secretary. It is well to remember that the entries close March 21st at 9 P. M. Be careful not to get left. Twenty-five handsome cups, trophies and medals have been offered as specials. The total number of specials donated foot up to 130. The Committee wish it to be understood that specials offered in classes that do not fill will be distributed to classes that do fill, the desire being to give each exhibitor all the value possible. A number of specials came in too late for the premium list, among them a handsome gold medal offered by Mr. W. DeB. Lopez of Pleasanton for the best greyhound. Mr. H. H. Carlton of San Francisco offers the Oaks Cocker Kennels Medal for the best California-bred Cocker. The St. Bernard Club of California offers two medals.

The secretary will be pleased to hear from anyone desiring information in regard to the show.

Yours respectfully,

CHAS. R. HARKER,
Secretary.

St. Bernard Club.

A meeting of the St. Bernard Club was held on last Monday evening, many members being in attendance. The club will offer two fine gold medals, to be awarded at the San Jose Show, for the best California-bred St. Bernard dog and bitch respectively.

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

It is rumored that certain prominent members of a well-known specialty club are on the qui vive for the return of Mr. F. C. Beasley from England, who is expected to arrive with some high-class mastiffs.

We acknowledge, with thanks, the receipt from Mrs. Alfred Roucouvier, of a very handsome carbonette panel photo of the Great Dane Challenge Rex R. The photo is by Bushnell and shows the many excellent points of this well-known dog in a truly striking manner.

DR. H. CLAY GLOVER, EAST ALBANY, N. Y.

Dear Sir—My fox terrier Patti was taken with distemper in its very worst form after the Troy show. After having tried a number of remedies without benefit I purchased a bottle of your Distemper Cure. After giving it three days my dog was able to walk, and one bottle cured her. I publicly pronounce it a wonderful remedy.

ROSWELL A. DANDARAW, B. & A. R. R. Office.

Olympic Gun Club Shoot.

The opening of the trap season at the Ingleside grounds last Sunday by the Olympic Gun Club brought out not only a good attendance of club members, but also representatives from the Lincoln, Golden Gate, Empire, Garden City and Stockton Gun Clubs. The average shooting during the day was of a high order, the weather conditions were first-class. Clarence Nauman and Arthur Webb were the top-notchers of the day, although Messrs. Haight, Golcher, Bekeart, Grant Klevesahl and others led them a good pace.

The programme was an open-to-all blue-rock tournament.

The events and scores were as follows:

In this event the programme provided for high guns to win the four moneys. Haight by breaking 20 out of 22 tied McRae straight. They divided the first and second moneys amounting to $20.30. Golcher and Sears were alone on a score of nineteen and they took third and fourth moneys, amounting to $9.70.

The final event of the programme was at ten singles, expert rules; entrance $1. This is a new game to local trap shooters. It is shot with one man up at a time and he is required to empty the five traps before leaving the score. The traps are set at known angles, but the shooter does not know the order in which they are sprung. The scores in this event were as follows:

A Webb.....8	Klevesahl.....7
O Feudner.....7	P McRae.....7
C Nauman.....7	"Heidelberg".....6
Lion.....7	McCutcheon.....8
C F Grant.....7	J Karney.....1
C A Haight.....7

Webb's score of 8 out of 10 gave him first money, $5.75. The seven men in the seven hole shot off for second money, each contributing 25 cents to swell the purse. Nauman piled up a score of 10 straight and took 60 per cent. of the purse. Haight finished alone in the nine hole and pocketed the remaining 40 per cent. The other scores were: O. Feudner 6, Lion 6, Grant 7, Klevesahl 8, McRae 7.

Santa Barbara Exhibit.

The first annual exhibit of the Santa Barbara County Poultry and Pet-Stock Association opened with a large and fashionable audience in Armory Hall Wednesday evening under the most auspicious circumstances and will continue day and night, Thursday, Friday and to-day of the present week. Dogs, ostensibly of every breed have been entered without regard to pedigree or registration, to be judged solely upon their merits, while rabbits, cats, chickens, ducks, guineas, turkeys, pigeons, parrots, macaw parrots and one lone raven "of the days of yore" make up the combination so far.

The judges are: S. Taylor of Pasadena, C. H. Summer of Los Angeles and H. T. Payne San Francisco.

Reliance Gun Club Shoot.

The opening shoot for the season of '98 of the Reliance Gun Club was held at the club range on Alameda Point last Sunday. There were five matches, one of ten birds, three of twenty and one of fifteen. The feature of the day's sport was the shooting of Gross and Sands. The former finished the day with a record of forty-eight straight kills. Sands, with eighty-five chances, finished with eighty birds to his credit. The complete score was as follows:

Events at	10	20	20	20	15

Golden Gate Gun Club.

The Golden Gate Gun Club held its first monthly shoot of the year at Pacific Tournament Association grounds at Alameda Point Sunday. A fair representation of the club's membership attended and participated in the medal shoot. The weather was good and the scores satisfactory for the first shoot of the season. The score was as follows:

Twenty five bird shoot—Brown 18, Jones 7, Hunter 1, Firebug 3, Fichnor 8, Michelsen 7, Meussdorffer 3, Smith 12, Williams 2, Phillips 3, Wollam 16, Popp 2, Lewis 6, Cook 2, Johns 9.

The first, second and third monthly medals were won by Brown, Wollam and Smith, with scores of 18, 16 and 12, respectively. The medal shoot was concluded at 12:30 and the remainder of the day was devoted to practice shooting.

South End Gun Club.

The opening shoot for the season of this popular organization will be held to-morrow and an attractive programme is offered to trap-shooters. The boys have made all arrangements for the comfort and convenience of members and guests. It is anticipated that a very pleasant and successful day at the traps will be guaranteed. The San Mateo cars pass the grounds.

Improvements in the L. C. Smith Guns

The following circular letter is from the Hunter Arms Co and will no doubt be of great interest to all lovers of the gun.

"Our motto, 'We lead, others follow,' is again to be brought prominently before the public. After seriously considering the demands of the shooter, we have concluded to make the following changes in the L. C. Smith guns for 1898:

"Our famous Crown Steel barrels will now be put on our No. 2, $80.00 list gun regularly, with an option on the Damascus if preferred. After years of use on our No. 3 guns, we can cheerfully say that our Crown Steel barrels are a decided success in every way. In addition to this very important change, we now offer an entirely new design in engraving on this grade; it is neat and in keeping with a gun of this description. Our policy is always to improve our product whenever and where we can, hence instead of reducing our price on the No. 2 gun, we have greatly improved its quality and offer our patrons a vastly superior gun at former price.

In regard to our No. 3 gun, $100 list, we come to you with something entirely new in gun barrels called Nitro Steel. For months and months we have been testing these barrels to fully demonstrate to ourselves their qualities, and the result is most satisfactory. This Nitro Steel comes the nearest to the Whitworth Fluid Steel of any gun barrel ever offered to the trade. This statement expresses fully the status of our Nitro Steel, and in offering these new barrels you may rest assured we do so only after being fully convinced as to their superior quality.

Both Crown and Nitro Steel barrels will have our trade mark stamped on them. In this mark you have our guarantee that they are genuine and just what we represent them to be.

Hoping that we may have the pleasure of your favors with orders for samples of these new guns and assuring same our best attention always, we remain,
Yours very truly,
HUNTER ARMS CO."

Another Record Moose Head.

Since the opening up of the Alaskan regions by the gold-seeking rush, much has been printed in regard to the big moose of that far-away hunting ground. A spread of 69½ inches was thought to be the top notch for a time, but two weeks ago a Chicago fur dealer, says Forest and Stream, showed a head from the Copper river county which measured 73½ inches. [An account of this specimen appears in our issue for February 17—Ed] This moose head was considered in turn as the best offering of the Alaskan woods, but last week a still larger one came down from the same source, and this head scales 74 3/8 inches from tip to tip of the antlers—truly a phenomenon which could come from only such a terra incognita as that of Alaska, so soon to become one of the famous hunting regions of the earth.

These big moose which Mr. C. F. Perolat has shown, were killed by his man, R. C. Raddatz, and the latter writes that he killed the last one with the 30-30 rifle, the soft nosed bullet passing entirely through the body back of the shoulders. He says that the ball tore a hole as big as a dollar on the far side of the animal—this at a distance of over 300 yards. Now that the Winchester people guarantee the nitro powder to do its work in any temperature, the small-bore rifle with the above work to its credit would seem to be all that could be asked as a weapon suited to the extreme north.

Mr. Raddatz also got a fine specimen of the white Alaskan sheep, the horns being stated to measure 64½ inches over the curve. This animal was pure white and very beautiful. Truly the latest hunting stories from this land of wonders are of a sort to make men uneasy and anxious to pack their outfits for the upper trails.

California Wing Shooting Club.

Mr. C. A. Haight, the Secretary of the California Wing Shooting Club, has issued the following circular to the club members:

"By direction of the Board of Directors of the California Wing Club, I am instructed to inform members of the following rules adopted for the season of 1898:

"1. American Association Rules of 1893 shall govern all meetings for the season of 1898.

"2. Monthly shoots will be held the first Sunday of each month on the Olympic Club grounds (Ingleside), shooting to commence at 10 A. M. sharp.

"3. Price of pigeons: To members, $2 per dozen and to non-members $3 per dozen, provided said non-member does not reside within fifty miles of San Francisco.

"In event of a non-member who resides at a greater distance than fifty miles of San Francisco, and shooting by invitation of the club, he shall enjoy all the shooting privileges accorded a member in good standing.

"The opening shoot of the club will be held Sunday March 20, 1898."

Shooting will be at live birds only, high guns to win.

Live Geese Decoys.

Many sportsmen are familiar enough with the use of live ducks as decoys to have the edge of novelty taken from the use of them, but a new departure in this line must be accredited to A. W. Stuart, better known as "Doc," and his partner, Abe Crump, of Rio Vista, who hunt in the vicinity of Maine Prairie, Solano county. These hunters have several wild geese which had been crippled last year and have since been penned up. They have a harness for the birds and stake them out in the same manner the live duck decoys are used, and it is said the results are always satisfactory. Smith, of Los Banos, will have to look after his laurels.

CARTRIDGE AND SHELL.

Harvey McMurchy is booked for Frisco on the 15th inst.

A regular meeting of the Lincoln Gun Club was held last evening.

"Doc" Stuart and Abe Crump bagged 120 geese at Maine Prairie one day last week.

Arthur Webb won out on the high averages at the Lincoln Gun Club and Olympic Gun Club shoots. He uses a Smith gun.

On March 20th a private match between amateurs will be shot off at the Lincoln Club grounds. The losers will pay for the "tea-pot lids" etc.

C. M. Wollam, who has been located at Shreve's for some time past, will open a new shop in a few days, notice of which will appear hereafter. Wollam's work has often been appreciated by owners of fine guns.

The hunting grounds in the vicinity of Rio Vista and Maine Prairie are at present affording fine sport to geese hunters. Gray geese and brant are very plentiful; the honkers are nearly all fat. Swans have been rather scarce there this season.

Recently a Michigan hunter crossed the state line into Ohio and tried a little sport in the line of rabbit shooting. When the Ohio officials got through with him he was out just $62 50, not counting ammunition and other incidental expenses. The rabbit was only a very ordinary specimen at that.

Jack Fanning has a champion of judgment and experience, being none other than Harvey McMurchy. Mac says: That at the rate Fanning is going he stands a probable chance of coming out on top at the American Handicap at Elkwood Park, New Jersey, March 22-24th. Jack's form has been almost invincible recently with his trusty Smith gun and "Goldust" smokeless.

ROD.

NOTICE TO ANGLERS.

Every angler is invited to drop us a line occasionally, telling us the condition of the streams they have visited and the killing lure of the number and size of the fish caught, or any other item of interest to anglers.

Coming Events.

March 19—Regular Saturday contest of the San Francisco Fly Casting Club, 2 P. M., Stow Lake, Golden Gate Park.
March 20—Regular Sunday contest of the San Francisco Fly Casting Club, 10 A. M., Stow Lake, Golden Gate Park.
Mar. 22—San Francisco Fly Casting Club. Regular Meeting. Mill Building, Assembly Room, second floor.

Fly Casting at Stow Lake.

The second meeting of the series of fly casting contests of the San Francisco Fly Casting Club was held at Stow Lake, Golden Gate Park, last Saturday and Sunday. On Saturday a heavy wind prevented the best results at delicacy and accuracy and distance and consequently the scores in these events were comparatively low. The feature of the afternoon was the long-distance work of W. D. Mansfield. In spite of adverse conditions, he put out 115 feet of line, exceeding his own outdoor record of 113 feet and coming within five feet of R. C. Leonard's great indoor record of 120 feet. The second man in the distance event was W. E. Bacheller, who made the very creditable record of 104 feet.

In the accuracy event Horace Smyth won first place on a percentage of 89 2/3. Bacheller, with a percentage of 89 1/3, finished in second place. In the accuracy and delicacy event Bacheller took first place with a percentage of 86. Second honors were won by Skinner on a percentage of 83 1/3.

On Sunday the weather was more than favorable, and as a consequence the delicate work of casting was simplified and good average distances were scored. The star performer of the morning was W. D. Mansfield, who won first place in three events. Dr. E. N. Lowry, H. C. Golcher and G. A. Young followed the champion in fairly close order. H. Smith and H. F. Muller in delicacy and accuracy were well up in the score.

The bait-casting event is to be made a regular feature of the club contests, commencing a week from today. Some clever practice work was done last Saturday by Mansfield, Lowry, Babcock, Golcher and others.

Meeting of the Fly Casting Club.

The San Francisco Fly Casting Club met last Tuesday evening in the new quarters of the Fish Commission, which are in room 2 on the seventh floor of the Mills building. In future the club will hold all its meetings in the Assembly room, second floor of the building. The next gathering of fly-casters will be on Tuesday evening, the 22d inst. Considerable discussion was had relative to the change of positions of the buoys and lines for long-distance casting. Some members were of the opinion that the buoys should be placed so that every member of the club could reap a benefit. If there were platforms, where the back cast would not be interfered with by brush or land, considerable benefit would result to all concerned in long-distance casting. On motion of President Mansfield, the club decided to place the buoys in such a position that in future there will not be any opening left for argument.

The executive committee decided, after the meeting had adjourned, that in future the results of the contests and the order in which the events will take place shall be written on blackboards placed within full view of the contestants and spectators.

The executive committee will also report at a meeting which will be held in the assembly room on April 5th, what plan it will have formulated relative to imparting information to Eastern fly-casters concerning the prizes, rules, etc., at the open-to-all tournament, which will be held next September on Stowe Lake, under the auspices of the San Francisco Fly Casting Club.

The gentlemen elected to membership during the evening were: Joseph P. Kelly, R. J. Davis and F. C. Zimmerman.

Reports from Russian river are to the effect that the river is subsiding rapidly and the water very clear. The conditions for angling should be at present most favorable. The large fish are not now available to the efforts of the fisherman, but there should very shortly be plenty of good fishing for the usual run of three and four pounders. These little fellows have afforded many a day's fine sport to some of our well known devotees of the rod and reel.

The angling fraternity were represented at Point Reyes last Sunday by some of the veterans, including M. J. Geary, Del Cooper, Jno. Butler and "Doc" Watts. The catches were fair and creels held some nice fish, none, however, over four pounds in weight. Good fishing is anticipated on the Paper Mill today and tomorrow, recent reports stating that the stream is in first-class condition.

The bay fishing has been excellent recently; the catches of rock-fish, sea trout and capazoni have been good; smelt have been caught in large numbers in the Oakland estuary.

CONDITIONS.

American Trotting Association rules to govern trotting races, except otherwise specified herein. State Agricultural Association rules to govern running races. Trotting and pacing purse will be divided into four moneys—50, 25, 15 and 10 per cent. Running purses will be divided into three moneys—60, 30 and 10 per cent. In no case will a horse be entitled to more than one of the above divisions of a purse.

The right is reserved to declare off races not filling satisfactorily to the club, but no minimizers in the race so declared off may transfer at any time prior to April 30, 1898, such entries to other classes to which they are eligible.

For a walk-over a horse shall be entitled only to its entrance and one-half of the additional entrance money paid in in such a race.

The Board of Directors reserves the right to declare two starters a walk-over. Entries not declared out at 5 o'clock P. M. the day preceding the race shall be required to start. Declarations must be made at the office of the Secretary.

Trotting and pacing colts must be named by 5 o'clock P. M. on the day preceding the race and must be worn upon the track.

Conditional entries will be treated the same as regular entries and nominators held under the rules. Entrance fee ten per cent. of purse, to accompany the nomination.

All harness races 3 in 5, except races 5, 11 and 12, which are 2 in 3.

Horses called at 1 o'clock P. M. each day. Drivers and riders must be on the track by 11:30 A. M. Entries will close with Secretary April 15, 1898 in all races except Nos. 3, 7, 10, 12, 14 and 17. These close the eve before the race at 5 P. M.

Five or more to enter in each race, three or more to start.

No horses barred on account of back entries.

WILD NUTLING has been leased by John W. Phippen, who will stand him at the San Jose Race Track.
TERMS, $50
WILD NUTLING'S season will close JULY 1st, as it is Mr. Phippen's intention to race him. He has more speed than any horse this great driver has ever handled.

EXCELLENT PASTURAGE, and the best of care taken of mares. Some very fine trotters and pacers for sale. Address, WM. VIOGET, as above.

ZOMBRO, 2:11

The Greatest Trotter in America,

Has trotted 40 heats as a three-year old better than 2:27 1-2, 31 in 2:20 or better and 12 in 2:15 or better. Won 13 races out of 17 starts as a three-year-old, and a total of $5,400 in his three-year-old form.

ZOMBRO, 2:11 (Registered No. 28,029), brown stallion, foaled in 1892, stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds, and is one of the most perfect formed horses in America. His career on the turf in 1895 stamps him as one of the greatest three-year-olds the world has ever seen.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, sired by McKinney, 2:11 1/4, son of Alcyon, by George Wilkes.
ZOMBRO, 2:11, first dam Whisper, by Almont Lightning, son of Almont 33, dam by Mambrino Pilot 29.
ZOMBRO, 2:11, second dam May Berry, by Kentucky Clay 194, whose dam is also the dam of Mambrino
Patchen and Lady Thorne, 2:13 1/4.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, third dam by Edwin Forest 49.
Whisper, the dam of Zombro, was bred and raised by Gen. W. T. Withers, of Lexington, Ky., and is a handsome brown mare, 16 hands high, weighing 1,150 pounds. She has never been beaten in the show ring, always carrying off first prize.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, won the first prize over all three-year-old stallions at the Horse Show in San Francisco in 1895.

This grand stallion will make the SEASON OF 1898 at SACRAMENTO RACE TRACK, from FEBRU-ARY 1st to JUNE 1st, 1898. Terms, $30 cash at the time of service.

SEYMOUR WILKES, 2:08 1/2

(REGISTERED 0232)

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

J. H. White's Stock Farm, Lakeville, Cal.

TERMS—$25 FOR THE SEASON

SEYMOUR WILKES was sired by the King of the Wilkes family, Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, dam Early Bird, by Playmail (brother to Barney, 2:25 1/4); second dam Lucy, by Odd Fellow (son of Chloroform); third dam by a son of Williamson's Belmont; fourth dam by Blackhawk 767. Playmail was by Mike 3408 (he by Vermont 322 out of the Peniger mare), out of Kate McDonough (dam of Ella Lewis 2:27, and grandam of Aladin, 2:09 1/4).

SEYMOUR WILKES stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds. He is a seal brown in color, and in conformation is one of the most symmetrical of any in California. His qualities as a level-headed, game and speedy race horse are known to all horsemen. He is the fastest son of the mighty Guy Wilkes, and on his maternal side traces to the very best of sires and dams. He has an iron constitution, and all owners of good mares that want horses that will have breeding, size, bone, quality, good disposition and extreme speed should not overlook this horse. His service fee is placed at a very low figure considering his merits. He never was bred but to a few mares, and his progeny are models of perfection.

Mares can be shipped direct to the ranch via steamer "Gold." The best of care taken of them on the farm, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Pasturage $3 per month. For further particulars apply to

TORSO

Will Make the SEASON of 1898 at the Parkview Stock Farm
(HALF MILE EAST OF SACRAMENTO.)

Chestnut horse, foaled 1886. Bred by HON. W. L. SCOTT, Algeria Stud, Pa.

Torso sired the following winners: Torsina, Joe Roger, Torello, True Love II., Tortosa, Una Que Amo, Torsion, Torsolene, Myrtle H., Tortenson, Sister Ella, Solution, Hearso, Torsida, Sculptor, Torchdance, The Shrew, Vana, Odds On, Cosina, Caricia, Restless, Our Johnny, Sweet Liberty, Tesa, Finanza (dead) and Merry Lass (dead).

During his two years of turf career, Torso won nearly $45,000. His full sister, Aurelia, was one of the best mares of her day, winning $20,385, and her first foal was last season's capital two-year-old performer, Aurelian. Their dam, imp. Santa Lucia, also threw the winners, Tasso and Aureole. She is a daughter of the triple event winner, Lord Lyon, and through him obtains the potent blood of Paradigm, who produced Achievement, and two of whose granddaughters are the dams of Ladas and Glare, two of the best two-year-olds in England in 1892.

Algerine, the sire of Torso, was a superior race horse, winner of the Belmont Stakes, etc., and is by Abd-el-Kader, out of Nina, by Boston. Abd-el-Kader (a full brother to the good four-miler, Abd-el-Koree), although badly hiped, was a fine race horse at all distances. He won a dash of four miles at Saratoga, in 1869, in 7:31, a very creditable performance. Nina, the dam of Algerine, was one of the best race mares of her day. She was a winner at all distances, from one to four-mile heats, in good time, and produced Planet, one of the best horses in the country at all distances, and a successful sire, also Echequer, Ninette, Eclectic, etc.

Torso was a brilliant two-year-old. He won the first of the Double Events from a field of nine and also the second Double Event with a five-pound penalty, making his weight 123 pounds. In the Surf Stakes he beat Cayuga, St. James and four others, and in the Flatbush he defeated Reclaire, Onaway, Burlington and three others.

At three years of age he won the Lorillard Stakes, 1 1/2 miles in 2:36 1/4, from Tournament, Banquet, Badisha, Devotee, St. John, Burlington and Protection, a high-class field; was second to Burlington for the Brooklyn Derby, in front of Tournament, Padisha, Lisimony, Kenwood and four others; was second for the Equinoctial Stakes to Reclaire, beating Tournament and others, and carrying nine pounds more than he winner, and was third for the Omnibus Stakes, 1 1/2 miles, carrying a penalty of five pounds.

TERMS $50 THE SEASON.

SEASON CLOSING JUNE 1, 1898. All bills payable not later than that date. Good pasturing at $5 per month. Address all letters to

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

Alameda, at $100 the Season.

(WITH USUAL RETURN PRIVILEGES.)

LIMITED TO TWENTY-FIVE MARES.

ALTAMONT shares championship honors with Baron Wilkes, a horse of great opportunities, in having six 2:10 performers to his credit. He has taken a leading position among the foremost trotting sires of the country under such conditions that phenomenal ability alone has saved him from oblivion. A very small proportion of his progeny has been trained, and an extremely small number of these by competent men. As a partial illustration of his meagre advantages, it may be stated that he has never produced a colt from a pacing-bred mare or from one with a fast record. Nor until 1897 had he ever been crossed with a descendant of George Wilkes, Electioneer, Dictator, Sidney or Dexter Prince. Oregon and Washington have produced seven 2:10 performers, and EVERY ONE of these are ALTAMONTS.

ALTAMONT is a horse of iron constitution, and at twenty-three years of age is in the full vigor of his prime, a sure foal-getter, and, except for his blindness—the result of an accident—is without blemish. He has never sired a sorrel, all of his colts having been solid colors—bays, browns or blacks.

NOTE—Bessie Rankin, by Altamont, sold November, 1897, brought the highest price obtained for a harness horse at public auction in California during the year. Address

If MONTEREY begets colts like himself he will prove to be the poor man's friend, for it will cost but little to bring them to the races.

MONTEREY had but five months' training before making his record of 2:13 3/4, last half in 1:03 3/4. Last season I had no idea of getting him beaten, but his foot was injured in the blacksmith shop, consequently he had to be let up in his training. Previous to this unfortunate accident, I drove him a mile in 2:11 1/4, last half in 1:02 1/2, last quarter in 30 seconds. This was done in the presence of 3,000 people about July 10th. I could have driven him better than 2:10, as he seems to be all right. I look for him to get the harness record this year, which ought to make his produce very salable.

MONTEREY is a thorough race horse, as he is level-headed and game as a pebble. He has a fine, resolute way of going a gait so much admired by all. A glance at his pedigree will convince any horseman that he is bred in the purple and is justly entitled to his extra speed. Every one of his family are producers of early and extreme speed.

MONTEREY is one of the gamest horses I ever drove, and, like his full brother, Montana, 2:16 1/4, the races are never too long for him. Montana won the Occident Stake in seven heats and many a hard-fought race since.

Hattie, dam of Monterey and Montana, is a grand-looking bay mare, and I consider her one of the very strongest, as well as one of the best-bred mares in America. Her sire is strongly bred, and sires speed. To his credit may be mentioned Meteor, 2:17 1/4; Carrie Bell, 2:23 1/2; the dams of Iago, 2:11; Fell-fare, 2:10 1/4; Galette, 2:12 1/2, and thirteen others in the list.

I have every reason to expect that Monterey will be the "King of all Trotters." In color he is a rich chestnut, and in conformation he has strong loins and back, good shoulders, fine head and neck, and the best of feet and legs. He weighs 1,200 pounds and stands 15 3/4 hands.

I will have Monterey at my ranch at Milpitas any time mares are sent there.

TERMS, $50, With Usual Return Privileges.

SEASON CLOSING JUNE 1, 1898, as Monterey will then be prepared for the races. All bills payable not later than that date. Address all letters to

MAGNET.

The Great Son of Imp. St. Blaise and Magnetic.

MAGNET, A SPEED MARVEL.

Achievements of a Wonderful Race Horse That Should Make a Great Name at the Stud.

It was early in 1892 that the greatest sale of thoroughbreds ever held in America took place. Reference is made to the Nursery Stud dispersal, at Tattersalls' paddocks, near Hunt's Point Station, New York. The first bid for the first horse led out at that sale was $100,000, and at that figure the beautiful Derby-winner and successful sire, imp. St. Blaise, was knocked down to Charles Reed, now of Gallatin, Tenn., formerly of Saratoga, New York. It was the largest sum ever paid for a thoroughbred horse. Subsequently Mr. Macdonough gave $150,000 for Ormonde. St. Blaise has proven worth every dollar of that one hundred thousand. Ormonde has yet to prove that he was a bargain, great race horse as he undoubtedly was.

After Magnetizer had brought $16,000 and two old stallions had brought much smaller sums the broodmares were disposed of. Carina (dam of St. Carlo, St. Carolus and later of Prince of Monaco), then nine years old, came to California, being knocked down to J. B. Haggin for $6,500. The bay mare Magnetic, but five years of age and untried as a broodmare, fetched $4,100, her dam, fifteen years old, $6,100. Magnetic is an own sister to the $16,000 stake horse, Magnetizer, also to Magnate and Masher, latter second to his stable companion, Potomac, in the richest Futurity ever contested for where Strathmeath (afterwards winner of the American Derby), Ambulance, Rey del Rey, Montana (two years after a Suburban Handicap winner), Russell and Nellie Bly finished in the rear of the Belmont pair.

Magnet was raced by F. H. Hickok, at Alexander's Island, near Washington, D. C., as a two-year old, and won seven races, a detailed account of which does not appear in Goodwin's Official Turf Guide. Along about July, 1895, when a three-year-old, Magnet was purchased by D. A. Honig, the St. Louis turfman, and since that period the horse has won more than three-fourths of the races in which he was a starter, defeated such celebrities as Flying Dutchman, Buck Massie, imp. Star Ruby, Free Advice and Buckwa, when a their very best, and has a longer string of fast races with good weights up than any horse we can call to mind. Among the number were:

Five furlongs in 1:01 at St. Louis, 105 pounds up.
Five and one-half furlongs in 1:07½, 118 pounds up, Ingleside track.
Six furlongs in 1:13½, 107 pounds up, Ingleside track.
Six and one-half furlongs in 1:21, 112 pounds up, at St. Louis.
Seven furlongs in 1:27½, 117 pounds up, St. Louis, also seven furlongs in 1:27½, 122 pounds up, Forsythe, Ind.
Seven and one-half furlongs in 1:33½, second, beaten just a head by Free Advice, Magnet carrying 115 pounds to Free Advice's 118.
One mile in 1:39¾, 112 pounds up, Forsythe, Ind. One mile in 1:40¾, 117 pounds up, at St. Louis, defeating, among others, Flying Dutchman and Buck Massie at even weights.
Mile and a furlong in 1:52½, 107 pound up, at Forsyth, Ind.

Following is the record of the subject of this sketch, and the showing is certainly one that his owner can well be proud of. Since the St. Louis turfman secured the horse in 1895 he has won twenty-seven races and been second nine times, third none, unplaced eight times—thirty-six times in the money against eight times out of it:

Sixth dam, Sister to Hornsea, by Velocipedes—7th dam by Cerberus—8th dam, Miss Cranfield, by Sir Peter—9th dam by Pegasus—10th dam by Paymaster—11th dam, Pomona, by King Herod—12th dam, Caroline, by Snap—13th dam by Regulus—14th dam by Hip, and on to 19th dam, a Royal mare.

The breeding of Magnet could scarcely be improved upon. He was begotten by a Derby winner (St. Blaise) that brought $100,000 at auction, and St. Blaise was by a Derby-winner, Hermit, best sire of his day in England, he by St. Leger winner Newminster, son of Touchstone, winner of the St. Leger. The beauty of Magnet's breeding is that the first, second, third, fourth, fifth and sixth dams, right straight back, were producers of great stake-winners. Most breeders "go" more on this than upon any other point. St. Blaise for several years headed the list of winning stallions in this country, and The Ill-Used, sire of Magnet's dam, for a long time was either at the top or near it. As the sire of His Highness, Badge and Fides, The Ill-Used's fame is undying. Fides (who beat our Geraldine) was bred much like Magnet. In the pedigree of this great race horse we find 16 winners of the Derby, to wit: St. Blaise, Hermit, Orlando, Blink Bonny, Whisker, Pyrrhus I., Whalebone, Plenipotentiary, Diomed, Saltram, Pope, Smolensko, Bay Middleton, Waxy, Moses and Eniluis; 5 winners of the St. Leger—Newminster, Touchstone, Octavian, Stockwell and The Baron, besides Blink Bonny, Manuella and Cobweb, winners of the Oaks. Altogether it would be hard to find in all America a horse bred on such ultra fashionable lines as Magnet.

A well-known and wealthy gentleman has purchased the splendid son of St. Blaise and Magnetic, and has taken him to the O'Grady farm, near San Mateo, where his stock is quartered, until his new stud, now being laid out on one of the largest estates of the vicinity, is completed. For this first season Magnet will be allowed to serve a few approved outside mares. We shall take pleasure in announcing the plans of his lessee in regard to the horse at an early date in the columns of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

The mares owned by his new purchaser are as follows:

Imp. Chiffle, by Prism from imp. Petticoat, by Doncaster (winner of the Derby and sire of Bend Or, Derby winner; he the sire of Ormondwinner of the Derby 2,000 Guineas and St. Leger).

Imp. Bridget (half-sister to Nero), by Foxhall from Queen Bess, by Strathconan. Bridget is the dam of the frequent winner, Yreka.

Carinthia, by imp. Darebin from Carrie, by Wanderer. Carrie is a great producing mare.

I Declare, by imp. Inverness from Clara, by imp. The Ill-Used. This is a half-sister of the crack Clarendon.

Lillian Russell, by Longfellow from Hegia (a winner) by Waverly, the second dam Hira being the dam of Himyar, sire of Domino.

Franchise (a winner), by Hindoo, from Countess Gisela (dam of Personne), by Trumpington.

Mirandola filly, a young mare by St. Carlo, from imp. Mirandola, by the Jolly Friar.

Muster (a good racer), by Flood, from imp. Mutiny (dam of Muta, Bianca, Mutineer and Walcott), by Adventurer.

Tiger Lily (a winner), by St. Carlo, from imp. Windflower, by Peter, latter best son of Hermit.

Britomartis, by imp. Inverness (sire of Senator Bland, etc.), from Beauty, by imp. St. Blaise.

Cleodora, by San Lucas, from imp. Maiden Poem (dam of Ternary) by Master Kildare.

St. Kristine, by St. Carlo from imp. Kissling Crust (dam of Orestes) by Sweetbread.

Tenebrae, by St. Carlo from Sloe (a winner) by Hanover, leading sire of America.

Violence, by St. Carlo from Anarchy (dam of the winner, Socialist), by imp. Sir Modred.

With but one exception, none of these mares are more than six years old, and this year they are in foal to St. Carlo, imp. Inverness, imp. Bathampton, San Lucas and imp. Loyalist.

Burns & Waterhouse's Shasta Water heads the list of the outside mares to be bred to Magnet this season.

The Case of Jockey Hinrichs.

OAKLAND, March 16.—The trial at Emeryville to-day of Arthur Hinrichs, the outlawed jockey, for assaulting President Tom Williams of the California Jockey Club ended in a wrangle between Court and counsel, and the jury was discharged without a decisive result.

The jury, after balloting for hours, reported that an agreement could be reached if the Court would instruct them as to whether or not Williams had the right to place his hands on the jockey with the intention of turning him over to an officer to be removed from the grounds. Deputy District Attorney Moore and Attorney A. L. Frick could not agree on the instruction, and the Court refused to take the responsibility.

Then the jurors became headstrong and said they would not agree unless given the law on the question they asked. At 6:30 in the evening everybody got tired, the jury was discharged and Hinrichs was ordered to appear again on Saturday.

The trial was along hearsay lines. A juror was late at noon, and Bailiff J. A. Cushing told the Court he was at the "quarter" and would soon "finish." When the juror appeared one of his fellows called out, "He's in the stretch."

President Williams was the principal witness of the day, his testimony was highly interesting. He first related the history of the "Little Pete" scandal, which led to the ruling off of Hinrichs, and said that the defendant had at that time made both a written and an oral confession. When asked why a written confession had been obtained he said that he always preferred to have documentary evidence in such cases, as there was nearly always a plea for reinstatement. He said that he was once approached by a Justice of the Supreme Court, who pleaded the case of a crooked jockey.

Williams said that after Hinrichs confessed the jockey was in fear of death at the hands of the men he had betrayed, and Williams said he provided him with a bodyguard for two days and then gave him $100 out of his own pocket to pay his fare East. He declared that he bore him no ill-will, and felt that he was a good boy who had been led astray.

Williams said that when he laid his hand on Hinrichs the latter called him vile names and kicked him in the shins. Williams first said that he did not care to repeat the language used by the defendant in the presence of Mrs. Hinrichs, who was in court, but finally did so under protest.

The defense tried to show that Hinrichs had the right to be on the track, though permission obtained from J. A. Murphy, one of the judges. Hinrichs swore that Murphy gave him permission through one of the officers, and that he went to Williams to verify the matter, and that the latter seized him. Murphy took the stand later and swore that he never gave any such permission.

THERE having been a good deal of discussion and a good many inquiries as to whether the produce of outlawed stallions and mares are eligible for registry in the American Stud Book and whether they can race on Jockey Club and Turf Congress tracks, the following from "The Turf, Field and Farm" of New York, will be of interest: "The American Stud Book and registration is now controlled by the Jockey Club, 173 Fifth avenue, this city, and we are not aware that they have established a rule barring the product of outlawed horses from registry in the stud book and racing on tracks in their jurisdiction. It was reported through the press last year that the American Turf Congress had passed such a law, but we do not find it incorporated in their book of rules which went into effect January 1, 1895. We cannot say whether the rule is in force. Secretary E. C. Hopper of the Turf Congress, Covington, Ky., can give the information."

State Board of Agriculture.

The State Board of Agriculture held a meeting last Monday at the office of Secretary Smith at Sacramento, at which were present Directors Boggs, Mathews, Wilson, Spreckels, Terry, Cox, Mackey and President Chase.

The purpose of the meeting was for the election of officers for the ensuing year. Director Boggs nominated A. B. Spreckels for president, and he received the unanimous vote of the board. In accepting the honor, Mr. Spreckels promised to use his best efforts for the success of the society, and stated that he would give the position the requisite attention and hoped to receive the earnest support of the members.

J. W. Wilson was elected Superintendent of the Park and W. P. Mathews Superintendent of the Pavilion.

On motion of Director Mathews, the thanks of the board were extended

HARNESS RACING PROSPECTS.—It may be a little premature to utter predictions, at all authoritative, on the prospects for harness-racing in California this season. Nevertheless, I feel a great deal of confidence in the outlook and that based on what I consider good grounds.

In the first place; after conversations with many of the drivers I feel justified in stating that there will be a hearty co-operation from that influential body in the way of purification. Not the least desire to justify or apologize for past errors, but a determination on their part to show that the lessons of the past have been duly considered and that the future will be free from a return to what has done so much to render harness-racing obnoxious to those who were staunch supporters of the "truly American sport."

While these good resolutions, of what can safely be termed a majority of the drivers, will materially aid the managers of harness-racing meetings, it must be seconded by the most strenuous efforts of these managers to remove, so far as lies in their power, all grounds for suspicion. That is, that nothing will be left undone to compel "honest endeavor" to win every heat, and that the broad ground will be occupied that straight men will not object to rigid enforcement of the laws, while those who would fain be crooked must be coerced into good behavior.

Taking it to be an assured fact that these vital points will be guarded, in my opinion there is nothing in the way of a successful season, with a reasonable prospect of a good circuit from the time of the opening of the summer meeting of the Breeders to the close in the southern country, and, in all probability, not a single trotter or pacer will leave the coast.

The proposed innovations—far better to call them amendments—at a meeting on the Oakland track, extending from the middle of June to the same period in July or later, will present such an array of advantages that, unless my enthusiasm overbalances my judgment, the keynote of prosperity will be struck, and in place of a harsh and discordant note, the first of a harmonious chime, and after that glad peals from every meeting and fair in the State.

Half a million of people within a radius of twenty miles and among them a small army of speculators who would make a far longer journey to gratify that propensity when imbued with the belief that the game is "square." Among the residents of San Francisco, Oakland, Alameda and adjoining towns, are quite a number who have a pronounced partiality for driving horses, and while these may not be so regular in their attendance as the devotees of Dame Fortune, when the "big days" are presented, and there is an assurance of every driver striving for the honors of victory, as well as the emoluments to be gained, they will swell the crowd to goodly proportions. It is something of an anomaly that this division of the patrons of harness-racing, by far the largest proportion of which do not venture a stake, or at the most a small one, are attracted by the larger speculations of those who are inclined to "back their judgment." However strange it may appear there is a fascination in watching a game which the spectator will not participate in.

As I have oftentimes written and said, human kind differs from all other animals in being endowed with a gambling propensity, and were that completely eradicated, only a few generations would elapse before there was a return to a semblance of barbarism, and not very many centuries in the far away future when the brute would dominate, higher aspirations completely obliterated.

Not a single spectator at a racing or trotting meeting who does not take many chances in the life journey, and though they eschew that form of gambling which consists in "taking the odds," or buying a pool on the horse that is fancied, are not averse, in fact interested in knowing that others have a keener interest in the race. Then again when speculations are lively there are expectations that the contest will be close, and more than that there will be a greater incentive to win, a greater risk to run from the extra watchfulness inspired by the betting.

Never before in the history of trotting in California so many horses so likely to engage public attention. Pacers and trotters of high celebrity and these reinforced by a "dark division" that Dame Rumor pronounces to be wonderfully good.

The plan outlined to incorporate dash races at the opening meeting with heats meets with universal approval, as far as I have heard opinions expressed, and that in conjunction with an extended meeting will give the opportunity for such a variety of races that the public interest will be retained to the very last day of the meeting. Like the pieces of colored glass in the kaleidoscope, that takes different shapes at every revolution of the tube, there can be a continual succession of pictures with new scenes and constant surprises.

In a meeting covering four weeks, apart from stakes or purses intended to bring certain classes together, a new programme can be announced for each week, that programme based on what the horses have shown or can be shown by the horses which are at the track. In this way there will be a better opportunity for classification, more likelihood of ar. ranging races that will ensure close contests.

There has not been a meeting of the directors of the P. C. T. H. B. A. for nearly two months. I understand that a meeting will be held soon and the initiatory steps taken. The annual meeting set for the 26th of April will doubtless show a large attendance of the members, and there is little hazard in stating that there will be a complete consensus of opinion that everything in the power of the association to do to advance harness racing interests will be done.

As it is not at all likely that, even if owners resolved to send their horses East, shipments will be made before the first of May, there will be time enough after the annual meeting to make the move. I have implicit confidence, however, that there will be sufficient inducements to keep them at home.

"HEAD, HANDS, SEAT."—These words, which I have used recently to precede several articles, are considered by Englishmen as the three main essentials of a first-class jockey. I will make a quartet of the phrase in place of a trio and then it will read, head, hands, seat, heart. The necessity for the fourth quality will not be denied by those who witnessed the third race at Oakland on Thursday last, when the "prince of jockeys" showed that however well he is endowed with what has heretofore been considered the main qualifications of a jockey, he had a still larger share of pusillanimity. An exhibition of cowardice beyond anything I had ever witnessed on the part of a jockey, and, to intensify it, the cause so slight that unless a person were a close observer it would have been overlooked.

When the horses were called for the race the colt Sloan was riding, when about three-quarters of the way between the gate to the saddling paddock and the judges' stand, reared, slightly, throwing his fore feet on the top rail of the outer track fence. Sloan immediately drew his feet from the stirrups and when the colt released his feet and brought them down on the track with a sort of circular motion, Sloan slid off on the near side, checking the colt with the rein held in his left hand. More of a playful gambol on the part of the colt than a vicious movement, and so little excited that the light pull on the rein brought him to a stop in a few feet. Sloan delivered him to an attendant, saying that he would not ride him in the race, and started back towards the jockeys' room. Summoned by the judges, he said that the colt was dangerous on account of a sore mouth, and that he believed in the danger part of the story was evident, as he showed that too plainly to be disputed.

The trainer's assertion that he was the reverse of a dangerous animal to ride did not quiet his fear, and he stubbornly refused to accept the hazard.

I was in a position to see that craven fear was the motive for refusing, or it would have been ascribed to a desire to impress people that he was far too important a personage to take any chances, and that the flattery of the past few months had "swelled his head" to such a size that there was no room for even a small show of common sense. It did seem that if there was a natural lack of courage, pride would have prompted to simulate that much admired quality, and that ten times greater risks would be taken than incur the ignominy of acknowledged cowardice. Therefore, I returned to the former impression—that it was inordinate self-conceit, an overpowering belief that he was superior to and beyond all ordinance, the "king pin" jockey of the world, and, consequently, had full license to put on airs, to virtually say to his employer, the jockey club and the spectators that he would do as he pleased, and whether they liked it or not their notions should not come between the wind and his nobility. A set of blatant Republicans, what cared he whether they found fault with his assumptions of doing as he pleased, Princes, dukes, marquises and lords of high degree had applauded him and the rabble had cheered when a black imp had beaten him twice in one afternoon. He disdained their homage and did not value their opinions.

There came another race in which the Prince figured. He had the fifth position, twelve horses in the race, the distance one mile. Though admonished by the starter, he would not come up in his place, and as the other jockeys were anxious to get as near the inside as possible, the turn being so close at hand, there was more space on the outside. Two or three horses between him and the outer rail when the barrier went up, and if he had a chance to win the start took it away. Still a dilemma, or rather a confirmation that it was actually cowardice that prompted him to refuse to remount a colt which had given him a scare. And it will be well for "Tod" to bear in mind that such an exhibition in England as that of Thursday last would bring a jockey down from a higher pedestal that he occupied over the water, and the reason that heart was not added to head, hands and seat, it was held that a jockey of any prominence must have a fair modicum of courage.

"Old" Clift was riding Dramatist at York for the King's Hundred. This horse took it into his head to bolt, when leading a few lengths, and stopping quite suddenly at a large wet drain, threw poor Clift with great force on his back at the bottom of it, where the peculiar form of the place held him fast, and prevented him extricating himself. A lady, who happened to be near this secluded spot, on seeing the accident, hastened in great alarm to the assistance of the veteran, and inquired with much tenderness if he felt himself seriously injured. "Hurt be d—d," cried Clift, "here," holding out a hand covered with mud, "d—n it, pull me out!" Upon this polite request being complied with Clift remounted and rode in; and although much shaken with the fall, and though several jockeys offered to do it for him, he persisted in riding a walk-over for the next stake in his mud-besmeared jacket.

Though that occurred some sixty years ago, and the description nearly as old, that same spirit exists, and the same admiration of pluck in the land of racehorses.

The two pictures are worth studying. Sloan in his gay colors (crimson and cream stripes and silver cap), cowed and without heart, acknowledging to the judges that he is the "afraid," and old Clift, in his mud-covered jacket, remounting Dramatist.

And yet I cannot understand a nature that would succumb to anything but a transport of fear which all but stopped the action of the heart and palsied the brain that would choose the course that Sloan took. When he turned over the colt to the attendant and fled towards the jockeys' room it was an abject spectacle, a popular idol debased, a quondam hero retreating from the shadow of a mouse. And the flight in full view of thousands of people, it cannot be that it was such arrant cowardice as that would imply, and the inspiration came from the exalted importance be placed upon himself. Not at all surprising that a man of the mental caliber of Sloan should lose his head when he has been made so conspicuous as he has in the past few months, and the question presents itself, is he the only one that should bear the opprobrium?

The apotheosis of a jockey, however great a genius in his line, is not conducive of the "levelheadedness" which would have saved him from such an exhibition, and inasmuch as it was an unparalleled act it must be ascribed to cowardice, and, if it is, must certainly place him many degrees lower on the scale of good jockeys.

PALO ALTO COLTS EASTWARD.—By the time this is published the Palo Alto colts in the appended list I trust will be safely stabled in New York.

My intention was to make another trip to Palo Alto to see the colts move, as the day I was there the track was too wet and they were jogging on the road.

A slight attack of pneumonia, however, and that accompanied by the "worst half hour" or longer, I ever experienced, the excruciating torment caused by the passage of urinal calculi came in the way of the proposed trip.

Mr. F. W. Covey very kindly sent me the list of a portion of those which are to be sold on Tuesday next, and it is safe to say that his statement is well within bounds, and that his predictions are based on the soundest foundation.

From what I saw of the Dexter Princes last fall there is not the least hesitancy in endorsing Mr. Covey's opinion, and that the change of location of this highly bred son of Kentucky Prince will give him a good place among the most successful sires of trotting and pacing speed. It can hardly be otherwise, as a horse which has twenty-two representatives in 2:20 or better, two in 2:10 or faster, from the mares be secured before going to Palo Alto, should show vast improvement. The inbreeding to Rysdyk's Hambletonian and the capital outcross Mambrino Chief, American Star and thoroughbred, warrant the assertion that hereafter the nephew of Dexter will be very near the top round of the ladder.

The relationship which Altivo bears to Palo Alto is a high recommendation. When to that is added high form, in fact of such just proportion that it is difficult to point to even a slight defect in his conformation, and as it was reasonable to expect from his nearness of kin to Boston and Trustee, the sire of the champion of her day, Fashion, he possesses indomitable game, as was proven by his winning the Consolation Stakes, $9,000, for four-year-olds at Detroit under such adverse conditions as would have made ordinarily game horses refuse to trot at all.

He started in the Main Stake, $11,000, on July 17th, trotted five hard heats; on the 21st of July, he won 1st, 3d and 4th heats in 2:18½, 2:18½, 2:19½, the second heat he was second in 2:18, when his knee was nearly twice its normal size and pus oozing from it during the whole of the race.

Since writing the paragraph about Adbell, which appeared last week, I had a conversation with "Dick" Havey who drove him last season and Mr. Havey accounts for him getting off by an occurrence at Oakland just previous to the summer meeting. There was not a sulky in the stable that he did not strike the crossbar unless hitched so far forward that the points of the shafts touched his shoulders. Hence he drove him to a cart and that not a light one.

Adbell was moving kindly, about a forty gait, around the turn when a horse came up at full speed, and when opposite Adbell, the driver of the other horse hit him with a chain and kept striking and rattling it without cessation. Adbell became frantic to use Havey's words, "ran away with him on a trot" and he could not stop him until he was well round the further turn. A looker-on timed the back stretch in 31 seconds, but after that he was so unreliable that he was sent home.

I will watch the future of the colts that were sold in Cleveland last fall and the last consignment with a great deal of interest, and shall be hugely disappointed if there is a failure to show some bright stars among them.

"The catalogue of our sale has not reached us yet, so I write you some notes about the horses I will take over.

Adbell (5) son of Advertiser—Beautiful Bells, holds the worlds yearling record 2:23. He is in fine shape now to be worked, having been jogged all winter. He is sound and has worked for us half miles in 1:06 repeatedly in 1:07. Combining as he does the blood of Electioneer, George Wilkes and Beautiful Bells, he should prove a great sire.

Pazote, ch c, (3) by Whips, 2:27½—Sallie Benton (4) 2:17¾, is a very fine individual and a great prospect for a very fast performer. His sire got Azote 2:05¾, Cobwebs 2:12, etc. His dam was the champion four-year-old of her time, and has produced three in the 2:20 list, as many different sires. Starlight 2:15¾, Serpoi 2:15¾ and Nordi (3) 2:19¾.

I believe Pazote is one of the greatest of young horses that ever left Palo Alto.

Anselor (3) 2:21½, winner of the State Fair Futurity $3,000 for three year-olds in '97, is by Electricity 2:17¾—Anselina 2:29¾, by Ansel 2:20, granddam the great Elaine 2:20, half sister of Electioneer.

Anselor was capable of beating 2:20 several seconds last year. He is a colt of great determination, fast and reliable.

Local, (5), three-year old record 2:19½, is a handsome brown and tan stallion, much faster than his record, by Wildcat, dam Ladywell, 2:16½, by Electioneer.

One of the stars of the sale is the bay filly Astrea (3) by Azmoor, 2:20¾, dam Ashby (dam of Athena, 2:15¾, and Aria, (3), 2:16¾), by Gene Benton, second dam Ashland, by Ashland, son of imp. Glencoe. Astrea is a fine individual, good size and bids fair to make a phenomenal performer. Handled but little she can show a 2:20 gait.

Another very promising youngster is the two-year-old colt Cor solador, by Altivo, 2:18¾, (brother to Palo Alto) dam Consolation (dam of Utility, 2:13) by Dictator. He is a good individual and shows

TURF AND TRACK.

THE SULKY.

If you have a horse to sell, advertise in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

SEVENTY-FIVE trotters and pacers are being handled on the San Jose track.

GEISHA GIRL, by Guy Wilkes, 2:15½, out of Sister V., 2:18½, by Sidney, is reported fast.

THE election of Adolph B. Spreckels as President of the State Board of Agriculture gives universal satisfaction.

THE total amount received for Wm. Corbitt's trotting stock in New York City was $19,060 on an average of $456.

TRAINER AL THOMAS will campaign this year the Piedmont mare Creeping Flower, that took a two-year-old record of 2:30½.

THE fast mares, Coincident, 2:20, by Calabar, and the Sable Wilkes mare, Sabina, 2:15½, have been booked to Potential.

CHAS. COREY, of San Jose, has a beautiful bay filly by Diablo 2:09½, out of Laura M., 2:19½ and it is a "natural bawn pachah."

SHERIFF FRAZIER has named his Dariwell-Potrero filly Juneau. She is now in training at Vancouver in charge of Lee Galbraith.

GEO. Y. BOLLINGER, ex-sheriff of Santa Clara county, has a black colt by Boodle 2:11½, out of the dam of Our Boy that is a good one.

GUY WILKES 2:15½, stands for $100 on the Two Minute Farm, Rockport, Ohio, and Gov. Pacheco, brother to Palo Alto stands for $10.

THOS. KEATING will make his headquarters at Louisville when he arrives from California with Anaconda, 2:08, and Searchlight, 2:09½.

IAGO, 2:11, may be campaigned this year. He never looked so well as this spring and will show his California form when he starts for the money.

THE colts raised from mares bred this year will not come into use before 1899. Breeders should think of this and not delay in starting up this industry.

It is said that E. R. Bowne has offered $500 advance over the $6,000 recently paid for Planet, 2:04½, at auction. He acted for a wealthy New Yorker.

NOW is the time for stallion owners to take up the breeding business. A little judicious advertising on their part will do much to make their own business profitable.

NONE of the European race tracks are thrown up at the curves. It is proposed, however, to make the experiment at Wells track in Austria, and if it is a success the Vienna track will follow suit.

THE question no longer is: "To advertise or not to advertise," but "where?" And the answer is: "In the paper that is devoted exclusively to the interests of the class which you wish to reach."

PILOT MEDINM has eighty-three performers at eighteen years, more than any other sire has had at same age. At eighteen years Onward had eighty-two, Red Wilkes seventy-nine and Alcantara seventy-six.

BOODLE has been bred to twelve mares this year and none of these well-bred matrons had foals at foot. This is remarkable and shows that the intelligent owners are getting ready for good prices for their stock. The future is exceedingly bright.

It is now proposed to form a joint stock company and purchase or lease a tract of land near Hanford on which to build a race track, lay out a baseball diamond, and have grounds for field sports. The proposition is to place shares at five dollars each.

BOSTON is to follow the example of this city in giving to its riders and drivers a speedway. The speedway will run along the Charles River. The contract for building it has been let, and the horsemen of Boston expect it to be ready within two years.

ED. TIPTON says that Messrs. Daly and Harriman have made no matches for the coming season, which means that notwithstanding statements to the contrary, there will be no renewal, in 1898, at least, of the private sweepstakes trotted last year at Goshen, N. Y.

FAUSTINO, 2:12½, will be docked and make his debut as a high-stepping colt shortly. He is doubtless the fastest by the record to be shifted over from the two minute harness to the elaborate park trappings, and possibly the show ring may know him by another name.

KENTUCKIANS are trying to have the Legislature of their State pass a horse-shoers' bill similar to the one in force in New York State. The law required that before a man can practice farriery he must first pass an examination and receive a license from a board appointed by the Governor.

THE horsemen of Fresno are becoming alarmed regarding their magnificent race track property. It is rumored the owner, Mr. Wm. Helm, will not lease the place to the horsemen this year. There are fifteen trotters and pacers, besides twenty thoroughbreds in training there at present.

THE Hon. F. C. Sayles has added Rosa Sprague, dam of the leading California trotter and sire, McKinney, 2:11½, to his excellent group of brood mares at Bryn Mawr. When this mare was sold at a Lexington sale in 1892, Marcus Daly forced the Ridgeleys of Springfield, Ill., to pay $5000 for her.

THE sale of horses from the San Mateo Stock Farm in May is looked forward to with interest by every farmer and horse breeder in California. About twenty-six sons and daughters of the great Oro Wilkes, 2:11, besides forty choice broodmares, noted as dams of great trotters and pacers, will be sold.

GREAT progress in breeding has been made during the past year in Austria, Hungary, where 529 trotting foals were registered as against 415 in 1896. These were sired by sixty-four American stallions, the balance consisting of fourteen Austrian, eight Russian and one each of French, Italian and Arabian blood.

THERE were exported from the Union Stock Yards, Chicago, in February, to various European countries, 2,934 horses, the largest foreign movement of horses for one month in the history of the export trade. For the first two months of the current year the direct foreign shipments of horses from this market aggregate 5,434 head.—Drovers' Journal.

THE rule forcing drivers to appear always in some regular suit of colors is a most excellent one, for the general untidy appearance of men in the sulky has been a great mar to the attractiveness of the scene of a trotting race. It is to be hoped that in the future no drivers will be seen with cigars in their mouths parading before the public in their shirt sleeves.

DICTATOR's greatness as a sire rests not upon his numbers, but the quality of his descendants. His chief representatives in the first generation are Jay-Eye-See, 2:10; Phallas, 2:13½; and Director, 2:17. In the second are Nancy Hanks, 2:04; Directum, 2:05½; Direct, 2:05½; Lockheart, 2:08½, and Evangeline, 2:11½; while in the third are Directly, 2:07½; Labelle, 2:09, and Miss Williams, 2:09½.

THE famous trotter and sire, Bayard Wilkes by Alcantara, dam Barcena, died Friday 4th inst., from the effects of an injury received at Mystic Park a year ago last fall. Bayard Wilkes was thirteen years of age and his record was 2:11½. He was sire of five in the list, the speedy Bismarck being his most famous son. He was owned by C. P. Drake, of Lewiston, Me., and was bred at Highlawn Farm, Lee, Mass.

At the last meeting of the Modesto Driving Club the following officers were elected: Dr. C. W. Evans, President; A. L. Cressey, Treasurer; E. D. Grove, Secretary; J. W. Davison, T. F. Kiernan, C. C. Baker and F. M. Mosier, Directors. The officers of the club are also ex officio directors. There are fifty-two signers to the membership roll and it is expected that the first meeting will be held at the race track in April.

FROM some unknown source there originated a report that heat trotting would not be allowed at the Denver, Colo., early summer meeting, and the statement has been repeated by nearly all the turf papers. Secretary Roberts writes, in denial, under date of March 4th: "There exists among horsemen an impression that we will not have betting on heats during our June meeting. This is a mistake. Will you please correct the same in your next issue?"

FAIRY BASHAW, by Wapsie, out of Lady Woodburn, sister to Barcena (dam of Bayard Wilkes 2:11½ and granddam of Diablo 2:09½), bids fair to become one of the most noted brood mares in the famous family of the Burch Mare. She is now but twelve years old and has already produced Radical 2:23½ and the pacers Radius 2:13½ and Tangible 2:24½, which are her first three foals. She is owned by J. W. Miller, Winterset, Ia., and has raised eight foals, six by Tangent and two by Penrose.

THE American Horse Breeder in its last issue, published an instructive table of new performers of 1897 under sires of their dams. From it, it appears that the daughters of Blue Bull contributed 22 standard performers. Other sires of the dams of six or more new ones included in this table are Electioneer 15, Belmont 14, Nutwood 14, Red Wilkes 13, Strathmore 13, Alycone 10, Daniel Lambert 9, Dictator 9, George Wilkes 9, Happy Medium 9, Kentucky Prince 8, Mambrino Patchen 8, Mambrino King 7, Rooker 7, Onward 7, Jay Gould 7, Almont 6, Messenger Durce 6.

KNEE actors, with size, substance and style are now so very scarce that the seller can obtain substantially his own price, but the breeder does not yet get enough for it. The dealer and commission man profit according to the amount received but that will all soon be changed. The breeders have finally "dropped on to" the fact that the supply is all too short, and the howl of the itinerant dealer that there are still plenty of horses is no longer met with instructions to go into the yard and pick out the best for a hundred dollars. The dealer is, or very soon will be, the beggar. He will have to beg to buy, where for a few years back the breeder has been begging him to buy.

JAMES BUTLER, the owner of Direct, 2:05½, has the following California-bred ones in training. They are in the training barn under the supervision of John Kelly: Directum Kelly, 2:23½, b h, 1894, by Direct—Rosa Ludwig, by Anteeo; Ed B. Young, 2:22, b g, 1894, by Direct—Lilly Langtry; Honey, r f, 1894, by Direct—Belle McGregor, by Robert McGregor; Miss Daphne, blk f, 1895, by Alcantara—Daphne (dam of Dazzle, 2:29½), by Jay Gould; Directwood, b g, 1895, by Direct—Fannie K., by Redwood; Soon Enough, b g, 1-94, by Direct—Midget, by Inca; Sophistry, blk f, 1895, by Direct—Fanny K., by Redwood; Bay filly, 1896, by Direct—Fanny K., by Redwood; Anteeo, b g, 1894, by Direct—Eva G., by Anteeo; Directvolvo, b g, 1894, by Direct—Lady Emma, by Anteeo.

THE executors of the estate of the late Andrew M. Moore, of Philadelphia, have decided to sell at auction the widely known Cloverdale farm and all the horses thereon, about 195 in number. It is said that the establishment represents an investment of more than $1,000,000, nearly all the noted horses in the Cloverdale Stud having been purchased when the boom in trotters was at its height. Director, 2:17, who with Red Wilkes, is at the head of the stud, was sold to Moore by Monroe Salisbury in 1892 for the reported price of $75,000. Among the noted mares on the place are Mary Marshall, 2:12½; Ballona, 2:11½; Mambrino Maid, 2:15½, and the dams of Nancy Hanks, 2:04; Joe Patchen, 2:01½; Frank Agan, 2:03½; Phoebe Wilkes, 2:08½; Direct, 2:05½; Dan Jupid, 2:09½; Jack, 2:11½; Red Bud, 2:12½; Red Cherry, 2:14½; Island Wilkes, 2:13½; Florida, 2:14½, and other fast ones.

THE horse owners and buyers in Boston will soon realize that all the talk of available and desirable horses becoming scarce throughout the country is not a jolly, but an actual fact, and before two years have passed horses will command fancy prices. A prominent shipper to this market recently informed me that it was now almost impossible on a trip to get a full carload of good horses in the west, and many buyers are shipping their horses together to fill a car. That in a small Iowa town in one day eight buyers were present hustling for horses, and only succeeded in getting four horses, where in former years each would have secured a load. Since the first of January horses have advanced in price twenty per cent.—The Boston Traveler.

MORE than one hundred years ago Count Alexis Orloff, by crossing an Arabian stallion on Dutch mares, founded what is now known as the Orloff breed of trotters. The Orloff trotters have been the fastest European trotters of modern times, and as a breed possess good form and stamina. Their speed cannot compare with American trotters, but it is considerable and possibly greater than American trotters could show under the same conditions. In 1845 the Russian Government bought the Orloff stud from the Countess A. A. Orloff, daughter of its founder. There were twenty-one stallions and 194 broodmares of the Orloff trotter breed, and nine stallions and 112 broodmares of the Orloff hack breed. The Government now sells annually all the surplus stock which is not required for the Government studs.

THERE was a meeting held at the office of G. E. Shore at Lemoore Tuesday afternoon for the purpose of forming an association having for its object the putting in repair of the race track south of town and the holding of a number of good racing events there during the coming months. An association to be known as the Lemoore Track Association was formed. On Wednesday another meeting was held, at which a lease was drawn up and signed for the track on the Fox and Sweetland property south of town. The track will be placed in good condition and probably the first racing event under the auspices of the newly formed association will be held some time in the latter part of May. The following are the officers of the Association: President, G. E. Shore; Vice-President, Frank Bullard; Secretary, W. D. Madden; Treasurer, Chas. Bailey; Directors—R. Scally, J. N. Hayes, C. H. Bailey.—Lemoore Leader.

MR. JAMES WALKER tells a good story of a too much bred pacer once owned by the Michigan horseman, Cole Lincoln. This horse's front legs had a close affinity for each other, and Cole tried all the theories known to the modern foot conjurors to stop the horse from hitting his knees; but the more he tried the more forcibly the horse's legs got acquainted. The pacer, trotting bred and plenty of it, was one of those leg-weavers that could just brush boots, hide and all off his legs before he got to the bend, and swing the corner on one leg. He had speed to waste, but he was only visible as he flashed past the spectator; going and coming it was Fenton's boot factory flying through the air. Poor Cole discouragingly remarked at the finish of a heat, after he had counted the horse's legs to see that they were all there: "D— you, I'll bet money that I keep your legs from fighting," and enticing himself away to the stable he packed a flour sack full of hay and tied it between the pacer's front legs. Spreaders were simply not in it. A coach dog could have galloped between his front legs without danger of losing a hair.

At the Detroit riding club's coming horse show, which will be held some time about April 10, a new feature of the programme will be tandem driving as it was originally planned. In England in the early days of the tandems, the traces on the leaders were rarely taut, the wheel horse doing all the work except in hill climbing. The leader was a hunter, and after the drive he was unhooked, saddled and used in following the hounds. At the April show there will be a class for such turnouts. The tandem team will count a certain percentage and then the leader will be saddled and ridden over the hurdles, this also counting. Members of the club are schooling their hunters to lead tandems and anticipate much contention in this class. It was expected that the dates of the show would have been more positively announced before this time, but the uncertainty has been caused by the failure of the Toronto club to respond to letters relative to its dates. The two clubs will work together for mutual benefit, and many horses are pledged for exhibition at both shows. The Detroit riding club's annual exhibition is always an enjoyable event, and successful from a financial as well as a social point of view.

COLONEL W. L. SIMMONS, who raced George Wilkes and afterwards took him to Kentucky, estimates the earnings of George Wilkes on the turf and in the stud at $500,000, but he says there is no way to even approximate the earnings of George Wilkes' get. His descendants are not confined in Kentucky, for they are found in every State in the Union where the trotter is bred, and many of them are now doing stud duty in foreign countries. A Kentucky turf writer in speaking of Wilkes says: "It is within the bounds of reason to say that during the nine years that George Wilkes was in the stud in Kentucky he enriched the State of Kentucky and the Union to the extent of $1,000,000 per year up to the present time. Being a race horse of most pronounced type, George Wilkes implanted in his offspring that desire to win and that bulldog courage which is as necessary to success as speed itself. Crossed on the finer Mambrino Patchen mares, which were so plentiful in Kentucky during the time he was in the stud, he got some of the most perfect specimens of the trotter yet obtained. It was this happy cross which made the milk peddler, Timothy C. Anglin, rich, and it was the same cross that caused Colonel E. G. Stoner, who was in financial straits, to become one of the wealthiest men in Bourbon county. The retirement of Colonel Simmons and Mr. Anglin from the ranks of trotting-horse breeders this week has left it to other hands to still further demonstrate the value of the Wilkes blood. As a progenitor of extreme speed George Wilkes also stands without a peer. The total number of stallions which have produced ten or more 2:15 performers is 16, and 10 of these 16 are by George Wilkes. Every winner of the great Kentucky Futurity has been a descendant of George Wilkes, and four of the six winners of the two-year-old division of that great race are also descendants. On two separate days at a meeting in Lexington every race on the program was won by a descendant of George Wilkes, and on each day there were two stake races.

THE SADDLE.

ANDY BLAKELY, the jumping impresario, left for the East Monday night.

BESSIE ABBOTT, a Barksdale winner, is an own sister to Buckrene, being by Buchanan—Irene.

St. JACOB, the erstwhile champion jumper, has been turned out at Holly's ranch near Vallejo.

SUSQUEHANNA (dam of Potomac), the property of Perry Belmont, New York, has been bred to Tenny.

CHRIS. FITZGERALD, the new Jockey Club starter, was a telegraph operator before getting into the racing game.

SAM HILDBRETH has fired All Over, Captive and a few other of his patched-up cripples. They will be given a rest.

GEORGE RYM, of Little Rock, who was killed Tuesday at Washington, was a well-known racing man eight or ten years ago.

TOD SLOAN bet $1,000 on Bellicoso Saturday and tried to purchase the crack sprinter from Naglee Burke after the race.

"SNAPPER" GARRISON, the once-famous jockey, will in all probability handle the flag at the Bennings and Saratoga meetings.

TOM GRIFFIN returned East last week. This is his first unsuccessful venture in California. He only retained Martha and Allie Bell.

CHARLEY THORPE is under engagement to Burns & Waterhouse for a year, consequently he will be riding out here next season.

MISTRAL II, winner of the first race Tuesday, was bred by Marcus Daly, who still owns his dam, imp. Close the Door, by Wisdom.

OLINTHUS, the brother to Diggs and Sutton, is as large as Diggs and even handsomer than Sutton. He showed quite a lot of speed for a quarter, too.

BARNEY SCHREIBER Tuesday received a dispatch that Bud Wade, his trainer at Woodlands, near St. Louis, had been killed by being run down by a train.

H. L. FRANK, of Butte, Mont., saw Senator Bland carry his colors to victory, while his Tammany filly Baracan finished second. Mr. Frank had $2,000 on the Senator.

MORTE FONSE, who captured many a hard-fought battle out here last season, is in training at Louisville. Lewis Ezell still owns the old horse, who is reported to be in good condition.

H. L. FRANK, owner of Senator Bland, E. Come and other well-known race horses, is in the city after a trip to Cincinnati and other places, and will play the horse game for a while.

WOLF JOEL, who was murdered in Africa, maintained a stable of race horses in England. Charles Archer, a brother of the celebrated jockey, Fred Archer, trained for the dead millionaire.

M. F. DWYER intends to back David II for the Lincolnshire, to be run in England on March 22d. He is by Tenny, dam Quesal, Dwyer once owned Quesal, whom he purchased from Dan Honig.

MOSSBRAE is the third Watercross to start and the second one to win. There is likely to be a strong demand for youngsters by this great English horse next winter when the yearling sales take place.

J. W. SCHORE recently stated that he had eight horses in his stable which could go a mile in the neighborhood of 1:40. They are Meadowthorpe, Macy, Algol, Timemaker, Presbyterian, Lieber Karl, Berclair and Sligo II.

In all the interior towns in California the poolrooms have all been closed, thanks to the efforts of the "Breeder and Sportsman," the leading and most reliable turf journal published in the United States.—San Jose Democrat.

In the Kempton Park International Two-year-old Stakes for 1899, Lord William Beresford enters bc by imp. Pontiac, dam Tarbouche. K. Crocker enters ch f by Dobbins, dam My Favorite (the dam of Handspring). P. Lorillard enters ch c by Locohatchee, dam Coryphee.

NEW ORLEANS, March 14.—Everett E. Box, a young white man of Hillsboro, Tex., a follower of race horses, and employed at the local tracks, killed Jim Sanford, a negro, this morning. Sanford, a giant in strength, had frequently abused Box, and the shooting was in self-defense.

WILLIAM MARTIN, who seems one the heaviest stockholders in the old Garfield Park Club and later one of the three partners who built and equipped the splendid Harlem course, died suddenly at his home in Chicago, March 1. He was only 37 years old. He died worth at least $100,000.

CHARTRUSE, Johnny Humphreys' game little "blonde" Cheviot mare, has run her last race. She will be sent to the Kavanaugh ranch and bred to imp. Golden Garter, sire of Lobos. She should make a great stud matron, and it's our belief that Golden Garter will prove the greatest sire in America.

QUITE a number of California bred horses have been entered in the Greater New York steeplechase handicap at two and one-half miles. Among the number are Snowdown, by Fitzjames; Bonaparte, by Sir Modred; Big Strive, by Surinam; Rifle, by Maxim; Sir Play, by Sir Modred, and Prize, by Sir Modred.

THE well-known Chesterbrook Farm, the property of A. J. Cassatt, near Philadelphia, Pa., was the scene of a destructive fire March 3d. Many valuable cows were burned in the stables, which were entirely destroyed, but the thoroughbreds and hackneys were saved.

CAPT. J. B. VILEY, Stonewall Stud, Ky., has sold and shipped to W. L. Powers, New York, the two-year-old colt Little Jack Horner (brother to Jack Martin), by George Kinney, dam Princess, by Princeton. He is said to be a very handsome and promising colt.

FRED FOSTER has purchased the three-year-old chestnut filly Eva Rice, by Masetto—Miss Rye, from E. Slaughter for $4,000 and has shipped the filly to New Orleans. Eva Rice was the best in her class in St. Louis last year. She has a world of speed, is game and a weight carrier.

THERE are about fifteen young thoroughbreds at the Oakwood Park Stock Farm which may be seen at the race meetings next winter. This farm has heretofore been devoted exclusively to the breeding and care of trotting and carriage horses. Major Ban is the premier stallion of the thoroughbred department.

THE crack New Zealand three-year-old, Uniform, is to be sent to England this season to be run in the classic events. He is by Hotchkiss, a son of Musket. Survivor, an Australian horse by Lochiel, is also to be sent to England, so that the colonies will be represented by Aurum, New Haven and Merman, besides the above-mentioned horses.

"BIG JIM GARLAND has been lying at the point of death with pneumonia at Dr. McNutt's hospital, 1220 Sutter street. He was taken down the day before the last meeting at Ingleside ended. Two nurses have been in constant attendance on the popular trainer of the Santa Anita horses, and "Big Jim" will soon be at his post if he has no relapse.

JOCKEY MIKE HENNESSY had a narrow escape last Tuesday. He had the mount on San Mateo, and while running well up near the front of the big bunch, the sprinter was either bumped by one of the other contenders or else stumbled falling to his knees. The horse was played for a "killing," and a big wad of coin was burnt up. He fell back, finishing next to last.

JOHN RODEGAP has the good filly Ferroll and six others in training at Lexington. Here is his string: Bishop Reed, b c, 4, by Bishop—Octa Reed; Ferroll, b f, 3, by Himyar—Madam Julie; Her Favor, b f, 3, by Himyar—Favores; Ierne, b f, 3, by Teuton—Islette; Don Orsino, b c, 3, by Candlemas—Goldie Cad; Arado, ch g, 2, by Bob Miles—Lela; Capsicum, b c, 2, by Himyar—Antivola.

THE Saratoga Racing Association has in contemplation a trophy to be contested for by Tod Sloan and Tommy Burns, the two best lightweights in this country. Tod will ride for Fleichmann and Burns for the Schoers. Both stables will send out a powerful string of racers, and in view of the keen rivalry existing between the two riders it is thought the idea ought to prove a very fetching attraction.

THE example of Frederick Gebhard, who has announced his intention of entering his steeplechaser Olindo in the Liverpool Grand National Steeplechase in 1899, and J. E. McDonald, whose horse Rensselaer is already on the other side, will be followed by Craig W. Wadsworth. Mr. Wadsworth says he will take a couple of steeplechasers with him, but he did not have much material in his cross-country string which raced here last season.

SAM HILDBRETH has explained the running of Yemen to the satisfaction of the judges. We understand that it was the same old chestnut—hadn't bet a dollar on the horse. The fact remains, however, that Yemen improved wonderfully from Saturday to Tuesday, and that Saturday you could get a juicy price, Tuesday you couldn't. And there was all kinds of money Tuesday to bet on the horse that had shown so poorly on Saturday, when nobody wanted him at any figure.

A. J. ALEXANDER has presented to Dr. J. D. Neet, Versailles, Ky., the well known stallion King Alfonso, who from sentiment was not sold in the closing out Woodburn sale last fall. King Alfonso is a bay horse, foaled 1872, by imp. Phaeton, dam Capitola, by Vandal, out of a mare by imp. Margrave, etc., and was one of the most fashionable sires of the country a few years ago. Though 26 years old, he is in good health, and will serve a few mares this spring. He is very active for his years, and Dr. Neet guarantees him a good home the rest of his life.

NEWSTEAD, a great race horse in his day, died recently near Port McDonnell, South Australia, from the effects of the excessive heat. Bred in 1882 by Sir Thomas Elder, at Morphettville, Newstead was sold as a yearling for 31 guineas. As a two-year-old he ran four times and was never beaten at that age. Besides winning the Maribyrnong Plate, Newstead distinguished himself at the same meeting—the V. R. C. Spring Meeting of 1884—by beating Malua in the Flying Stakes in brilliant style, and absurdly short odds were accepted about his winning the double event, Victoria Derby and Melbourne Cup, but he failed to stand a preparation and was scratched.

RILEY GRANNAN, Bob Rose and Frank Conneville, a trio of noted plungers, are back in New York from Europe. They arrived on the Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse. Mr. Rose has been enjoying a two months' vacation in Paris and London. Grannan went abroad last fall just after the Appellate decision was handed down sustaining the Jockey Club in expelling him from the race tracks under their jurisdiction. Conneville accompanied him. They attended the fall race meetings in England, and later went on a tour through Southern France, Italy and Egypt, spending considerable time in Cairo. They have lately been seeing the sights of Paris. Grannan is looking as well as looking as well and contented as though he had never had any trouble with The Jockey Club. He said to-day that he had a most enjoyable time abroad, but was glad to be back in New York. He has taken his discipline at the hands of the turf authorities in the right spirit, and the general impression is that he may be restored to favor at the opening of the season. He will probably remain here until the Washington meeting.—New York dispatch.

SEMICOLON, winner of the Racing Stakes on Saturday, is by Exile (winner of the Brooklyn Handicap, etc.), out of Period, by Mr. Pickwick, and was bred at Charles Reed's place Fairview, Gallatin, Tenn. Buena Ventura, the runner-up, is also a Tennessean, she having been foaled at famous Belle Meade, near Nashville, Tenn. The latter is by Luke Blackburn from Tommy Bell, therefore full sister to Jim Blackburn.

St. LOUIS, March 15.—The breeders' law under which the poolroom cases have been recently tried, has been declared constitutional by Judge Hirzel in the St. Louis Circuit Court at Clayton. The decision was rendered in response to a demurrer filed by the counsel for the defendants in the case of the State vs. George Ehrlich et al., managers of the Brooklyn Turf Exchange, in which the Court was asked to quash the indictments against them for pool-selling. Judge Hirzel refused and the accused will have to stand trial.

SENATOR PAGE has introduced into the New York State Senate at Albany a bill amending the act creating the State Racing Commission to provide that the Governor shall appoint some suitable persons to supervise the collection of the tax, whose duty it shall be to ascertain and report to the comptroller the gross earnings of the racing corporations, and who shall have access to the ground, books and records of each corporation. The person appointed is to hold office for five years and shall receive an annual salary of $3,000 and $1,000 additional for expenses.

TRAVERSEER, winner of the $1,500 Baldwin Handicap in such commanding style, was bred at Frank Harper's famous Nantura Stud, Midway, Ky. He was early in life taken to Bermuda, and there grew to his gigantic size, for he it known that Traverser is one of best-developed and tallest youngsters of his age seen in this country for many a day. Imp. Rossington, sire of Traverser, is by Doncaster (winner of the Derby and sire of Bend Or) out of Lily Agnes (dam of the renowned Ormonde). The last-named was sired by Bend Or, hence Rossington and Ormonde are more than half-brothers.

It seems that Ben Brush will not go to England, notwithstanding the warnings of several Eastern turf writers. It was also reported that he was in none too good fix. This is apparently all bosh, for a turfman now sojourning in this State received a letter from the far East the other day, in which the writer said the great son of Bramble was more forward in his work this spring than ever before. This will make him the "big thing" in the future book betting on the Brooklyn. The same letter also said Hamburg was going great guns, and had to be let down in his gallops. This does away with the "bad leg" story.

T. W. COULTER's stable, which has been wintering at La Belle Farm in charge of J. A. Kelly, was shipped to Louisville on Tuesday, March 1st. It comprises the following horses: Redskin, ch h, 8, by Runnymede or Pontiac—Girofle; Hothersall, br c, 3, by Fordham—May Ban; Gnome, b f, 3, by Jim Gore—Glen Fairy; Prince Flo, b f, 2, by Prince Royal—Florence E; Sun God, ch c, 2, by Ferra Cotta—Sunshine; Riches, blk f, 2, by Burlington—Treasure Trove; White Pine, b f, 2, by Eola—Lightwood; The New Woman, b f, 2, by Dandie Dinmont—Miss Dawson; Antiquary, ch h, 2, by Dandie Dinmont—Gyda.

EVERYTHING points to the very early purchase of the California Jockey Club track at Emeryville by the club. Mrs. Margaret A. Mee, relict of the late Judge James Mee, is the owner and Thos. H. Williams had a long lease on the property, which amounts to 103 acres. The price agreed upon is something like $120,000. For some time past experts have been trying to arrive at the true value of the land. The improvements made on the property amount to $302,000, and this, with the price of the land and contemplated improvements, will make the plant stand the club a round $500,000. President T. H. Williams Jr. is supposed to have a controlling interest in the club, having secured the stock of John Humphreys, which amounted to 14 per cent. Col. D. M. Burns is also heavily interested, as is M. A. Gunst. The purchase of this land at the price mentioned shows that President Williams has the greatest faith in the future of racing around the metropolis of the Pacific Coast.

THE field book has had its day. At least it is losing caste in the Southern States. Eddie Austin, the bookmaker who has secured the betting privilege at the Newport (Ky.) track does not look with favor on it. There are two strong arguments that can be used against the field book. It prevents a larger number of pencilers from doing business in the main betting ring, and there is no valid reason why a dollar bettor shouldn't get as much for his money as one who bets two dollars. Day after day horses with 8 to 2 chalked opposite their names in the big ring are quoted at even money in the field books, and the unfortunate speculator down to his "last bean" must accept this big cut or change his dollar to another pocket. No field book has been in operation at the New Orleans track for four years, notwithstanding the fact that it was a most prolific source of income to the association, usually clearing a large sum during the winter meeting. If a horse is 15 to 1 in the ring, why should a dollar bettor be compelled to take from 8 to 10 for his money? Some day the associations out this way will get good to the people when it is too late.

AMONG the six thoroughbred sires which will stand this season at the Graditz stud, the property of the Royal Prussian Administration (says a London paper of December 3d), are Flageolet, by Plutus, who is no less than twenty-eight years old, and his son LeDestrier (sire of Stuart), both having been imported from France. But the most celebrated stallion at Graditz is Chamant, as this splendid type of the thoroughbred has for many years been the most successful sire in Germany. He was bred by M. Lefevre at the stud from which he derives his name, and won the Middle Park Plate and Two Thousand Guineas for Count de Lagrange, while he would also have won the Epsom Derby but for an accident. Chamant is now twenty-four years old, but his stock continue. Baron Schickler's horse Le Justicier, who won the Eclipse Stakes, also stands at Graditz, but the only thoroughbred sire imported from England is Delphos by Necromancer, whereas of the thoroughbred mares the great majority have been bought in England by Count Lehdorff, who has forgotten more about horse-breeding than most English stud owners ever knew or are likely to know.

THE WEEKLY BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN

JUDSON K. MOORE, PROPRIETOR.

The Turf and Sporting Authority of the Pacific Coast.

— OFFICE —

No. 313 BUSH ST., SAN FRANCISCO
P. O. BOX 2300.

TERMS—One Year, $3; Six Months, $1.75; Three Months, $1.

STRICTLY IN ADVANCE.

Money should be sent by postal order, draft or by registered letter addressed to Judson K. Moore, 313 Bush St., San Francisco, Cal. Communications must be accompanied by the writers' name and address, not necessarily for publication, but as a private guarantee of good faith.

San Francisco, Saturday, March 19, 1898.

Our Driving Associations.

The interest being taken in the associations devoted to driving is increasing in every leading city in the United States. The many roads that have been put in order for bicycles have furnished splendid driveways, and the great dispersal sales of fine trotters which have taken place this year have afforded opportunities for all who love to ride and drive to secure the very cream of American light harness horses at extremely low prices; lower, in fact, than similarly-bred ones will ever be again. Vehicles with rubber tires and stylish harness at low prices have been sought after, until to-day there are more fine rigs in use than at any time in the history of the United States.

After purchasing the horse and paraphernalia, membership in one of the leading associations followed as a natural sequence; hence, the membership in these thriving organizations is increasing rapidly, and includes many of the wealthiest and influential men in the community. In and around San Francisco there are two of these associations, and the great improvement in the class of horses the members drive is attributed to the intense rivalry for supremacy between the members of these organizations, for "competition" they say, "is the life of trade," and whenever these gentlemen hear of a horse or mare that is to be sold, provided it has all the requisite roadhorse qualities, the seller is financially benefited. Hence, it is no unusual thing to see on the speed track in the Golden Gate Park or on the Alameda Driving Park, horses that have scored for the word in many a hard-fought battle, and are as familiar to racegoers as Goldsmith Maid was in her palmiest days.

Prices for good horses have increased, and as the supply here is becoming exhausted through importations from our leading stock farms to the Eastern market and lack of enterprise on the part of our small breeders, there is no doubt horses suitable for fast work and having all the other qualities, will bring higher prices than the most sanguine of our horsemen at present anticipate.

With this prospect, breeders of light-harness horses should have no hesitancy in breeding their mares at once, for in 1903, when the youngsters are old enough to be driven, every good one will bring remunerative prices.

The P. C. T. H. B. A. Meeting.

Formulating an entirely new programme of races, different from any heretofore gotten up in the trotting world, has taken considerable time and thought. Secretary Kelley has been working in conjunction with the Speed Committee and next week a meeting of the Board of Directors will be called to pass upon their work. When it is presented for the consideration of the horsemen of this Coast, we believe it will meet with their approval. It is better to be a little slow and sure in matters of this kind, and as the horsemen in California have not really commenced to worked their horses, (for entries will not close until June 1st), they will have no cause for complaint.

THE attention of our readers is called to the advertisement of J. M. Nelson's speed sale at the Alameda race track. Mr. Nelson is erecting a number of large box stalls, adjoining those he had on St. Charles and Eagle avenue and will have them in readiness for all horses consigned to this sale.

M. NATHANSON, the efficient Secretary, telegraphs: Lakeside Jockey Club meeting at Roby will begin, May 5th. No purse less than $400.

Great Broodmares.

It is a well-known fact that very few great broodmares have been offered for sale in California. When matrons have achieved greatness through the performances of their produce, their owners dislike to part with them. That is the reason why all the leading stock-farm owners have kept their famous mares until death claimed them. L. J. Rose kept old Minnehaha and cared for her until she passed away. At Palo Alto, every broodmare that became noted has been retained years after its days of usefulness as a matron ended, and it would take a large sum of money to day to purchase Beautiful Bells, Rebecca, Waxana, or the score of other famous ones which were purchased by the late Senator Stanford. Beneath the oaks, the laurels, and the pines, these matrons find comfort and ease in their declining years, and their wants are attended to as carefully as when they were in their prime.

At Rancho del Paso, the old trotting-bred mares are also carefully attended to. Sentiment controls all other thoughts when these old matrons are pointed out to the visitor.

It is only at the dispersal sales of our large stock farms that these valued members of the harem are disposed of. In the Eastern States, so many of these famous mares have been shipped across the ocean that Peter C. Kellogg, the most observant of all who have devoted the better part of their lives to this industry, has made a proposition that a small import duty be placed on all mares sent out of the United States. He takes this position, that no matter what kind of a mare is exported, she is of sufficient value to be a good one from which to breed, and therefore her exportation is detrimental to the interests of American breeders. There is much wisdom in Mr. Kellogg's contention, says "The Horseman." If a mare is good enough for an exporter to buy for the European market, as a rule she is quite good enough to keep at home and mate with a good stallion for the perpetuation of her race. The duty should, of course, be graded according to sorts and values, but that fact does not in any way affect the general proposition. Obviously, it would be senseless to place the same barrier to the exportation of a common hundred and fifty dollar mare as against the exportation of a thousand dollar high stepper or still more valuable fast trotter, but the principle involved is the same. The reason why Mr. Kellogg's position is well taken is that already far too many good mares have been shipped out of the country in the last four years. It will be remembered that up to 1893 the prices of horses were high. Then came the panic and values kept tumbling so long and so far that breeders wondered if they were ever going to reach bottom, let alone rise again. Breeding operations came to a practical standstill and the breeders, having, for the time being, no more use for mares than for geldings, let the dealers top their lots time and time again, without any respect to the sex of the animals selected. So long as the dealer would give money for them, they were let go and thus an enormous number of really good mares found their way into the shafts in our own large cities and across the ocean. Prior to the time mentioned most farmers had done their utmost to retain the best mares and when they told buyers to take their pick, naturally the mares were the first to go. In this way a very serious damage was done the industry, damage that it will take years and years to repair. Now that the breeders have reached the conclusion that there will be a shortage in the horse supply to face before very long, the most of them have determined to begin breeding again; but, having sold their best mares, they have only the seconds and tailings with which to go to work. The best of the mares offered for sale, no matter what their breed or kind, are those that alone are bought for export, hence the more mares that are shipped out of the country the more aggravated will the condition described become. To be sure, to place the export duty now on mares, seems rather like locking the door after the steed has been stolen, but better late than never is another proverb fully worthy of recognition, and we should certainly try to keep such good ones as we have left, especially of the heavy draft and high-stepping coach and carriage classes. We have plenty of speed to sell to all nations who desire to buy it, and there is not likely to be any such shortage of speed material within the next few years as there is of the other sorts mentioned; but even granting that, we can hardly have too many of the kind of mares the foreigners desire to buy to race in Europe and later place in the stud. Such mares as Countess Eve, Horrelia Wilkes, Abnet and others of that class, had better stay at home than go abroad, for they are none too plentiful as it is and there is an abundance of other speed equally available for export. Leaving politics entirely out of the question for the time being and reasoning only along the line of demonstrated fact, it must be admitted that Mr. Kellogg's position is well taken.

A. B. Spreckels Elected.

The news of the election of Mr. A. B. Spreckels as President of the State Board of Agriculture will be hailed with delight by every farmer, stockbreeder and manufacturer in California. Having many interests in common with all those who are engaged in these leading industries, he will see that nothing will be left undone to keep them prominently before the people. Mr. Spreckels is as warm a friend of the trotting-horse industry as we have in California and that great industry will not be overlooked in the future.

In every public office President Spreckels has held, he has made an enviable record. Being endowed with keen business qualifications, rare tact, and great perceptive faculties, combined with a most genial disposition, he is a born leader of men; and everyone interested in the welfare of this great organization feels satisfied with his election, knowing that whatever he undertakes he will perform in a creditable and honorable manner.

His predecessor C. M. Chase retires from office cognizant of the fact that he has made thousands of friends throughout the Pacific Coast during the many years he held office. His devotion to the interests of the Board was supreme; he never seemed to tire in attending to his official duties and the many cares which were crowded upon him by many thoughtless ones who were always seeking and sometimes demanding favors. In his return to private life Mr. Chase carries with him the best wishes of everyone who has attended the State Fair.

Wm. Corbitt's Sale.

The Los Angeles Meeting.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Los Angeles Association held last Saturday, it was decided to hold our Fall meeting on the following dates: October 6, 7, 8, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21 and 22, being a fifteen days' meeting. The Board also decided to open four stakes to close about June 1st, as follows: A 2:15 trot purse $1500; a 2:30 trot purse $1500; a 2:15 pace purse $1500, and a 2:30 pace purse $1500. These stakes will be trotted and paced at our Fall meeting. The meeting will be a mixed one of harness races, and running races. We have made an inner track for the running horses, and expect to have as good a track for the running horses as we have for the trotters. We can by using the two tracks, keep them both in good order, the one hard for the harness horses and the other soft for the running horses, without two tracks it is simply impossible to have a mixed meeting. We found that out last year. We shall offer several good purses later on for the harness horses, and shall watch with a good deal of interest the novel meeting to be given by the P. C. T. H. B. A. and shall adopt any innovations that may prove successful. We expect to open some stakes for the running horses as well, that matter is now in the hands of a committee, to report as soon as possible.

Rest assured that Los Angeles will be strictly in it when their programme is made up. LEWIS THORNE.

Australasian Turf Notes.

In the nature of things the death of Robinson Crusoe could not be unexpected seeing that, foaled in 1873, he was in his twenty-fifth year. All the same his demise is much to be regretted, for he was undoubtedly a great acquisition to the stud horses of this colony and to Hawke's Bay in particular, where his services were at the disposal of breeders from the time of his arrival from Melbourne after the disposal of the St. Alban's stud. The son of Angler and Chrysolite first engaged attention in Australia as the Chrysolite colt, getting his name owing to the fact of being the survivor from the Dandodoug, which was wrecked between Sydney and Melbourne. This was after he had won thrice as a two-year-old in the most important of the classic races for Mr. C. B. Fisher, for whom he also won the A. J. C. Derby and the A. J. C. Mares' Produce Stakes and then the A. J. C. St. Leger running for the first time in his appropriate name. It was in his seventh race that he first tasted defeat, but it was a faked victory by Pride of the Hills in the Cumberland Stakes, which Robinson Crusoe a day later proved by easily running over his opponent. He won several important events as a four and a five-year-old, and was generally regarded as one of the best performers seen in the Australian colonies. As a sire his name will be handed down with respect in racing history, for he achieved much distinction. The best known among the numerous winners left by Robinson Crusoe are Navigator, who secured the A. J. C. Derby and Leger, V. R. C. Derby and Leger and Australian Cup; Trident, winner of the like events and in addition the Champion Stakes; The Sailor Prince, Preston, The Officer and La Tosca, Leger winners; The Skipper, winner of the Metropolitan, and The Workmen. The worth of the last named is well known to the New Zealanders; Navigator and Trident were the best of their years in Australia. Sunrise, another of his sons, has sired numerous winners. And it is in the second generation that the value of Robinson Crusoe is being exemplified. Mares by him have become quite noted as winner producers, and in the future they will doubtless be much more cherished than has been the case in the past. Some of the more noted of his daughters are Copra (dam of Coil, Camola and Cocos), Hippo (dam of St. Hippo), Fleurette (dam of Boulanger and grandam of True Blue), Madcap (dam of Malvoli and Maluma), Solitude (dam of Solitaire), Radiant (dam of Lustrue and Sequit), Spy Glas (dam of Spectator), and Patters dam of Old Clo'. It is not too much to hope that the Young Robinson Crusoe foals and his progeny from mares that visited him this season will turn out successful representatives of their famous sire.

New Jockey Club Measures.

At their meeting Thursday the officials of The Jockey Club disposed of quite a mass of important business, the most important being the adoption of a new rule for the government of the starter's department. It reads as follows:

"Rule 105. The starter shall have authority to fine or suspend a jockey for disobedience of his orders, or for attempting to take any unfair advantage, but suspension of jockey shall not take effect until after the last race of the day of his suspension. The starter shall not impose any fine exceeding $200 for any offense, nor suspend beyond the last day of the meeting, and he shall report all fines and suspensions to the clerk of scales in writing. Stewards only may modify or remit the penalties imposed by the starter."

This is practically a reinstatement of the old rule and will give Starter Fitzgerald a much greater measure of authority over the jockeys than his immediate predecessor enjoyed.

Paragraph 2 of the Rule 63 was altered to read as follows: "In all cases of sale by private treaty or public auction written acknowledgement of both parties that the horse was sold with engagements is necessary to prove the fact; but when the horse is sold or claimed out of a selling race the advertised conditions of the race are sufficient evidence."

S. S. Howland was appointed steward to represent the Jockey Club at the Washington spring meeting, which opens at Benning on Easter Monday. The following list of officers appointed for the meeting was approved: Stewards, Jesse Brown and Samuel Ross; Starter, Matt Byrnes; Judge, C. McDowell; Handicapper, W. S. Vosburgh; Clerk of the Sales, H. G. Crickmore; Paddock and Patrol Judge, J. L. Hill.

French Coaching Stallion.

The great French coach stallion, Darnetal II. has arrived here from Manitoba. He was imported from Europe to Canada and has taken first prize wherever shown. In appearance he is an ideal coacher, having size, style, disposition, action and color. He stands 17 hands and weighs 1650 pounds. He is the best proportioned horse of his size that was ever seen in California. He has plenty of knee and hock action and carries himself very stylish. In color, he is a dark mahogany bay, and from the tip of his nose to his fetlocks is faultless. We understand this grand horse is for sale at a very reasonable figure and should he not be disposed of make the season somewhere in one of the bay counties. He would prove a valuable acquisition to any stock farm. As a sire, Darnetal has proven his worth, from very small mares he has produced large, salable and stylish horses. None of them are coarse, although having plenty of bone and quality.

HOOF-BEATS.

CY. MULKEY has gone to the Klondyke.

JOCKEY W. MARTIN is to leave next Thursday for Memphis, where he will ride for Pat Dunne.

GEO. F. BECKER will take Zombro, 2:11, to Portland, Oregon, June 3d, where he will make a summer season with him.

JUDGE CARTER will not remain here to officiate on the summer circuit, as he has engagement for the Canadian circuit.

JOCKEY JOE PRIGGOTT contract with Ed Corrigan expires next week, consequently he will soon be seen in the saddle again.

THE public are hereby warned that a solicitor for advertising or subscriptions named E. E. Parsons is no longer in the employ of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.—March 1, 1898

A NUMBER of thoroughbreds have been shipped to Honolulu, H. I., lately, to prepare them for the races there on June 11th. The victory of Sympathetic's Last has stimulated horsemen to try and see what they can do.

R. H. NEWTON of Woodland, who used to be a familiar driver on the California circuit, having been the trainer and driver of Thomas Ryder, 2:13½ and other notable ones, died last Monday at his home after a protracted illness.

A NUMBER of horsemen are preparing to return East to follow the game. Many are satisfied with their winter's enjoyment, while a few who have not been favored by Dame Fortune's smiles will return next winter and try the game again.

MARCUS DALY is to race Scottish Chieftain on the Montana circuit this year. The owner of the Bitter Root Stock Farm doubtless wishes that he had had him in Montana last season, as he lost $14,000 on the son of Inverness in the Realization.

JOHN E. MADDEN may sell Plaudit before the racing season opens, as several prominent turfmen are negotiating for him. Tod Sloan's employers, the Fleischmanns, offered, it is said, $17,500 for the Kentucky Derby candidate, and it is likely $20,000 will land him should it be offered.

ONE of the fastest novices yet made at Gravesend this spring was accomplished by Meehanis, who was sired by imp. Golden Garter at Rancho del Paso. The dam of Meehanis is Fedalma. As Lobos is also by Golden Garter, it would appear that the English horse promises to make his mark in the stud.

"CURLEY" BROWN has filled almost all his dates for the season of 1898. "Curley" will open with the red flag at Nashville, continue at Newport, and cover the so-called Canadian circuit, made up of Highland Park, Fort Erie, Montreal and Windsor. Brown will close the season with the Nashville fall meeting, as he did in 1897.

THERE was a lively meeting of the P. C. J. C. Board of Stewards in the Palace Hotel Thursday night. Steeplechase Jockeys McMahon and Peters were ruled off, as well as the horse Mestor and his owner, J. J. Cassidy. The Board also recommended that Steeplechase Jockeys W. Clancy and Kelly be denied the privilege of the track.

CY MULKEY has gone to the Klondike. He is an old miner and knows more about prospecting than nine-tenths of those who have preceded him. Another veteran prospector is also waiting for the snow to melt in Alaska, and that is Monroe Salisbury. Mr. Salisbury, like Mr. Mulkey, has spent many winters in Northern Idaho and Dakota.

JOHN A. McKERRON, the famous horse boot and fine harness manufacturer, has just completed a handsome four-hand russet leather set of harness for Messrs. Tobin and Simpkins of Burlingame. It is one of the best made, and finest seen at this beautiful place and is an excellent advertisement of the high class of goods Mr. McKerron makes.

A PITTSBURG dispatch to the New York Herald says: It was announced recently that the builder of a $70,000 mausoleum in Uniondale Cemetery, Alleghany, over which there has been a veil of mystery, is George E. Smith, known to patrons of the turf as "Pittsburg Phil." The noted plunger has consumption, and is now in Florida with his mother. The mausoleum is thirty feet high. In it are eleven crypts. In the middle row are only two. These are intended for Mr. Smith and his mother. It is known whose bodies will occupy the other crypts. The mausoleum was completed of New England granite, and was built by a Baltimore firm.

THE effect of the recent action by the San Francisco turf clubs in refusing to allow the results of the races to be wired directly from the grounds has been felt in this city as well as by the pool rooms in San Francisco, against whom the move was made. There used to be considerable play in this place, but now that the results of the northern races can not be had, whether in the city or outside, the players have dropped away and look for other ways of betting their money. Coursing has probably been benefitted somewhat by the change.—Los Angeles Herald.

A FRIEND, an experienced racing man, sends me the following jottings from Louisville, says "Broad Church" in the N. Y. Spirit: "The Kentucky racing bill may be considered as good as dead, and more is the pity, in one respect at least, for the pool-rooms ought to be wiped out for good and all. It is said there will be no spring meeting at Lexington, and because it would be certain to prove a losing venture. There has not been a successful meeting there in recent years, and what could be expected with Newport and other points?"

COL. M. LEWIS CLARK will be the presiding judge at the coming Memphis meeting, and "Kit" Chinn will be the starter. Col. Clark will be presiding judge at Harlem. I suppose the Harlem programme will very soon be announced. In a rough guess I should say the Harlem and Hawthorne clubs will divide the Chicago dates, and the racing will probably continue through nearly the whole season. Dick Dwyer will be the Harlem starter and likely enough he will also hold the flag at Hawthorne. I think Capt. Rees will be presiding judge at the latter track.—"Broad Church" in the N. Y. Spirit.

LEXINGTON, Ky., March 17.—For the first time in its history the famous Kentucky Association will have no spring meeting. Manager J. Hull Davidson arrived here from New York a week ago, intending to get up a meeting, but after consultation with turfmen to-night announced that the project will be abandoned. It was attempted to get legislation confining each track to thirty days each year, but without success, and since Newport has taken dates claimed by the Kentucky Association it was decided to declare the meeting off here. The course is now owned by Charles Green and a party of gentlemen of St. Louis.

speed. Altivo, 2:18½, is also represented by a grand two-year-old filly, Novelista, out of Novelist, (2) 2:27, by Norval, 2:14½, dam Elsie (dam of Falita, (2) 2:16, Rio Alto, (3) 2:16½, and Mary Osborn, (3) 2:18½) by General Benton, Rio Paso (2) by Rio Alto, (3) 2:16½, dam Rosemont, (dam of Montrose, (3) 2:18, Sweet Rose (1) 2:25½, and Mazatlan, 2:26½) by Piedmont, 2:17½, second dam Beautiful Bells, is a grand looking filly, shows speed enough now to warrant saying that she will make a fast performer.

Ellerton (2), ch g, by Advertiser, 2:15½, dam Esther (dam of Expressive (3), 2:12½, Express, 2:21, Elvina (2), 2:27, and Kelly, 2:27½), looks like a stake winner, development will make him one.

Dexter Prince, that great sire of speed, is represented by several two and three-year-olds, that for size, speed and soundness, will stand inspection by the most critical.

The first two-year-olds by Dexter Prince, from the Electioneer family, started in 1897. Prince Ansel got a race record of 2:20½, Lucrative, 2:26½, and showed a mile in 2:18½, a half in 1:06.

In this sale the get of Dexter Prince are out of some of the best Electioneer mares at Palo Alto.

Bellorio (3), br g, dam Bell Bird, 2:22, daughter of Beautiful Bells. Alaradia (3), ch f, dam Aldeana, 2:25, daughter of Eliza Dolph, by Wildside.

Princess Rose, (2), blk f, dam Sweet Rose (1), 2:25½, daughter of Rosemont, by Piedmont, 2:17½.

Flueretta (2), br f, dam Wildflower (2), 2:21, daughter of Mayflower, 2:30½, by St. Clair.

Marasquin (2), bg, dam Maiden, 2:23, daughter of May Queen, 2:20.

The shipment, taken all in all, is a fine consignment of young horses, as high-class as any that has ever left California.

Yours truly, F. W. COVEY.

HIGHLY IMPORTANT that a meeting of the Directors of the P. C. T. H. B. A. be held at an early date. Thursday next will suit the members of the Board I have seen, one having business to attend to that will interfere with his attendance at an earlier day.

There is general anxiety among owners and trainers to know what the association is likely to do, and they cannot understand the apparent supineness of those in charge. The secretary having returned from his eastern tour there is nothing in the way of holding a meeting the coming week.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

Does More Than Claimed.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug., 15, 1895.

I have used the Speed Sustaining Elixir on the horses in my stable. My verdict is, after a fair trial, that it is an article that does all (if not more) than is claimed for it. I would under no circumstances be without it.

ALONZO McDONALD.

JOHN MOORHEAD has the following in training at Pleasanton: Maud Murray (3), by Hambletonian Wilkes, dam Anna Belle, 2:27½, by Dawn; Sibyl S. (3), by Hambletonian Wilkes, dam Bertha, by Carr's Mambrino; second dam Emma, by Elmo; third dam Lady Comstock, by Norfolk; fourth dam Mary Butte, by Williamson's Belmont; Vivian T. (2), sister to Sibyl S.; Eda (3), by Hambletonian Wilkes, dam Gabilan Maid (sister to Lady Ellen, 2:29½), by Carr's Mambrino; second dam Ida May, by Williamson's Belmont; third dam Mary, by Red Buck. Mr. Moorhead has also the great sire, Hambletonian Wilkes, there making the season. He is the only son of George Wilkes in California, and is one of his best representatives.

THE Union Pacific Railroad Company has recently built some very fine resting stables, with box-stalls and other modern conveniences, including an outside paddock, at Ogden, Utah, for the free use of horse-owners shipping by this old and popular route, which will be highly appreciated. The "Overland Limited" leaving San Francisco daily at 6 P. M. for Chicago is now the finest and fastest train in the West composed of Pullman latest improved double drawing-room sleepers, dining cars and composite buffet smoking library cars, between Ogden and Chicago, also through tourist sleepers for the accommodation of passengers holding second-class tickets. For tickets and sleeping car accommodations call on D. W. Hitchcock, General Agent No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

SENATOR BLAND ran—yes, just galloped—a mile and a quarter in 2:07 yesterday with 115 pounds up, making the second time he has run the distance at that good clip in California. The other time the Senator went it in 2:07 was in the last race ever run over the old Bay District track. Had he been ridden out Thursday he could have beaten the coast record of 2:06½, made by Ruinart.

A TURF statistician has figured up that had $5 been parlayed on Moringa for the show in his last eight races, the sum total would now be $12,096, the prices received being 3 to 1, even money, 3 to 1, 2 to 1, 2 to 5, 2 to 1, even money and 2 to 1.

Timely Advice to Breeders.

Judging from the remarkable increase in the number of light harness horses that are being shipped to Europe, the horseless age, which, theoretically, has been rapidly approaching since the electric carriage and the bicycle appeared, is yet some distance in the future. European buyers for the past two years have ransacked America in quest of horses such as are found nowhere else in the world, and the big demand that has been created on the other side of the ocean has resulted in leaving the United States short on some classes which we are much in need of for breeding purposes.

Instead of horses being a drug in the market, there are not enough good ones to fill the demand. This was plainly apparent during the racing season last summer. On the Grand circuit and through the New England circuit, purses of from $1000 to $3000 were offered for free for all trotters, and yet, so scarce were the entries that at nearly all of the meetings these contests were declared off, and when the explanation of the disappearance of the high-class horses that were present in such numbers in former years was looked for, it was found that the best of the "free for allers" had been sent abroad for breeding and racing purposes.

This great reduction of stocks of high-grade harness horses has resulted in remarkable increase in the value of those remaining in the country, and the outlook for horse breeders was never more promising than at the present time. It is not alone the light harness horse that is increasing in value, but European buyers are easily picking up all the coach and heavy draft horses that are offering. F. J. Berry, of Chicago, one of the best authorities on the horse in the United States, in an address at the woolgrowers' convention at the Dalles last week, made some interesting statements regarding the revival of the horse business, and in the course of his remarks said: "My advice to breeders and horse growers is to clean out all the low grade and common stock they have on hand and prepare themselves for breeding stock that will produce the up-to-date market horse of the distinct class that the export demand calls for."—Oregonian.

Race Meeting at Redding.

A public meeting was held in the City Hall, Thursday night, to devise ways and means whereby a spring race meet might be held in Redding.

The attendance was very small, but those who did attend were quite enthusiastic and evinced a willingness and desire to do what they could individually and collectively, to hold a successful four days' season of trotting and running races.

It was the sense of the meeting that three representative men be requested to canvass the town and test the feeling of the business men. If a desire to contribute liberally is shown, another meeting will be called for the purpose of arranging a programme.

Redding will probably not hold any celebration on the Fourth of July, as Red Bluff has already taken preliminary steps toward such an event. This being the case, it is quite right that some sort of amusement should be arranged for the public benefit. Nearly every town in California of any importance will have their gala weeks during the spring, and Redding should prove herself equal to any other place.

H. Clineschmidt, Chas. Cook, Reed Bemis and Isaac S. -ner have volunteered to visit the business men of Redding and ascertain how much money can be raised.—Redding Press.

Horse Marks and Terms.

Grinders, the back teeth.

A white spot in the forehead is a star.

Head, one-third of a foot—four inches.

A strip between the nostrils is a snip.

A white eye is a glass eye.

A horse has pasterns, not ankles, and there is no such joint as a hind knee or fore shoulder.

White around the top of the hoof is a white coronet.

A star, blaze or bald face can't be anywhere except on the face.

A snip can't be anywhere except on the nose.

Amble, a gait like pacing, but slower, in which the two legs on the same side are moved together.

Appel, the gentle tug on the rein given to a horse at each step.

Croup, that part of the horse back of the saddle.

Bore, to bear on the bit.

Bucking, leaping vertically into the air with all four feet, and coming together on the ground.

Elbow, joint of forelegs next above knee lying next to horse's side.

Forearm, that part of the leg between the elbow and knee.

Forge, to strike the toe of the forefoot with the toe of the hind one; very often the result of bad shoeing.

Frog, a triangular piece of spongy horn in the middle of the sole of the foot.

A. B. Spreckels Elected.

It was predicted in the "Breeder and Sportsman" a month ago that A. B. Spreckels would be the next President of the State Agricultural Society to succeed C. M. Chase, and at the election in Sacramento yesterday this prediction was fulfilled. It is needless to add that no better appointment could be made. Mr. Spreckels, although a young man, has held many important positions and fulfilled the duties of every one in a most creditable manner. The farmers, stock breeders and manufacturers of this great State are to be congratulated upon having such an able and capable gentleman as President of the most prominent agricultural association in the United States.

The other elections which were held will please everyone—J. W. Wilson as Superintendent of the Park and W. P. Matthews, Superintendent of the Pavilion.

An Injustice to Cattlemen.

Over 100,000 head of cattle will starve to death in California this year unless the Government can be persuaded to speedily modify the quarantine lines against the splenic or Southern fever. It is asserted by well-known cattle men that no cases of the disease exist in the central part of the State, where most of the beef stock is located, and where, in consequence of the drought and lack of pasture, they are growing weaker and poorer, and must perish unless they can be transported to the northern counties or to the State of Nevada. There plenty of grazing exists, with a scarcity of cattle. Nevada stock men are desirous of purchasing in California, and California stockmen are anxious to sell or to send their horned stock to Nevada, but nothing can be done owing to the quarantine regulations against a disease which does not exist in California which prevents the transportation of the animals to the north or to the neighboring State to the East. In one case a profitable business venture is prevented and in the other great loss or pecuniary ruin are threatened. Stock men, such as Miller & Lux and Bradley, whose herds are starving to death here, cannot send them to Nevada, where they possess large grazing ranges. The situation has become intolerable, and strong efforts are being made by both Nevadans and Californians in Washington to induce the Department of Agriculture to afford prompt relief.

Senator Stewart, of Nevada, and Governor Budd, of California, have both taken up the matter, and last evening J. R. Hebborn, president of the Cattle Men's Association of Monterey, left for Washington on the errand of urgency. He represents the stock men of Stanislaus, Merced, Monterey, Santa Cruz, San Benito, San Luis Obispo, Tulare, Kings and adjoining counties most particularly, and his object is to have the Secretary of Agriculture move the quarantine line so far south as to permit the cattle men of the great central district of the State to send their stock to the grassy mountains of the north and the verdant ranges of Nevada before they shall become so weak that transportation will be impossible. Among other documents in support of his request will be a letter from the president of the State Agricultural Society and affidavits from veterinary surgeons and Nevada stock men that there are no infected cattle north of the Tehachapi mountains.

The law, which is threatening disaster to California's stock interest, was enacted to prevent the spread of splenic fever, that had broken out among Texas cattle, from spreading. A great quarantine line was drawn, north and east of which cattle could not be moved from January 15th to November 15th of each year, except by boat or rail for immediate slaughter. A few cases of the disease showed themselves in the extreme south of this State, which was made a reason for placing all of California under the ban. Last year, however, Mr. Morse was sent to Washington by the State Board of Health, of which he is a member, and induced the department of Agriculture to modify the quarantine line so far as California was concerned. A new line was run. It begins at the ocean on the south line of Marin county, continues along the south line, thence east and north to the East boundaries of Marin, Sonoma and Solano counties to the Sacramento river, follows north along the river, the south and east boundary lines of Solano county to the southeast corner of Yolo, north along the east line of Yolo to the intersection of the boundary of Sutter, east along the south line of Sutter and Placer to the intersection of the west boundary of El Dorado, south and east along the southerly boundary of El Dorado to its intersection with the west boundary of Alpine, thence southerly along the west boundary line of that county Mono and Inyo to the east boundary of the State and following it to the Mexican border. Thus all south and west, comprising two-thirds of California, remains, according to the dictation of the Agricultural Department, infected territory. During ten months of this year no cattle can be shipped out of it except for immediate slaughter. The northwestern counties of the State and Nevada, which have an abundance of pasture and a scarcity of cattle, are thus completely cut off for grazing purposes from over 100,000 head of healthy California stock, which must perish if immediate relief be not obtained.

At the Pleasanton Track.

A. G. Gurnett, the owner of Sulphur Spring Farm, "The Home of St. Nicholas," has sent a stable of five first-class ones to Pleasanton in charge of his efficient trainer, A. L. McDonald. On the farm the owner has a fine half-mile kite-shaped track and his horses have shown up so well after their winter's work that Mr. Gurnett concluded to give them the advantage of a mile truck and plenty of company. The stable comprises: Bay filly four years old by Brigadier—Lou Wall by Echo; chestnut filly four years old by Chas. Derby, 2:20—Lassie Jean; grey gelding three years old by Nutwood Wilkes—Lassie Jean; bay filly three years old by Nutwood Wilkes—Lou Wall by Echo; grey colt two years old by Direct—Lassie Jean. The brood mare Lassie Jean is by Brigadier, he by Happy Medium. Her first dam the great thoroughbred running mare Lexington Belle by Lexington; second dam Eagles by imp. Glencoe, etc.

Mr. Gurnett has five foals from the mare namely: Grey mare by Hark, by Brigadier, inbred; chestnut filly, four years old, by Chas. Derby; grey gelding, three years old, by Nutwood Wilkes; grey colt, two years old, by Direct; grey filly, one year old, by McKinney, and prides himself that he not only has well-bred ones, but what is better they can go and will be ready to meet the very best green ones in the circuit of 1898.

It Does the Work.

WALCOTT, Ind., March 23, 1898.

The bottle of Gombault's Caustic Balsam just received, for which accept thanks. Yes, you have my consent to publish my letter to you in regard to the merits of the Balsam. It is all and more than you claim for it. I had no ax to grind in speaking so highly of it. I have used it many times and know whereof I speak. It is a grand medicine. CHAS. E. ROSS.

Close Inbreeding.

This is a very appropriate time to consider the subject of close or inbreeding, as people must be making their final arrangements as to the mating of mares, and the question of Diudonne's pedigree is often raised, or, in fact, whenever the Derby is brought up. Moreover, in this week there is an event that nearly always gives a lesson to breeders. I allude to the Waterloo Cup, which is invariably won by an inbred animal—something inheriting five or six crosses of Contango, or going back in many lines to David or Fugitive. Many Waterloo Cup winners indeed have been wonderfully close-bred, and some people have said that a greyhound and a game cock should never be bred out. The best breeders of foxhounds have maintained the same views, and it has been clearly seen that old-bred packs like the Belvoir, whilst bestowing improvements upon all other kennels, have invariably lost in good looks and quality when bred to hounds that had no relationship with them. But to return specially to horses. I have always thought that inbreeding had a great deal to do with the extraordinary merit so noticeable in the horses that lived from about the year 1820 to 1850. Prior to that there had been a deal of inbreeding, and the real results burst out in the decades I have mentioned, through such examples as Piram, Touchstone, Bay Middleton, Middleton, Melbourne, Gladiator, The Flying Dutchman and Voltigeur. The good ones have never come in quite such rapid suppression since, and yet breeders have tried to breed with more science than their forefathers, and at one time the great policy was to go out for blood. The horses have been no better for it though, and in a general way there has been a loss of stamina. I think there is now an inclination in the other direction, and I am glad to see it. I do not agree with those who are forever harping about the old lines of Herod and Highflyer, etc. They are so far back as to have lost their influence, but the modern day crosses are to my mind so all-in-all important. The Wild Dayrell, the West Australian, the Newminster, and still nearer down the Hermit, the Vedette, the Doncaster and the Isonomy. The position to be taken up should be the same as that of a past generation, who had the opportunities offered through Tramp, Catton, Blacklock, Doctor Syntax and Orville. It is the more immediate crosses that should be so closely considered, and I am sure many will be deeply interested in the career of Diudonne, as Hermit was seen winning the Derby late in the sixties, and the eighties had set before Isonomy was relegated to the stud. In the few years that have intervened it has been seen that the daughters of Hermit have been not only good winner-producers, but in a subsequent generation again it brings out winners. Sailor Prince was one of the first examples of a good horse coming from a Hermit mare, and sent to America and crossed with descendants of Gladiator, he gets such a sturdy, game winner as Diakta, and such a racing-like son again as Sandia. In England, or rather Ireland, Gallinule, by Isonomy out of a Hermit mare, gets Rockdove, a winner of the Cesarewitch, and Isonomy got Seabreeze and Ravensbury, nearly the best of their respective years, out of daughters of Hermit. The Duke of Devonshire has gone a step towards inbreeding this successful crossing, as Diudonne is by Ambion, son of Rosebery and Suicide, by Hermit, his dam Mon Droit, by Isonomy out of In Bounds, by Hermit. This is a double dose of Hermit on the female side, and we shall see how it succeeds. So far the result looks satisfactory, as the colt Diudonne has gained in size on all his immediate ancestors, being much bigger than Hermit in every way and taller than Isonomy. He did all in his juvenile days also to suggest that he stays probably better than his sire, Amphion, did, as his two victories against the best of company were accomplished over six furlongs, and in each case he was running very strong at the finish, or putting in what is called good work. If he turns out to be a regular glutton in regard to stoutness he will bring about some changes in the views of breeding, and the Hermit and Isonomy families will be more sought after than ever for crosses.—The London Sporting Life.

This abuse is destined to come up before coast sportsmen as one of considerable importance in the near future for reasons that are obvious. Some of our gun clubs place a limit on daily bags and most of them are favorable to this rule, but that is only a drop in the bucket, the game is wide open for individual hunters and unscrupulous shooters. Some of the Eastern states prohibit the shooting of various kinds of game exceeding over a certain number per day to the individual bag. Whether the time is ripe or not for legislative interference is a matter that sportsmen will debate vigorously pro and con. We think it is time to call a halt, not only against the individual hunter, but also that drastic measures should be taken to prevent the continuance of the reprehensible methods of netting and trapping ducks and other feathered game such as has been the practice during the past season.

Empire-Garden City Trophy Shoot.

The team race to-morrow for a trophy at San Jose will be one of the features of the tournament. The match will be at 25 blue-rocks with ten men on a side. The Empire team will probably be selected from the following named shooters: King, Shaw, Sears, Klevesahl, Rickleson, Sinkwitz, Betten, Zeiner, Fischer, Edwards, Schultz, Daniels, Andrus and Grubb. The Garden City representatives will possibly be selected from the shooters named as follows: Dr. Barker, R. Coykendall, Anderson, Hobson, Flint, Carroll, Leon, Dr. Bangs, Perrin and Metcalf.

Other events are on the programme, viz., twenty-five singles, entrance $1.50, four moneys, $2.50 added for best score of consecutive breaks; three-man team race, twenty-five singles each, four moneys, class shooting; clubs can enter as many teams as desirable; twenty-five singles, entrance $2.50, five moneys, class shooting, $2.50 added for best score of consecutive breaks.

The shooter who scores the highest average in the three programme events will receive a special prize of $5. A barbecue will be served on the grounds and doubtless will be properly attended to by marksmen who always make dead center shots.

The 6 o'clock A. M. Oakland local will enable shooters to catch the San Jose train at Fruitvale to-morrow evening.

The Deer Turned Hunter.

Dr. F. Petzold, a German doctor and farmer, who lives within six miles of Uvalde, near the Nueces river, Texas, related the following exciting affair, which took place on the night of March 26th. The doctor is well and favorably known, his character is good, his standing for truth and veracity is unimpeached. "In company with a friend of mine, a Mr. Herman," began the doctor, "we went out quail-hunting, and had nothing but a shotgun and a butcher knife along for shooting and protection. As it happened, night overtook us when we were near the Gato, a creek running through our county, so we decided to camp out for the night.

"After our scanty supper we smoked our pipes and spent the time telling stories, etc. Finally we prepared our beds, fell asleep and dreamed of the middle-of-the-roads and the future success of the erstwhile 16-to-1 silver party. All went on nicely, when suddenly I was aroused by some kind of strange noise, and thinking an old cow or a $15 yearling was after us for at least some pieces of harness or an old pair of pants to chew, I watched, and intended to run off the object.

"The night being quite dark, I could not fully and to my satisfaction distinguish the beast in question. Now, then, as long as it takes to tell this, suddenly and without warning a great big buck (deer) was attacking me. I held on to his horns for dear life, and called on my friend for assistance. The buck in the meantime kept on pushing me until I tumbled and fell, the buck continuing to go for me with all his force and rage. For once I tried one hand on his mouth; this, however, being full of foam and very slippery, I let go and again took hold of his horns.

"In the meantime my companion was up and about. He had his gun ready, and was going to shoot at something, perhaps me, when I called out not to shoot, for God's sake! but come, and p. d. q., too, else I was about to lose my strength and give up my hold of the buck's horns.

"With one great effort and push my friend flew up in the air, and, coming down on terra firma, hallooed out painful shrieks for life. Again, without any special desire, I had to take hold of the buck's horns, and now, thinking of my butcher's knife, which I carried in my leather belt, I once more made a determined effort and got a sort of twist on the buck's neck; out came the big knife, and I cut away at his neck at a fearful rate, until the brute tumbled over a lifeless form. Being dressed in light attire I was black and blue all over my body, besides being covered in blood.

"I honestly do believe had it not been for the timely assistance of my friend my life would have been in eminent danger. My friend says he will not go hunting with me another time."

Vandalism.

A spirit of degenerate cussedness prompted unknown parties to make evident their inherent malignity, acquired through generations of burnt grandfathers, by the destruction of traps and fittings and the theft of many articles from the Reliance and Empire Club houses at Alameda Junction. The property destroyed and stolen was not of any great value intrinsically, but the method of spoliation and system of destruction made apparent the motive of the visitors. Some annoyance, inconvenience and expense was entailed but the damage has been repaired and a sharp lookout will be kept for depredators in the future. What will be done in the case of a delinquent being caught in the act is not a matter of difficult solution.

A California Condor.

A live specimen of the largest bird known in California may be seen at the residence of Frank S. Daggett on Ramona street, Pasadena. It is a California condor, captured in the mountains back of Monrovia.

The winged monster, which is of the vulture family, measures nine and one-half feet from tip to tip of its outstretched wings, and has a long, fierce-looking, hooked beak that it uses in tearing the carrion upon which it feeds.

The California condor is akin to the condor of the Andes in South America, and is now but rarely seen in this State.

CARTRIDGE AND SHELL.

J. F. Chiles and Dr. Schaw, of Woodland, killed 234 geese during an eight days' hunt on Friday, a week ago, in the tules near Elmira.

C. A. Williams, the Lemoore market hunter, on the last Saturday of the season is credited with a bag of 258 ducks, shot on the waters of Tulare lake.

Tom Irwin chaperoned an illustrious representative of the French Republic last Sunday on the Point Reyes fields and the result was that a big string of meadow larks were potted.

Al. Cumming and Eli Marks left for Maine Prairie on Thursday evening to enjoy several days goose-hunting. The geese are plentiful in that vicinity. They will be with "Doc" Stuart and Abe Crump.

The San Luis Gun Club, of San Luis Obispo, has organized with the following officers: C. T. Greenfield, president; J. E. Van Schaick, vice president; P. McCaffrey, treasurer. Last Saturday marked the opening shoot of the club, at blue-rocks.

A live bird match was held at Phoenix, Arizona, recently between Messrs. Schofield, Holmes and Werk. They shot at thirty-five pigeons. The scores were: Werk and Schofield, thirty-one; Holmes, thirty. The tie was not shot off owing to a scarcity of birds.

T. M. Robinson, S. M. Getchell and C. C. Kinsey went to Maine Prairie last Saturday evening and on the following morning shot over this favorite resort for wild geese. The hunters had a most successful hunt and brought back 100 birds as evidence of their marksmanship.

The Fresno Gun Club has been organized and the following officers were elected: S. C. St. John, president; H. V. Armitage, vice-president; D. Dismukes, secretary; H. V. Armitage, captain; Arthur Machen, Gus Naher and D. Dismukes, directors. The Fresno Sportsmen's Club has disorganized and turned over all its property to the new club, which has a membership of twenty-five.

C. J. Legros, a veteran in the ranks of Coast shooters and a well known market hunter has leased and fenced in 1,000 acres of the best hunting ground in the vicinity of Dutton Landing. Next season he will be prepared to accommodate hunters who desire to have good duck shooting. Now that the hunting season is over Legros will devote himself to the trapping of terrapin for the market and also do quite a little business in gathering mink pelts for the next two months.

Local trap-shooters may be somewhat interested in these notes of the programme of the shooting tournament to be held in Belgium, which commences on March 20th and is to be continued until May 8th. The aggregate amount of cash prizes is $22,000. On April 13th and 14th the principal contest is to be held. The Cercle des Etrangers donates $4,000 in cash for this event: First prize, $2,300; second, $700; third, $500; fourth, $300; fifth, $100. This race will be at twelve birds, handicap rises, three birds to be shot at on the first day and nine on the second. During the progress of the meeting the management donates $2,000 for a special contest, two moneys, 60 per cent. to first and 40 per cent. to second. This meeting promises to draw the attendance of some of the American cracks.

American Kennel Club.

At the annual meeting of the American Kennel Club, held at Madison Square Garden, New York, on Wednesday, February 23, 1898, the following officers and committees were elected for the ensuing year: August Belmont, president; Edward Brooks, vice-president; A. P. Vredenburg, secretary-treasurer; Stud Book Committee, James Watson, chairman, H. F. Schellhaas and C. B. Knocker; Field Trial and Coursing Committee, H. F. Schellhaas, chairman, Horatio Nelson, H. S. Joslin; Arthur B. Sharp and J. H. Van Dorn. Constitution and Rules Committee, H. K. Bloodgood, chairman; James Watson, H. F. Schellhaas and G. W. H. Ritchie; Finance Committee, A. Clinton Wilmerding, chairman; Jas. B. Blossom and Leslie A. Burritt; Membership Committee, G. M. Carnochan, chairman, C. D. Bernheimer. The officers for the past year were re-elected.

The report of the Committee on Constitution and Rules recommended and submitted the following changes in the classification rules in force, January 1, 1898, which was adopted and of effect March 1, 1898:

1. The Puppy Class shall be for all dogs over six months and under twelve months of age. No entry can be made or accepted of one under six months of age, or whose date of birth is unknown.

2. The Novice Class shall be for all dogs never having won first prize at any recognized show, wins in the puppy classes excepted.

3. The Limit Class shall be for all dogs never having won four first prizes at any recognized show, wins in the puppy and novice classes excepted.

4. The Open Class shall be for all dogs of any age over six months.

5. The Winners' Class shall be open only to the winners of first prize at any show, giving at least three of the before-mentioned classes, one of which must be the Open Class, and the winner of three prizes in this class will thereby become a Champion of Record, be so registered by the American Kennel Club, and will be entitled to an American Kennel Club Champion Medal. Before awarding "Reserve" in this class, the dog or dogs having been placed second to the winner in any of the regular classes must be brought before the Judge for competition with the remaining dogs in said Winners' Class. No class winner can be withdrawn from competition in the Winners' Class, and no entry fee shall be charged for said competition in this class. A dog that has already won one or more first prizes in the late Challenge classes shall retain these wins to its credit towards becoming a Champion of Record, the remaining qualifying wins to be gained in the Winners' Class. The Winners' Class can be divided by sex, provided the required three classes are also divided by sex.

The following amendment to Article XIII, Section 4, of the Constitution was submitted and recommended by the Committee on Constitution and Rules. The amendment was adopted, viz:

"There shall be an annual convention of delegates representing the several clubs, members of this Association, located west of the 110th degree west longitude. It shall meet in the city of San Francisco, Cal., on the second Tuesday of February in each year. At said meeting the delegates from each club shall have the right to cast a ballot for four delegates, representatives of Bench Show Clubs, and three delegates, representatives of specialty clubs, and the seven delegates elected shall constitute the Advisory Board of the Pacific Coast for the ensuing year, and shall hold office for one year or until their successors are elected. Immediately after the above-mentioned election the Board shall organize by electing a chairman and a secretary. The duty of said Board shall be to attend to all matters referred to it by this Association, or its Executive Board, and it shall report the proceedings at each of its meetings to this Association, by registered mail, within two days thereafter. It shall hold regular quarterly meetings on the second Tuesday in May, August and November and shall call special meetings on notice from this association. It shall further act under a code of rules approved by this Association or its Executive Board."

COURSING.

A Good Day at Ingleside and Union Parks.

The attendance at Ingleside Park last Sunday was very large. The hares were a good lot and the game was consequently the more enjoyable. The programme was a run-off of the ties made last Saturday. The dogs were closely matched. Van Nida was thought to be a cinch over Glen Roy in the first round at 2 to 1, but the Eastern dog was not in it. Patria turned down the Eastern crack, Van Nida, for the second time, with the greatest of ease. Van Cloie beat the favorite, Black Prince, at odds of 10 to 6. Magnet was a winner over Fireball from the time they were slipped.

In the third round Glen Roy beat Victor with ease. Moondyne disposed of Johnny R. in short order. Log Boy sent Right Bower into the deck as a poor bower, but Swinnerton could not do it with Bendalong. Patria easily put out Van Cloie, and then another short-end jubilee was had in White Lily's win over the 10 to 6 favorite, Magnet.

The Consolation Stake developed two jarring short ends. Lady Hopp beat the 10 to 6 favorite, Star Ruby, and Alma beat the 3 to 1 shot, Valley Maid. The latter contest was torrid. Three times they ran even up. Then Alma won by nothing but speed.

Old Glory won the Consolation Stake, and High Born Lady was the runner-up. Patria made a strong bid for the chief stake, but Moondyne was running in old-time form. They are both cracks, but in the long run Moondyne seems to show better foot.

The stake to-day will be an event for beaten dogs the programme for which appears in to-day's daily edition of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

A large crowd at Union Coursing Park last Sunday enhanced the day's sport and kept the pool-sellers busy, especially when the short ends commenced to have an inning. The weather was perfect. Curtis and Sons practically captured the three first prizes. Rosette, Cavalier and Chartist were the money winners. They beat everything down to the fifth round, in which Rosette came against Chartist and Cavalier against Lissak. Curtis withdrew Chartist, leaving Rosette and Cavalier to put out Lissak, the lucky dog. Cavalier did the trick, but Lissak made a good showing against him. The withdrawal of Chartist technically gave Lissak third prize, but the third and fourth prizes are of the same value in money, and differ only in honor. Though Curtis won the three head prizes, his hounds did not have an easy time of it. Most of the courses were closely contested.

The programme for to-day and to-morrow will consist of an all-age open stake and a puppy stake. The result of the drawing on last Wednesday is published in to-day's DAILY BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

The Philadelphia Show.

Reports from the Quaker city anent the recent bench show are but faint in praise of the success of the Girard Kennel Club's exhibit. Former bench shows in Philadelphia make comparisons ludicrous. Only one hundred and twenty-eight dogs were benched, and though there was a sprinkling of quality in the collection, the balance of the entries were disappointing to the fancy. The Baltimore show, given on the same dates, possibly had something to do with the general lack of interest. Philadelphia should be in a position to have a first class bench show annually. This show was not a "record" show nor was it under A. K. C. auspices. This is the first break-away from the A. R. C. by any important Eastern body. Its failure is significant.

San Jose Show.

The entries for the San Jose bench show will close on Monday night at 9 P. M. A large number of entries have come in from various portions of the State, but as usual the local owners are delaying, and many of them will probably not come forward till the last minute. There are many advantages to every one concerned to have all the entries in early, and the management has announced that the entries will positively close at the time set.

Curtis and Son's Rosette and Cavalier.

Pacific Mastiff Club.

The regular meeting of the Pacific Mastiff Club was held on Thursday evening, March 10th. Routine business being disposed of the following preamble and resolution was adopted:

"Whereas, the A. K. C. has studiously ignored the wishes of the Pacific Coast clubs and has thwarted the efforts of the latter to further the holding of bench shows on the coast, therefore be it

"Resolved, that the Pacific Mastiff Club views with the utmost disfavor the action of the A. K. C. in regard to the rules on classification, and that the Pacific Mastiff Club stands ready and anxious to join a movement for the formation of an independent league of the Pacific Coast clubs."

The absence of the club's delegate from the annual meeting of the A. K. C. at Madison Square Garden, February 23d, was "severely animadverted upon." A letter to Mr. Secretary Vredenburg from the club had not been laid before the meeting of the A. K. C.

San Francisco Kennel Club.

The San Francisco Kennel Club will open an office at 14 Post street, on or about April 1st. The location is a good one and will greatly facilitate the preliminary business for the club's coming bench show.

The Waterloo Cup.

The deciding course in the Waterloo Cup was this year contested by a couple of dogs which on the night of the draw were considered to have only remote chances, and rightly so: seeing that the ultimate winner was a third string! The first round of the Cup was notable for the number of favorites that were knocked out; in fact, the bowling over of the fancied ones was the chief characteristic of all the stages. In the first round Wild Night, the ultimate winner, beat Cissy Smith, who subsequently showed how good the form was by getting into the final of the Purse, where she succumbed to Real Turk. In the second round Mr. Hardy's bitch beat Bella Dobson, at the next attempt she beat a hot favorite, in Faber Fortune, who was looked upon as certain to pull through. The fourth round saw Wild Night triumphant over another good animal, Under the Globe, which had shown good form in previous courses, and the semi-final was added at the expense of Chock, who had run well at previous attempts. Had Lang Syne been sound, odds would probably have been laid on him to beat Wild Night in the final; but he was very lame, and Wild Night started favorite. He justified the confidence, but the Duke of Leeds' dog had hard luck, for after loading a length and a half for the first point the hare whipped back from the turn, and after that, despite game efforts, Wild Night proved the better at the kill. Wild Night is not up to the standard of former bitches who have won the Cup, but she displays good form all through, and the victory was deserved. She gave great promise at Massarene Park in 1896, and confirmed it later on at Altcar, when she was unlucky to be beaten in the final for the Croxteth stakes by Metronome. She weighs about 49 pounds and is by Freshman from Fine Night by Herschel; so she is splendidly bred. She was bought in a batch of four from Mr. Waters which cost Mr. Hardy £800.

Miss Edith Bull, of Ratcliffe Hall, Belmont, proposes to enter her rough coat St. Bernard Beauty M., in the San Jose show. The dog is in fine fettle and should show.

Dog With a History.

A dog with an interesting history has just died in France. He was a Newfoundland named Sultan, and he counted among his exploits the arrest the capture of an assassin, the rescue of a child from drowning in the Marne, and of a man who attempted to commit suicide by jumping from the Pont-Neuf into the Seine. For this gallantry the Society for the Protection of Animals presented him with a collar of honor three years ago. Latterly Sultan was owned by the Comtesse Foucher de Cariel, who relied on him to protect her castle at Perdy, near Corbeil. Quite recently he prevented the castle from being robbed. The noble dog has paid his devotion to duty with his life, for he was found dead in the park, poisoned by his enemies.

The annual meeting of the Great Dane Club of America, held at the Madison Square Garden February 20th, resulted in the re-election of the old officers, viz., C. G. Peters, President; J. Blackburn Miller, Vice-President; G. H. Mantler, Secretary and Treasurer; (G. Muss Arnoldt, A. K. C. delegate; C. D. Bernheimer, A. P. Ramsdell and C. Wood, Executive Committee. The address of the Secretary is 60 Water street, New York.

At an informal meeting of the Board of Directors of the Pacific Mastiff Club, held after the regular meeting on Thursday evening, March 11th, the Secretary, Mr. J. P. Norman, was requested to notify the local specialty clubs of the resolutions adopted and also to request each club to join in an early conference for the purpose of taking action on the question of secession from the A. K. C. We are informed by the Secretary that the Great Dane Club has signified its willingness to embrace the proposition of secession.

BOSTON, MASS.

DR. H. C. GLOVER—Dear Sir:—Your Mange Cure is the best thing of the kind I have had. Would recommend it to any who are troubled with the greatest nuisance in the kennel. Yours, etc., JOHN P. BARNARD, JR., Proprietor of Beacon Kennels, 23 Myrtle St., Boston.

There was some good coursing at Modesto on March 7th, the occasion being the second meet of the Modesto Coursing Club. Forest King Kennels' Rey del Rey took first money. Weil and Sellers' Tom Sharkey second and J. R. Dickson's (of the California Turf) Rapid third.

The two handsome Great Danes a dog and a bitch, bred at San Carlos by the late Samuel Doane, by Victor, out of Princess Dagman, will be seen on the bench at San Jose. They are owned by O. Van Avery, of Oakland, and B. Byyan, of Alameda respectively.

There was but one event at the coursing park in Sacramento last Sunday, the puppy stake, owing to a scarcity of hares. First money was won by Nethercott, Bros.' Don Jose, M. Delano's Tenout second, and Rought's Tea Rose third.

The latest institution in New York is a dog restaurant, where people can take their canine pets for meals. About 100 dogs are fed there daily.

The Southern California Coursing Park is not a successful venture.

March 20—Regular Sunday contest of the San Francisco Fly Casting Club, 10 A. M., Stow Lake, Golden Gate Park.

Mar. 22—San Francisco Fly Casting Club. Regular Meeting. Mills Building, Assembly Room, second floor.

June 8—West Michigan Fly-Casting Association. First Angling Tournament. Grand Rapids, Mich.

Angling Tournament.

At Grand Rapids, Mich., on June 8 and 9, the West Michigan Fly-Casting Association will hold their first scientific tournament under the auspices of the Game, Fish and Dog Protective Association. The events will be six in number (three being held each day) commencing with "Fixed Distance and Accuracy Fly-Casting" Five casts at buoys 50, 55 and 60 feet distant. Rod not to exceed 8½ oz. Second: "Accuracy Bait Casting" at buoys 50, 70, 80, 90 and 100 feet distant. One cast at each buoy with a half ounce rubber frog. Free running reel required. Third: "Dry Fly-Casting for Accuracy and Delicacy," five casts at buoys 35, 40 and 45 feet distant. Rod not to exceed 6½ oz. Thirty seconds allowed to extend line. Fourth: "Fly-Casting for Accuracy," five casts at buoys 30, 35 and 40 feet distant. For local amateurs only. No limit to rod or line. Fifth: "Bass Fly Casting, Distance and Accuracy Combined" at buoys 35, 40 and 50 feet distant. No limit to rod or line. Thirty seconds allowed to extend line. Five casts at each buoy and five minutes allowed for long distance after making five casts at each buoy. No 6 fly to be used. Sixth: "Long Distance Fly-Casting." No limit to rod or line. Ten minutes allowed for extension of line to greatest possible distance. Six championship medals will be awarded as first prizes in each event, additional prizes are also offered. The entry fees are, for one event $2.00, two events $3.00, three events $4.00, all events $6.00. Further information and complete official programmes can be obtained by addressing E. Rice, Secretary, 81 Lyon Street, Grand Rapids, Mich.

Trout Out of Season.

An infraction of the law which has apparently become so familiar to the public as to have lost its primary character of illegality, is indulged in, particularly in and about Sacramento, and now through the passive acceptance directly and indirectly of those who should have stopped the illegal trade in its inception, it has taken on the nature of a public nuisance as well. The Sacramento Record speaks as follows:

Game Warden Helms is determined on breaking up the traffic by Indians in mountain trout. The Indians bring trout here on the early morning trains from Truckee and peddle them about town in a quiet way.

This is against the law at this season of the year, but it would be of little use to arrest the Indians, as they would not be convicted. It is, however, equally as unlawful for any one to purchase the trout or have them in his possession and Warden Helms gives fair warning that he will arrest any person detected in buying the trout or having such in his possession.

Besides being unlawful, this traffic is an injury to local market proprietors who have to pay rents, taxes, licenses, etc., and they demand protection from the Indian free traders."

Why will the Indians not be convicted? We wish Game Warden Helms every success in his effort to stop the evil. The suggestion concerning the possible injury to local traders cuts no figure in the case, the sentiment is a relic of the barbarous ages. If the local traders and merchants allow themselves to be side-tacked by outside commercial interests (large or small) it behooves them to hustle. When the traders in a city the size of Sacramento howl about the invasion of Piute fish peddlers it is not hard to find a large, generous-sized growth of moss and that without the aid of a search-warrant.

Work of the Fish Commission.

The taking of rainbow trout spawn has been commenced at Keswick, near Klamath Hot Springs. The traps are located on Shovel creek. Operations at present indicate a plentiful catch of spawn. The commissioners are ambitious to make a total showing from the district for the season of 1,000,000 eggs. Traps have been placed in Hazel and Mears creeks, both tributaries of the Sacramento river, near Sims. Mr. E. W. Hunt and the force of employees for the Tallac and Tahoe hatcheries, left for the Lake last Wednesday evening.

Fly-Casting at Stow Lake.

To-day, at 2 o'clock P. M., will commence the third series of the season's contests in fly-casting between the members of the Fly-Casting Club. The Sunday competition will be resumed to-morrow at 10 o'clock A. M. A large attendance of fly casters is expected. The bait casting event will be the feature of interest, this being a new element in the sport at the lake.

The fine specimen of a tarpon on view in the window of Claybrough, Golcher & Co., was captured by Wm. Keliehor, Esq., of Taylor, Tex. Its weight was 75 pounds. Mr. Keliehor presented it to his friend, Mr. A. C. Bassett of Oakland. Mr. Keliehor is an ardent fisherman, and during his sojourn on the Coast promises to avail himself of the opportunities offered for angling. He contemplates a trip to Empire City shortly as the guest of Major Tower. The Major has a comfortable fishing cabin located on the Coos river. Mr. Keliehor anticipates some fine trout fishing while up north.

A free-running reel for bait casting, built on the same lines and style as the celebrated Milam Kentucky reel, but with some very ingenious improvements, as for instance, an unimpeded drag, free action of the handle, jeweled bearings, etc., etc., can be seen at Claybrough, Golcher & Co.'s. Some new Kosmic bass casting lines just received are very fine indeed and will repay examination.

The Eastern shad which was first introduced into the waters of the Pacific Coast by being placed in the Sacramento river in 1871, and later on in large numbers planted in that river, the Columbia and Willamette rivers has now spread up and down the coast over a distance of 1300 miles. This is a greater range in latitude than the fish has on the Atlantic coast.

Several of our expert anglers have been fishing in the Alameda tide-water canal for steelhead recently, but they have not been very successful. The fish are there and a few have been caught, but this spot will not be productive of much sport to the angler.

The first of April is close at hand and the prospective angler is already overhauling his tackle in anticipation of pleasant days' sport and plethoric creels. The brook trout sends his message to the city "If you can't call drop us a line."

The season for trout fishing promises to be early, but as the streams are low, its duration may be comparatively short. In the larger streams the principal fishing for the coming year may be looked for.

The San Francisco Fly-Casting Club will hold a regular meeting on Tuesday evening next in the assembly room, on the second floor, of the Mills Building.

Jno. Gallagher and Mr. Libby caught seven fine large steelhead and a number of small ones at Point Reyes last Tuesday.

Sea trout and rock-fish have been abundant recently at the fishing grounds off the fog-bell on Angel Island.

Smelt fishing is still good in the Oakland estuary; fine catches have been made for a week past.

Del Cooper made a nice catch of sixteen steelhead in the tide-water near Larkspur last Sunday.

WILD NUTLING'S season will close JULY 1st, as it is Mr. Phippen's intention to race him. He has more speed than any horse this great driver has ever handled.

EXCELLENT PASTURAGE, and the best of care taken of mares. Some very fine trotters and pacers for sale. Address, WM. VIOGET, as above.

THE FASTEST OF THE GUY WILKES FAMILY

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

J. H. White's Stock Farm, Lakeville, Cal.

TERMS—$25 FOR THE SEASON

SEYMOUR WILKES was sired by the King of the Wilkes family, Guy Wilkes, 2:15<sup>1</sup>/<sub>4</sub>, dam Early Bird, by Playmail (brother to Barney, 2:25<sup>1</sup>/<sub>4</sub>); second dam Lucy, by Odd Fellow (son of Chloroform); third dam by a son of Williamson's Belmont; fourth dam by Blackhawk 767. Playmail was by Mike 3408 (he by Vermont 822, out of the Peniger mare), out of Kate McDonough (dam of Ella Lewis 2:27, and granddam of Saladin, 2:06<sup>1</sup>/<sub>4</sub>).

SEYMOUR WILKES stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds. He is a seal brown in color, and in conformation is one of the most symmetrical of any in California. His qualities as a level-headed, game and speedy race horse are known to all horsemen. He is the fastest son of the mighty Guy Wilkes, and on his maternal side traces to the very best of sires and dams. He has an iron constitution, and all owners of good mares that will have breeding, size, bone, quality, good disposition and extreme speed should not overlook this horse. His service fee is placed at a very low figure considering his merits. He never was bred but to a few mares, and his progeny are models of perfection. Mares can be shipped direct to the ranch via steamer "Gold." The best of care taken of them on the farm, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Pasture $3 per month. For further particulars apply to

THOS. ROCHE, Lakeville, Cal.

Torso sired the following winners: Torsina, Joe Roger, Torello, True Love II., Tortosa, Una Que Amo, Torsion, Torsolene, Myrtle H., Tortenson, Sister Ella, Solution, Hearso, Torsida, Sculptor, Torchdance, The Shrew, Vana, Odds On, Cosina, Caricia, Restless, Our Johnny, Sweet Liberty, Tessa, Finanza (dead) and Merry Lass (dead).

During his two years of turf career, Torso won nearly $45,000. His full sister, Aurelia, was one of the best mares of her day, winning $20,885, and her first foal was last season's capital two-year-old performer, Aurelian. Their dam, imp. Santa Lucia, also threw the winners, Tasso and Aurcole. She is a daughter of the triple event winner, Lord Lyon, and through him obtains the potent blood of Paradigm, who produced Achievement, and two of whose granddaughters are the dams of Ladas and Glare, two of the best two-year-olds in England in 1892.

Algerine, the sire of Torso, was a superior race horse, winner of the Belmont Stakes, etc., and is by Abd-el-Kader, out of Nina, by Boston. Abd-el-Kader (a full brother to the good four-miler, Abd-el-Koree), although badly hiped, was a fine race horse at all distances. He won a dash of four miles at Saratoga, in 1869, in 7:31 1/4, a very creditable performance. Nina, the dam of Algerine, was one of the best race mares of her day. She was a winner at all distances, from one to four-mile heats, in good time, and produced Planet, one of the best horses in the country at all distances, and a successful sire, also Echequer, Ninette, Ecliptic, etc.

Torso was a brilliant two-year-old. He won the first of the Double Events from a field of nine and also the second Double Event with a five-pound penalty, making his weight 123 pounds. In the Surf Stakes he beat Cayuga, St. James and four others, and in the Flatbush he defeated Reclaire, Onaway, Burlington and three others.

At three years of age he won the Lorillard Stakes, 1 1/2 miles in 2:36 1/4, from Tournament, Banquet, Badisha, Devotee, St. John, Burlington and Protection, a high-class field; was second to Burlington for the Brooklyn Derby, in front of Tournament, Padisha, Lisimony, Kenwood and four others; was second for the Equinoctial Stakes to Reclaire, beating Tournament and others, and carrying nine pounds more than he winner, and was third for the Omnibus Stakes, 1 1/2 miles, carrying a penalty of five pounds.

TERMS $50 THE SEASON.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898. All bills payable not later than that date. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Address all letters to Sire of CHEHALIS, two miles, 4:19 1/2, the Champion Two-mile Harness Horse.

Grandsire of KLAMATH, 2:07 1/2, the Champion Trotter of the Pacific Coast.

Sire of ALTAO, 2:09 1/2, the Champion Trotting Stallion of the Pacific Northwest.

Sire of Eight new 2:20 Performers for 1897.

Sire and Grandsire of ALL the 2:10 Performers ever Produced in Oregon and Washington.

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

Alameda, at $100 the Season.

(WITH USUAL RETURN PRIVILEGES.)

LIMITED TO TWENTY-FIVE MARES.

ALTAMONT shares championship honors with Baron Wilkes, a horse of great opportunities, in having six 2:10 performers to his credit. He has taken a leading position among the foremost trotting sires of the country under such conditions that phenomenal ability alone has saved him from oblivion. A very small proportion of his progeny has been trained, and an extremely small number of these by competent men. As a partial illustration of his meagre advantages, it may be stated that he has never produced a colt from a pacing-bred mare or from one with a fast record. Nor until 1897 had he ever been crossed with a descendant of George Wilkes, Electioneer, Dictator, Sidney or Dexter Prince. Oregon and Washington have produced seven 2:10 performers, and EVERY ONE of these are ALTAMONTS.

ALTAMONT is a horse of iron constitution, and at twenty-three years of age is in the full vigor of his prime, a sure foal-getter, and, except for his blindness—the result of an accident—is without blemish. He has never sired a sorrel, all of his colts having been solid colors—bays, browns or blacks.

NOTE—Bestie Rankin, by Altamont, sold November, 1897, brought the highest price obtained for a harness horse at public auction in California during the year. Address

THE THOROUGHBRED STALLION

ZOBAIR

—SIRED BY—

ST. SAVIOUR, out of NIGHTHAWK, by HADDINGTON; second dam by NORFOLK, etc., to the thirteenth dam.

ZOBAIR is a bay stallion, foaled in 1890, and is one of the finest-looking thoroughbreds in America. His career on the turf compares favorably with any thoroughbred in America. He started 38 times, won 11, was second 9 times and third 7 times, and won almost $6,000 in purses.

ZOBAIR will make the SEASON OF 1898, ending JULY 1st, at the PETALUMA RACE TRACK. TERMS $25 THE SEASON.

Mares kept in any manner owners may desire. Facilities for doing so are first-class. Mares can be shipped per steamer "Gold." For pasturage, etc., apply to

MONTEREY, 2:13 3-4,

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT ALAMEDA

(Cor. Arbor St. and Eagle Ave., end of Speed Track.)

MONTEREY, 2:13 3/4	Sidney, 2:19 1/4	Sire of 20 in 2:20 and better and 10 in 2:15 and better. His sons and daughters also breed on.	Santa Claus, 2:15	Sire of Claus Forrester, 2:11 1/4 Wm. Penn., 2:07 1/4 and 15 others.	Strathmore 402	Sire of Elenor, 2:11 and 75 others in the 2:30 list.
	Hattie	Dam of Monterey, 2:13 3/4 Montana, 2:16 1/4 three-year-old record 2:30 winner of the Occident Stake in 7 heats.	Sweetness, 2:21	Dam of Sidney, 2:18 3/4	Navidad, 2:22 1/4	Sire of St. Julian, 2:11 3/4 and 24 others.
	Com. Belmont 4340	Sire of Meteor, 2:17 1/2 Cora Bell, 2:23	Barona	Dam of Hattie	Maud S., 2:08 1/4	Sire of Miss Gratz (by Commodore)
	Iago, 2:11	and six others.	Hattie	Dam of Monterey, 2:13 3/4 Montana, 2:16 1/4	Woodford Mambrino, 2:21	Sire of Abbottsford, 2:21 1/2 and 13 others.
					By Alexander's Norman 25

If MONTEREY begets colts like himself he will prove to be the poor man's friend, for it will cost but little to bring them to the races.

MONTEREY had but five months' training before making his record of 2:13 3/4, last half in 1:03 3/4. Last season I had no idea of getting him beaten, but his foot was injured in the blacksmith shop, consequently he had to be let up in his training. Previous to this unfortunate accident, I drove him a mile in 2:11 1/4, last half in 1:02 1/4, last quarter in 30 seconds. This was done in the presence of 3,000 people about July 10th. I could have driven him better than 2:10, as he seems to be all right. I look for him to get the harness record this year, which ought to make his produce very salable.

MONTEREY is a thorough race horse, as he is level-headed and game as a pebble. He has a fine, resolute way of going a gait so much admired by all. A glance at his pedigree will convince any horseman that he is bred in the purple and is justly entitled to his extra speed. Every one of his family are producers of early and extreme speed.

MONTEREY is one of the gamest horses I ever drove, and, like his full brother, Montana, 2:16 1/4, the races are never too long for him. Montana won the Occident Stake in seven heats and many a hard-fought race since.

Hattie, dam of Montana and Monterey, is a grand-looking bay mare, and I consider her one of the very strongest, as well as one of the best-bred mares in America. Her sire is strongly bred, and sires speed. To his credit may be mentioned Meteor, 2:17 1/4; Carrie Bell, 2:23 1/4; the dams of Iago, 2:11; Fell-fare, 2:10 3/4; Galette, 2:12 1/4, and thirteen others in the list.

I have every reason to expect that Monterey will be the "King of all Trotters." In color he is a rich chestnut, and in conformation he has strong loins and back, good shoulders, fine head and neck, and the best of feet and legs. He weighs 1,200 pounds and stands 15 3/8 hands.

I will have Monterey at my ranch at Milpitas any time mares are sent there.

TERMS, $50, With Usual Return Privileges.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898, as Monterey will then be prepared for the races. All bills payable not later than that date. Address all letters to

SOME IMPRESSIVE FACTS ANENT BREEDING GALLOPERS.

In England and the Colonies there is scarcely any demand for the services of stallions that are not of the Eclipse male line, and the classic stake winners from this male line lead the others as far as O'Kelly's great horse did in his race along about 1769 and 1770. It was indeed a case of "Eclipse first and the rest nowhere," as his Irish owner was fond of remarking about the probable outcome of the races in which his English celebrity was engaged.

But the success at the stud of Hanover and Sir Modred, placing them first and second respectively on the list of "winning sires" of America, make one think there must be something in the other male lines (Herod and Matchem) possessing merit. Hanover, the leading American sire, for several years past and again in front during 1897, is of the Herod male line, and his great grandsire was Vandal, the best son of Glencoe either as a race horse or sire. It is peculiar that Sir Modred and Cheviot trace the same way—Selim and Castrel (brothers)—Buzzard—Woodpecker—Herod. Then Tartar—Partner—Jigg—Byerly Turk. Sir Modred, strange to say, goes to a daughter of Byerly Turk on the female side of the house also.

Ornament, the best three-year-old of the year, is of the Eclipse male line and goes to the same source on the female side as did Vandal and Levity, Salvator, Leonatus, Luke Blackburn, The Bard and many other turf celebrities of this country. Hamburg, the best two-year-old of 1897, is by Hanover, of the Herod line, and the dam came from the same family as did the renowned Domino, Reel, Glidelia, Waltz, Lucky Dog, Starke, Priores, Lecompte, &c. This is called the 'Dance family.'

The best horse of the all-aged division, take him in all in all, was probably Ben Brush, and he is of the Eclipse male line, it running Bramble—Bonnie Scotland—Igo—Don John Waverley—Whalebone—Waxy—Pot-8-os—Eclipse. Then Marske—Squirt—Bartlett's Childers—Darley Arabian. The dam of Ben Brush, Roseville, by Reform, traced in the female line right back through Parachute, Heraldry, Margaret Woods and Maria West, all celebrities, to a mare by imp. Janus. We recently discovered evidence that makes us believe the pedigree can be traced on the female side of the Burton Barb mare. It is a thoroughly American pedigree on the mother's side of the house, but from it have come several that could lay claim to championship honors, such as Modesty, Bright Phoebus, The Banshee, True Blue, Heraldry, Margaret Woods, Maria West and Wagner.

The greatest American sire and by odds the best race horse of his generation, the immortal Lexington, was by Boston (best race horse of his day and of the Herod male line), dam the superb race mare, Alice Carneal, by imp. Sarpedon. Alice's eighth dam was imp. Duchess, by Cullen Arabian, and the sixth dam of Duchess was "the old Montague mare," to which source, strangely enough, and through imp. Duchess, too, traced Vandal and Levity, and we are inclined to the belief that it is by odds the greatest racing and producing family in America.

It was to the Tranby mare that the credit should go, for she threw Levity, Vandal, Alaric, Attala (brought to California), Volga and Vistula. The Tranby mare must have been a grand individual, and her sire, Tranby, was the best "stayer" in England. Alaric was a grand race horse, Attala a superior one, but unfortunately both were gelded. Vandal was her only son that the knife of the surgeon did not enter, and he was not only a first-class race horse, but a very successful sire as well, among his get being Mollie Jackson (best mare of her day), Ella D. (winner at one, two and three-mile heats), Jack the Barber, Seven Oaks (winner of seven out of eight races), Capitola (dam of King Alfonso), Coral (dam of Wanderer and Uncas), Virgil (sire of Hindoo and a host of celebrities), Vicksburg, Vanderbilt, Vassal and Ventilator (last-named trio very fair sires), Voltigeur, Vandalite (best mare of her day and the dam of several good winners in California), Council Bluffs, Highland Vintage, Sally Gardner and Vocalist.

Of course Levity, Vandal's half-sister, was a great broodmare, but Vandal was a better racer and ranked just as high as a sire as Levity did in the broodmare line. It is a noteworthy fact that Vandal traced twenty-six times to the Godolphin Arabian, founder of what is known as the Matchem line. The best male line descendant in America of Matchem are imp. Darebin, Spendthrift, Miser and Flam beau. The Matchem is the rarest of the three great lines.

The Tranby cross shows to good advantage in Lady Canton and her descendants. She was the dam of Bronx, Recovery and Lady Lancaster, all by imp. Monarch, Lady Lancaster the only filly foal. The latter threw Sagamore, Malcolm, Caledonia, Rochester, Ontario, Regent, Lady Fairfield and Lady Greenfield, by imp. Bonnie Scotland, and Lady Amanda, by imp. Hurrah. Malcolm and Regent were superior racers and sires, the former getting the greatest of all American stud matrons, Marion, mother of El Rio Rey, Emperor of Norfolk, Yo Tambien, The Czar, etc. Ontario was the best race mare of her day and threw the wonderful McWhirter, also Curiosity, McHenry, Grayson and McDonald. Lady Amanda was a high-class race mare and threw Sir Thad, Lady Viva and the crack Rathbone, who sired several good winners. Tranbyson, by imp. Tranby, threw Big Boston, Belle Lewis and the famous Bay Dick.

Imp. Tranby, who was the acknowledged best "stayer" in England, was by the once despised Blacklock out of a mare by Orville, winner of the St. Leger and very stoutly bred back of that. We are inclined to think, therefore, it was the stout Tranby blood that gave Vandal, Levity, Lady Lancaster, Bay Dick, etc., their excellence, and as Tranby did not have the best of stud opportunities, and the blood is accordingly rare, it would not surprise us to see students of breeding searching particularly for Tranby crosses in pedigrees in future and incidentally for Vandal crosses and for mares tracing to the old Montague mare. They are equal to anything ever known. Tranby was by Blacklock, Vandal by imp. Glencoe, and it is a peculiar fact that St. Simon, of the Blacklock male line, has been at the top of the "winning stallions" list in England for many years, Hanover (of the Vandal or Glencoe male line) at the top in this country for the past four years, with a prospect of leading for many more.

THE SUSPECTS OF THE RACING FOLD.

The investigation that has been carried on by the C. J. C. stewards has created the greatest sensation in "horse" circles in all of California's turf history. It will do a world of good—at least for a time—but, as we claimed years ago, there will never be thoroughly clean racing until the totalizer takes the place of the bribe-offering bookmaker and his dark-lantern agent who generally has several races run the night before. The Little Pete scandal gave the officials here ideas regarding thief-catching that stands them in good stead at this time. Detectives engaged collected enough evidence to keep a host of villains on the other side of the race track fence, and it's too bad they cannot be made to don stripes and break rock.

The stand taken by President Williams and the C. J. C. officials challenges the admiration of all those that desire to see clean racing. In August, 1896, The Jockey Club, with headquarters in New York, was called upon to investigate just such a combination as is alleged to exist here, and while few were punished, it nipped in the bud a number of well-laid plans of boys and men.

But, as remarked before, the bookmaker is generally at the bottom of all the crookedness at the race courses. There may be two or three middlemen, or agents, but good detectives can get the right of it and ferret out the schemes and the names of the schemers.

It would not surprise us to hear of one or more jockeys being ruled off for life, then promised a reinstatement in due time after the youth that has failed to keep in the middle of the road has made a clean breast of everything, had it put in writing, and left no door by which the guilty ones could escape.

In regard to one of the bookmaker suspects, it has been common talk around the tracks in this vicinity that if one desired to know whether Jockey Eddie Jones was trying or not, all they had to do was—gaze at his slate for a few moments and see if he offered a shade better price against Jones' mount than his brother bookies. Whether there was anything in this or not is the province of the stewards to investigate. Not long ago (to show how this pencil's operations on horses ridden by Jones were regarded by public and bookmakers), Bonita was in a race at Ingleside. At the last moment Clawson was substituted for Jones. Immediately the change was announced loud guffaws were heard on all sides of the ring, and when they had somewhat subsided the voice of this particular bookmaker was heard above the din, "I'll lay $3,000 to $5,000 Bonita does not show!" Why should this pencil feel called upon to shout so lustily that he would bet $3,000 to $5,000 that Bonita would not show, if he did not feel that his actions in taking all kinds of money against the filly's chances had been noted by his fellow knights of the chalk and strong box? And why should this bookmaker, upon the suspension of Eddie Jones and Spencer, suddenly feel called upon to take a vacation? It looks bad, anyhow.

The alleged middlemen or agents will have a hard time explaining matters too—how it is that they continually seek the company of well known jockeys evenings after the races are over, take them to theaters, supply them with drinks and cigars, laugh at the slightest remark the pigskin artist may make, etc. Does it look right for a man of thirty years or more to pick as associates boys of from eighteen to twenty-one years? And how does the thirty-year-old (who owns not a single race horse) manage to live on the fat of the land, to smoke two-bit cigars, wear diamonds and clothes of most fashionable cut 365 days per year? Whence comes the income to sustain all this grandeur? All these questions these persons will be called upon to answer. But how the answers will be taken by the C. J. C. officials is what is what is of great interest to a long-suffering public. It will take several days to dispose of these cases if a careful investigation is had.

POSTPONED ACTION ON THE RESTRICTING ORDINANCE.

The Board of Supervisors, at its meeting last Monday afternoon, decided to postpone action on the proposed Clinton ordinance until next Monday. The measure, if it is made a local law, will restrict racing here to forty-eight days per year. An effort will be made to insert the word "consecutive," it is understood. Supervisor Clinton's spasm of goodness is hard to account for. He contends that over $1,400,000 is taken out of the legitimate channels of trade in one year, but he forgets to compute the benefits the city derives through the coming of hundreds of strangers, human and equine. In a recent article published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN we showed that over $1,600,000 was brought into circulation during a six-months' race meeting that would not have been had there been no racing. Thus the balance is on the right side of the ledger, even on the showing of the city father. Mayor Phelan takes the ground that racing should be restricted because women become infatuated with it and speaks of "ladies' day" as a home-wrecking affair. The Mayor was right, but isn't now, because "ladies' day" has been done away with for good and all by the P. C. J. C. management. In fact about one month ago they decided to have no more free gates for the fair. The Clinton ordinance has a sturdy opponent in Supervisor Smith, whose brother has for years been connected with racing either as a trainer or a bookmaker. It was Supervisor Smith who secured the postponement to next Monday. He stated that his object in securing it was in order that the officials at Ingleside track might be given an opportunity of proving the incorrectness of Supervisor Clinton's figures. Dr. Clinton calculated that during the season $136,000 was taken in at the Ingleside gates; $850,000 was the amount which the books absorbed from the public and $425,000 went to the down-town pool rooms. In other words, he declared that the sum of $1,411,000 was taken yearly on this side of the bay from the legitimate channels of trade and that instead of the operation of the track being a benefit to business it was the reverse, tradesmen throughout the city complaining of unpaid bills of their patrons, whose earnings were squandered in the futile effort to beat the bookmakers. He called attention to the fact that this was the only State that permitted a protracted season of racing, and he pictured the various evils that he insisted were attendant upon this form of speculation.

Clinton, however, made a fatal mistake in his argument. He said that just before the meeting a gentleman, introducing himself as the President of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club, told him that the contemplated passage of this ordinance was a job put up by the people of the California Jockey Club in order to injure the Pacific Coast Jockey Club. Clinton's reply to this was that he was glad to have such an ally in order to accomplish the object of the ordinance.

This statement aroused Supervisor Rottanzi to declare that if the measure was in the nature of a "cinch" affair backed by a rival club, further time should be given to its consideration. At this juncture Smith moved that the order be laid over a week. Then Davany pointed out the indefinite character of the limitation as expressed by the words "forty-eight days of each year," and Clinton was headed off from making any further remarks by a motion to refer the matter back to the special committee that had recommended its passage, with instructions to amend it so as to provide for four weeks of racing in the fall and a like period in the spring.

It would not be very surprising if it were proven that a certain political boss was back of the proposed ordinance and that it was to show his power that the measure was proposed. We are told on good authority that word was sent the P. C. J. C. people through two politicians that if a certain racer were not reinstated at once that he (the "boss") "would close the d—d track." It is at least strange that so soon after the refusal of the P. C. J. C. officials to do as they were told, this measure should come up. We believe the animal should be reinstated—that the racing officials erred in not reinstating it—but we do not think there is any more harm in racing seventy-five days per year in a city than in running forty-eight. If the Alameda County Supervisors should pass a measure similar to the one proposed by Supervisor Clinton there would be a noticeable falling off in the receipts of the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, the hotel and restaurant keeper, for people will not make the trip from the East, bringing money and horses, if there are but ninety-six days of racing here per year, instead of 150. Let the Supervisors investigate this matter thoroughly and see if racing is or is not beneficial to a city. If it is found that it helps the farmer, furnishes employment to hundreds of men and boys, keeps hotels, boarding-houses and many other kinds of establishments running, then it must be beneficial, and the measure should be so deeply pocketed that it could never be brought to the surface again under any plea.

ED. CORRIGAN'S HORSES—A LITTLE REMINISCENCE.

The success of Ed Corrigan's horses speaks mightily well for their trainer, whoever he is. The victories of Joe Ullman, Won't Dance, Ach, Hurly Burly, Milt. Young, Frank Ireland and others of the big turfman's string would indicate that he is fast retrieving his lost fortunes. The services of Tod Sloan, on the backs of these horses must not be overlooked, however, for in many cases it has been his good judgment that carried the day and landed the big ends of the purses. It would appear that the ex-Master of Hawthorne has a very valuable stallion in Riley, the Longfellow horse that won the Kentucky Derby for him in 1890. Joe Ullman is by Riley, as is also Hurly Burly, Frank Ireland and Daisy F. The last-named is from Modesty, the great daughter of War Dance that won the first American Derby, which was in the year 1884. Mr. Corrigan owned two mares, Pearl Jennings and Modesty, that piled up a fortune for him, and his first galloper was Hattie Harris, the dam of Joe Murphy and Joe Ullman. Pearl Jennings, by Lelaps, out of Mary Howard, won all kinds of races in the '80's, and beat the best in the land. We have never figured it up, but her wins must have numbered fifty, at the least. Modesty (once called Golden Rod) did not win half that many, but her victories included more stakes. The best horse, in our opinion, among the host owned by the handsomer of the turfmen Corrigan was undoubtedly Freeland, who twice in one season defeated the pride of the Dwyer Bros.' heart, the supposed invincible Miss Woodford. The mare beat Freeland once, but it was by a narrow margin, and Ed Corrigan's Longfellow gelding was regarded by most persons as America's champion racer. Freeland was poisoned by some fiend when he was a three-year-old at St. Louis, but he recovered, and raced until he was a very old horse. For years the owner of this great galloper pinned his faith to the Longfellow blood, just as Milt Young did to the Bonnie Scotland. He still believes in it, and when he has the War Dance cross close up he likes it better. Won't Dance, Riley, Junius and many others in the stable were bred on those lines. They had both speed and stamina and were worthy of the dependence placed in them. Mr. Corrigan is aggressive and very decided in his opinions, and in consequence makes many enemies, but he has excellent ideas anent breeding race horses as well as other matters and a dry-witty way of expressing the same.

THE HORSE OF THE CENTURY.

We present, on our title page this week a picture of Ormonde, generally known as "the horse of the century." Not only was he the great race horse of an era of great racers, but he is the best-looking thoroughbred a person ever threw his optics on. He has size as well as that indescribable something known as "quality." Ormonde made a couple of seasons in England after he had retired from the turf, on which he won sixteen races and never met defeat, among his wins being the Derby, 2,000 Guineas and St. Leger, in the latter walking over. No one ever knew just how good Ormonde was as a race horse, for no horse ever made him fully extend himself. And when it is taken into account that The Bard, Minting, Saraband, Mephisto and St. Mirin were of the same age as Ormonde, what a great horse he must have been to make such as these look common! At the stud he was a success, being the sire of Orme (a great race horse), Llanthony, Sorcerer and Goldfinch. The latter ranked high as a sire in England last season, Chelandy, a daughter, winning the Oaks and other good races. Goldfinch is now at Rancho del Paso, and is already a sire of winners in America. As is well-known, W. O'B. Macdonough gave $150,000 to Senor Bocau, of Buenos Ayres, for Ormonde, and it cost the young millionaire perhaps $15,000 more before he was landed at Menlo Stock Farm, San Mateo county, which has been his home for the past four years. There will be a number of Ormonde youngsters out next season, and so well does Mr. Macdonough think of them that he refused an offer of $8,000 for an Ormonde yearling last fall. But two Ormondes foaled in America have started here—Orestes and Rosormonde—and the first named, while never better than second, was a most promising fellow. Death cut short his career as a two-year-old, however. Rosormonde was a stake-winner last year and is now in fair form, bidding fair to add fresh laurels to Ormonde's crown of glory.

DAVE GIDEON ON CALIFORNIA RACING.

Dave Gideon has returned to New York from California. In an interview he said his stay on the coast was a very pleasant experience and as to the racing said: "I enjoyed the racing very much. It was not particularly high class, but don't be led away in the belief that it is easy for poor horses to win at either of the San Francisco tracks. The horses I sent out there were only very moderate ones, but I was disappointed in the showing Town Topics made and believe he is a better colt than he proved. Ballister is no good at all. The lot he beat were maidens, and very inferior ones they were, too. I think Traverser is a very nice colt, and Recreation, Lord Marmion, Napamax and some few others there are almost first class. These good ones make the racing interesting and a crowd of 3,000 to 4,000 nearly always turns out.

THE last Turf, Field and Farm contains an interesting letter from Mrs. John M. Clay, giving a partial history of the Ashland stud founded by the great statesman Henry Clay, with imp. Yorkshire, Magnolia and Margaret Wood as the foundation stones. There is hardly a high class American pedigree in which one or more of these great strains of blood does not figure. Yorkshire was one of the greatest sires America has ever had and through his daughters many brilliant performers have been given the American turf. Margaret Wood, by imp. Priam, and Magnolia, by imp. Glencoe, were two of the most famous mares in the Stud Book. From Margaret Wood came Heraldry, Star Davis, Wade Hampton, Capt. Travis, Yorktown and Maria Wood, the three last mentioned by imp. Yorkshire, and Magnolia produced Magic, Madcap, Princeton, Charles Morgan and Skedaddle by imp. Yorkshire, Charley Ball by Wagner, and Daniel Boone, Kentucky, the best race horse of his day, and Gilroy, by Lexington. From Magnolia descended Iroquois, Sir Dixon and Belvidere, three of the leading sires of America. Yorkshire, Magnolia and Margaret Wood are tap-roots and household names, and their descendants are still perpetuating and keeping fresh the memories of those great strains of blood.

THE prospects for a brilliant racing season were never better than now. At all the Southern and Western tracks good weather has blessed the trainers and all reports indicate that the horses are well forward in their work, especially at the Lexington track, from which some fast work is reported. In this locality the weather for the past week or two has been unusually open, and the trainers at the metropolitan tracks are making good use of it, though their charges have not as yet gone beyond the preliminary preparation for going in training, except such horses as are being pointed for the Washington meeting, which begins on April 11th and opens the legitimate season in the East. The Southern Circuit opens at Little Rock on March 30th, and barring the clash of dates at Memphis, Newport and Lexington, there is nothing down the line to produce friction.

THE Lincolnshire handicap of 200 sovereigns was won Tuesday by W. A. Clark's five-year-old chestnut colt Prince Barcardine, by Barcardine, out of St. Olavo. High Treasurer was second and Ravensdale was third. Fifteen horses ran. James R. Keene's chestnut colt Voter started, but did not finish among the first four horses. The start was somewhat bad, owing to Voter displaying evil temper, and it became necessary to lead the American horse to the post. Ravensdale led at the beginning of the race, with Voter last. There was little change in the order of the horses till near the finish, when High Treasurer supplanted Ravensdale, which was soon passed by Prince Barcardine. The latter took the lead in the last few strides, making a most exciting finish. Voter finished eleventh or twelfth.

BY HOLLY is still the owner of Montallade. It seems that Charley Saunders misunderstood Holly, who instructed him to protect the horse, unless M. A. Gunst bid on him, in which case he was to let him go. Holly, in his satirical way, says he wanted to get Gunst into the business. He said: "I got Dan Burns in and want Gunst in as well." Burns' first venture in the racing business was when he bought Gladiator out of a selling race. Holly let him go to the politician, who did not get a very great bargain.

W. G., SACRAMENTO.—Kindly furnish me the breeding of the thoroughbred stallion 999 in your next paper. Ans.—By imp. Pirate of Penzance, out of Leap Frog (dam of Monrovia and Frog Dance), by Frogtown; second dam, Etta Powell, by Voucher; third dam, Lilac, by Lightning, &c. Imp. Pirate of Penzance is by Prince Charlie (sire of Salvator), dam Plunder, by Buccaneer.

TOMMY GRIFFIN is the owner of a two-year-old by Darriwell out of imp. Spinning Time (dam of Spunwell), and the colt has shown such quality that Griffin has entered him extensively in states throughout the Middle West. The youngster is pretty sure to be a starter at Louisville, Latonia and Oakley. He was purchased at the Reed sale for $105.

TIMMONS & MARKS, with Marquise and Attainment, arrived at the Memphis track Monday from California. Andy Blakely's jumpers, Snowdown, Captain Reese and Iron Duke, came in the same car. T. Griffin's Martha II and Allie Belle are also at the Memphis course.—Daily Racing Form, March 17.

JOHN MACKEY of Rancho del Paso was at the track Tuesday. He says the foals of this year surpass any he has ever seen on the place. The youngsters by imp. Watercross, Star Ruby, Goldfinch, Salvator and Golden Garter are the kind horsemen will be looking for as two-year-olds.

MANAGER ED TIPTON has decided upon a six or seven days' meeting this year at Marcus Daly's favorite town, Hamilton, Mont., to follow on the heels of the fifty-eight days at Butte and Anaconda. He is planning for a fast special horse train in June to run from Chicago to Butte.

J. G. Follansbee, the well-known racing man, was at Oakland Saturday and will spend a few weeks in the State. The popular turfman says there is nothing in the rumor that he has sold the St. Leonards—Bandura colt, who is owned in partnership with his cousin, Foxhall Keene.

ACCORDING to an Eastern authority, the two-year-olds running under the names of Saintly, Milt Young, Clarando, Pat Garrett and A. McKnight have either not been registered or are running under unauthorized names, and it will cost the owners $50 in each case to settle.

LAVATOR, who was credited with burning up the track was virtually left at the post Monday, so that his capabilities in the running line are still shrouded in doubt. He is a half-brother to Geyser, who in our opinion, is the best race horse in California at this time.

LEE CONNERS, a young man well known in racing circles, an adopted son of C. Mulkey, we believe, died Tuesday in this city of consumption. He had a host of friends. Connors trained horses some and had a considerable knowledge of gallopers.

ON April 11th an election will be held in Sausalito, and the fight has narrowed down to a battle between those in favor of running the pool rooms and those against it. It promises to be the most exciting contest ever held across the bay.

LA PARASSEUSE, the Emperor of Norfolk filly that won for Atkin & Lottridge Tuesday, was sold at the Reed (Oneonta Farm) sale. She is the The Truant's first foal. The Truant is by imp. Sir Modred-Teacher.

ROBERT BONNER, the colt by the sire of Marplot (imp. Rossington) out of Belle of Nantura (dam of Judge Denny) continues to win at New Orleans. Yesterday he ran a mile and a sixteenth in 1:48.

A. B. SPRECKELS went down to the Menlo Park Stock Farm Monday and ordered the Ravelston—Geraldine colt destroyed. The youngster was badly deformed.

HARRY MORSE's good mare, Gloaming, who raced out in California four years ago, will be represented on the turf this year by a filly sired by Chorister.

Horse Owners Should Use
GOMBAULT'S

Caustic Balsam

The GREAT FRENCH VETERINARY REMEDY
A Safe, Speedy and POSITIVE CURE.

Prepared exclusively by J. B. Gombault, ex-Veterinary Surgeon to the French Government Stud.

SUPERSEDES ALL CAUTERY OR FIRING
Impossible to produce any scar or blemish. The Safest and most BLISTER ever used. Takes the place of all liniments for mild or severe action. Removes all Bunches or Blemishes from Horses or Cattle.

As a HUMAN REMEDY for Rheumatism, Sprains, Sore Throat, Etc., it is invaluable.

WE GUARANTEE CAUSTIC BALSAM will produce more actual results than a whole bottle of any liniment or sprain cure mixture ever made. Every bottle of Caustic Balsam sold is warranted to give satisfaction. Price $1.50 per bottle. Sold by Druggists, or sent by express, charges paid, with full directions for its use. Send for descriptive circulars, testimonials, etc. Address: J. B. LAWRENCE-WILLIAMS CO., Cleveland, O.

SAM DOGGETT will ride for J. A. Bennett this season.

HENRY SHIELDS has been reinstated by the management and can now ride for all comers.

JAKE MARKLEIN is reported to have resigned his position as trainer for E. S. Gardner & Son.

HUMIDITY, who ran a close second in the stake race Saturday, is a sister to Dungarven, Catalpa and Mabel Glenn.

THE California Jockey Club meeting to be held at Los Angeles either in June or July will be exclusively for the runners.

DON'T TELL, Louis Ezell's Luke Blackburn—Secret filly, which ran second in the first race Tuesday, was cut down pretty badly.

BRIAR SWEET is about the warmest sprinting article seen here in many a day, as her five furlongs in 1:00½ over Ingleside track, pulled up, shows.

ETON JACKET, a four-year-old filly, by imp. Whistle Jacket—Reply, a good performer, dropped dead just as she passed under the wire at New Orleans Tuesday.

DR. R. M. BRYAN has sold to Charles W. Moore, the chestnut broodmare Repent, foaled 1888, by imp. King Ban, dam Herzegovina, by Waverly. Terms private.

STARTER FITZGERALD has accepted a proposal to wield the flag at the Aqueduct meeting. This gives him all of the early Eastern circuit except Bennings, where Matt Byrnes will officiate.

THE two-year-old colt by imp. Top Gallant, dam Kitty Gunn, has been named Streamer, and is said to be one of the most promising youngsters in training at Kontgomery Park, Memphis. He is owned by J. M. Murphy of St. Louis.

TOD SLOAN broke a riding record yesterday. He had five mounts—Briar Sweet, Frank Ireland, Queen Nubia, Joe Ullman and Dr. Marks, and landed every one first past the post. Truly our handicapper was right when he placed Tod in a class by himself.

THE Tennessee Derby will be decided at Montgomery Park, Memphis, April 19. Sixteen three-year-olds are eligible, the most probable starters being Lieber Karl, Ban-nockburn, Isabe, Goodrich, Swango, Eitholin, Libation, Gallivant and Jackanapes.

It is almost settled that there will be racing five days in each week at all the major tracks in the East. The Westchester Association has scheduled stakes for nearly every day of the spring meeting, and its example has been followed by the Coney Island Jockey Club.

NEW JERSEY justice is rather severe on pool-sellers. At Paterson, N. J., recently, Wesley Ackerman and Emanuel Rubenstein were found guilty of selling pools on horse races, and were sentenced to one year in State Prison and $1,000 fine. Both men have taken an appeal to the higher courts.

JOHNNY CAMPBELL and H. L. Frank were red-hot after the stake race Saturday. Cash Sloan was instructed to stay up with the leaders if he had to send Bland a mile in 1:40. Trainer and owner say that they never had a worse ride. In view of the instructions, Sloan certainly rode a miserable race.

LINSTOCK, winner of the Pacific Union Stakes, is an own brother to several good performers. Had he been forced out he could have equaled the Coast record of 1:52½. As it was, the three-year-old ran a mile and a furlong in 1:53. Traverser had enough at a mile and Fleur de Lis lost her chances by chasing the big Rossington colt.

P. J. DWYER already has a formidable string of racers at Bennings. Two are in charge of W. Jennings, and the following are being trained by J. Hines: Passover, ch c, 4, by Hanover—Miss Hight; Rifle, b c, 4, (brother to Napamox,) by Maxim—Naps; Handpress, b c, 3, by Hanover—Pomona; Overboard, ch c, 2, by Onondago—Central Fire; Holdup, ch c, 2, by Hanover—Florence M.; Sharpless, b c, 2, by Hindoo—Becky Sharp; Chanler, b c, 2, by Hyderabad—Ella T.; Holden, ch c, 2, Sir Dixon—Daphne.

MONTALLADE was bid up to $805 after his clever victory in the last race Saturday. Nick Hall started the hoisting at $600 and then retired. Mose Gunst then took a hand and carried it to $800. Charlie Sanders, who was supposed to be representing Owner Holly, bought him in at $805. Mr. Holly repudiated the bid and the horse was charged to Sanders' account.

CHIEF OF POLICE LEES says the system so long advocated by the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN's to close the down-town pool-rooms has worked successfully. The visitors to these places do not need to be questioned about their object in going there more than once. The pool-room proprietors closed up shop early Monday and were at the races all the rest of the afternoon.

W. T. CANNON, Morganfield, Ky., has leased from Messrs. Williams & Radford, Adelbert Stud, Ky., the racing qualities of the following fillies: Lassie Williams, br f, 3, by imp Simon Magnus, dam Black Swain, by Emperor; Mrs. Welsbach, ch f, 3, by imp. Dandie Dinmont, dam Luminous by Rayon d'Or, and Baddina, br f, 3, by Carlsbad, dam Duchess May, by Virgil.

THE "Chronicle" states that the Clinton ordinance, limiting the racing season in San Francisco to forty-eight days, will surely become a law. If this follows, it will be only verifying the prediction made in the "Breeder and Sportsman" that the giving of track information to the daily afternoon papers would prove to be the worst thing the associations could do and that it was the surest means of incurring prohibitive legislation.

CHIEF LEES issued orders to Captain Wittman Saturday to detail two officers in uniform in each of the down-town poolrooms where women are allowed to place bets on horse races. They are instructed to take the names and addresses of each woman making a bet and keep account of each visit. When satisfied that she is a frequenter of a poolroom, the officers have authority to arrest both the woman making the bet and the poolroom clerk accepting the same.

GEORGE M. RYE, of Little Rock, Ark., was shot and killed in Washington, D. C., on Tuesday, March 15, by Dennis J. Canty, a stock broker. The cause was a difference between them as to some money matters. It is said that Rye drew a knife on Canty, and the killing was in self defense. Mr. Rye has for some years been connected with the turf in a small way as a breeder and owner of some good racehorses, among them Long Dance, winner of the Travers and Kenner Stakes.

A. B. SPRECKELS made the clean-up of the season at Oakland on Saturday when Sevens won. His exact winnings are not known, but $12,000 is not far from the mark. Mr. Spreckels bred and named the filly, and she was sold at the second Spreckels sale at the Occidental Horse Exchange for $605. Nick S. Hall was her purchaser. The daughter of imp. Watercross and Folly (latter sister to Sinfax) is an awful good-looking filly, and she is credited with having worked half a mile in 0:48½ with her weight up. Surely this was good enough to bet on, and that's what Mr. Spreckels did in every book in the big ring, too.

MAJOR S. N. ANDROUS returned from Los Angeles Monday, where he attended a meeting of the directors of the Sixth District Agricultural association. The annual meeting is to be held as usual in October, and will cover a period of twelve days, while the association will hang up some very tempting purses so as to attract the best runners, pacers and trotters to Los Angeles. President Lynch has been empowered to arrange several big stake events, and no money will be spared to make the Los Angeles meeting the greatest mixed meeting ever held in the West. As harness racing is very popular in Southern California, something like $20,000 will be offered for the trotters and pacers.

The biggest foreign campaign ever attempted by American horses was opened Monday at Lincoln, England, when the first notable event of the racing season was decided. This is the Lincolnshire handicap, over a straight mile on Carlholme, as the course is called, and there are four American-bred candidates eligible. Two of these are now owned by foreigners. Great interest is manifested among the horse-men on this side in St. Cloud II, and Voter, the clever four-year-olds owned by James R. Keene. While St. Cloud II, has been more favored in the betting on the strength of his third in the St. Leger and second in the Cambridgeshire last fall, it is now thought Voter, yet an unknown quality outside of his stable abroad, will carry the hopes and first colors of his stable. Voter carries 124 pounds, top weight in a field of twenty-two, while St. Cloud's impost is 119.

BUFFALO, N. Y., Aug. 15, 1895.—I have used the Speed Sustaining Elixir on a number of horses, and can sincerely say it is a great aid to any horse while undergoing fatiguing work. As an aid to respiration it stands without an equal, it making a horse blow out quicker and easier than usual. I can say to my friends: "Use it, and you will indorse all I say of it."—J. A. HALL, Columbus, O.

THE Union Pacific Railroad Company has recently built some very fine resting stables, with box-stalls and other modern conveniences, including an outside paddock, at Ogden, Utah, for the free use of horse-owners shipping by this old and popular route, which will be highly appreciated. The "Overland Limited" leaving San Francisco daily at 6 P. M. for Chicago is now the finest and fastest train in the West composed of Pullman latest improved double drawing-room sleepers, dining cars and composite buffet smoking library cars, between Ogden and Chicago, also through tourist sleepers for the accommodation of passengers holding second-class tickets. For tickets and sleeping car accommodations call on D. W. Hitchcock, General Agent No. 1 Montgomery street, San Francisco, Cal.

SECRETARY NATHANSON has announced that the home racing campaign will open at the Lakeside, Ind., track Thursday, May 5th, and continue there through the fifteen days allowed by the Indiana law. This will be pleasing information to Chicago's thousands of admirers of racing. The date selected is early enough. April weather is none too pleasant at Roby, as last year's experience showed. Racing at Newport and Memphis will close in time to permit the horses at those points to reach Chicago and have several days for preparation. Purses from $400 upwards will prove a sufficient inducement to attract an abundant array of horses. The racing officials have not been announced, but it need hardly be said that Richard Dwyer will do the starting and it is probable that John Kelsey will preside in the judge's stand. The book programme is in preparation, and will be issued near the first of next month.—Daily Racing Form.

THE race for the Pacific Union Stakes, $1,500, mile and a furlong, was very pretty, and at the same time surprising. Traverser led Fleur de Lis by a scant length until they had gone seven furlongs. Here the mare began falling back and Linstock, third, made his move. Won't Dance was also coming strong on the outside. Traverser was done for when he had traversed a mile of ground, and fell back until he was absolutely last, Linstock coming on a handy three-length victory. Won't Dance beating the poorly-ridden Senator Bland a head for the place in a drive. The time, 1:53, marked one of the fastest races ever run at a mile and a furlong on the Pacific Coast, it having been eclipsed on but one occasion. Clawson rode the winner (who is a three-year-old bay gelding owned by W. B. Applegate, and by Logic—Blue Stockings), in a masterly manner. As good as 12 to 1 could be had against Linstock at the close. Traverser, Senator Bland and Fleur de Lis were heavy disappointments to their admirers.

MR. MARCUS DALY's horses now in Trainer Wm. Lake-land's charge are as follows: Imp. Ogden, b c, 4, by Kilwarlin—Oriole; Imp. Isidor, ch c, 4, by Amphion—Isis; Ham-burg, b c, 3, by Hanover—Lady Reel; Kitefoot, ch c, 3, by Buchanan—Longshore; Gold Car, ch c, 2, by imp. Gold-finch—Carita; Croker, b c, 2, by Tammany—Belinda; Red Coat, ch c, 2, by Montana—Bedecote; chestnut colt, by imp. Inverness—Buttercup; brown filly, 2, by imp. Inverness—Walnut; chestnut filly, 2, by Tammany—Isis. Besides the foregoing, Lakeland also has in training the following belonging to himself: Decide, b g, 5, by Deceiver—Miss Charmer; Winged Foot, ch f, 4, by Buchanan—Longshore; George Boyd, b c, 3, by Falsetto—Cachuca; Squire Abingdon, b g, 3, by Meddler—Orizaba; Maximo Gomez, ch g, 3, by Victory—Quesal; Joe Anderson, ch c, 3, by St. Blaise—Mary Anderson; Chorus Boy, ch g, 2, by Chorister—Vivid; Young Exile, b c, 2, by Exile—Fidele; Ethel Green, b f, 2, by Tea Tray—Kalula; chestnut filly, 2, by imp. Goldfinch—Lizzie Dunbar; chestnut filly, 2, by imp. Goldfinch—Firenzi.

MR. BRACKEN of Franklin county has introduced a bill in the Ohio House of Representatives, which provides that in all counties having cities exceeding 20,000 inhabitants the Mayor shall appoint a commission consisting of two journeymen horseshoers, two boss horseshoers and one veterinary surgeon, which commission shall examine all men engaged in the vocation of horseshoeing and instruct them where their knowledge appears to be deficient. A charge of 50 cents is to be made for the examination, and where the applicant's knowledge is satisfactory, a certificate of ability, good for life, is to be issued. Where applicants are deficient in knowledge they are to be instructed, and the board may, if it sees fit, refuse to issue a certificate to any applicant, in which case he is forbidden to engage in the horseshoeing business. The Ohio Humane Society has agreed to furnish competent veterinary surgeons to serve on commissions without pay. The bill is so drawn that any town may avail itself of its provisions, but it is mandatory in counties having cities of 20,000 population or more.

THE total number of entries received for the twenty stakes offered by the Northern Racing Circuit, which includes the tracks at Highland Park, Detroit, Windsor, Fort Erie and Montreal, is 1,498. The event receiving the best support is the Brewster's Stake with 114 nominations. The Cascade Stakes has 107, the Michigan Derby 50, the Banner 91, the Canadian Derby 42, Windsor Hotel 102, the Essex 87, the Belle Isle 74, the Belle Air 79, Forest and Stream 73, St. Lawrence 75, Merchants' 58, Consolation 45, Welland 81, Queenstown 83, Niagara 66, Canadian Sportsman 73 and Garland 80. Mr. Farmer says that the recent sale of the Fort Erie track will in no wise affect the lease which he and his company have on the property, and that the meeting will come off as scheduled. It has been published in a number of papers that John J. Carter would be the presiding judge on the circuit, but this is not positively known yet. The position has been tendered Mr. Carter but has not been accepted by him, though the chances are that he will do so this week. Inducements have been offered Mr. Carter to remain in California all the spring and summer, and if he comes to the northern circuit he will be under the necessity of declining the offer made to him to remain on the Coast.—Spirit of the Times.

SPECIAL DEPARTMENT.—As this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will be read by thousands who, in all probability, have not seen it before it may be well to give a further explanation than that presented by the headlines.

Whatever appears in that department is an expression of my individual opinion, the whole responsibility resting on me and if the views promulgated do not meet the approval of any readers the blame should not be transferred to another person. As is well known to those who have read what I have written, I have decided opinions in relation to the many questions arising in connection with racing, and am greatly pleased to state that while a few have taken umbrage a large majority sustain the efforts I have made to relieve racing of features that have awakened public disapproval.

The only foundation that any kind of sport can be erected upon and retain its hold on those who have a fondness for it, is the assurance that nothing will be left undone to check attempted fraud. And when it is proved that notwithstanding the utmost vigilance there has been violations of the law or a serious breach of the ethics that should govern, punishment shall follow be the culprit of high or low degree.

This is the only point I am obstinate in sustaining, and though, of course, there are other questions which will provoke animated discussions, with square, "honest endeavor" on the part of every driver to win, I shall be satisfied.

EXCEEDINGLY WELL PLEASED.—In the first number of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, July 1, 1882, appeared a prospectus, which is again reproduced, inasmuch as it meets the approbation of the present proprietor, Judson K. Moore, and can, therefore, be accepted as an outline of the course he will pursue.

It may be regarded as somewhat too pretentious when the full scope of the announcement is taken into consideration. When first written I had great faith that the promises would be fulfilled, and had it not been that unforeseen circumstances came in the way have no reason to think that the belief was not well founded.

That prospects are brightening for papers that are of the class, which is mainly dependent on the interests connected with the breeding of horses is fairly apparent, and with that will come a share of the prosperity attending the revivification of the business, and whatever the increase of the support may be the augmentation of patronage will be followed by a like enlargement of the paper, and, consequently, an incorporation of all the various themes mentioned in the prospectus.

For instance, the departments were thus arranged in the first volumes of the paper and continued for several years. I copy from the first number: "Notable Horses of California; Correspondence, The Turf, The Track, Turf and Track, The Paddock, The Herd, Athletics, The Gun, Editorials, Rowing, Yachting, The Rifle, Trap and Wing, Fish, the Kennel, Coursing, Bicycling, The Stage, Outdoor Sports, Market Report."

With the exception of the stage, all of those mentioned, and others in addition, comprised under the general head of The Farm, will find a place hereafter, and this justifies the republication of the initiatory editorial.

With the exception of the period after I sold my interest in the paper until I again resumed work on it, I have been connected with the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, and it is hardly necessary to state that my interest in its well-doing is as keen now as when the first number was issued.

And, furthermore, the resolution of Mr. Moore to continue it on the lines marked sixteen years ago is exceedingly gratifying to me.

To those who prefer the sunny side of life, who appreciate the many enjoyments the Great Creator has placed within our reach, who are not held in bondage by fanaticism to see merit in gloom, and to consider all diversions frivolous, if not absolutely wicked; to those who can discover the golden edging to the blackest cloud, and who have faith that there is always a silver lining within the shadow; to those who seek to make the bright days brighter, and who are earnest in their endeavors to increase the happiness of all, our greeting is presented.

There is implanted in every human being a desire for enjoyment. In place of trying to eradicate it as a pernicious propensity, our effort will be to direct it so that it may be beneficially indulged. Believing that there is little virtue in austerity, or salvation in asceticism, our aim will be to follow paths which lead in other directions.

By the side of the mountain brook, when the spring flowers are blooming and the linnets and robins are singing their liveliest notes; through the forests, when there is quiet and fragrance, and where the interlocking branches form giant arches, and the music of the breeze sighing through the twigs;

Among verdant fields, where foals are gamboling around their dams, and the lowing of cattle and the bleating of sheep welcoming the herdsman and shepherd;

Over the glad waters, where the spray is sparkling in the sunshine and the white sails are in a tremor, and the masts quivering in the excitement of motion, swift, and as graceful as the flight of the sea-gull;

By the side of the race course, when there is an eager strife for mastery and the blood bounds through the veins and arteries, and there are shouts and cheers, and an intensity of feeling that is indescribable;

On the plains, where the fleet courser flits by like the shadows of clouds over a waving grainfield when there is a brisk wind driving the fleecy tullements of vapor between earth and sun;

Under the lee of the coppice, when the flag-tailed setter or staunch pointer is transformed into a statue, and then the whirl of wings, the sharp report and the puff of smoke vanishing in the clear air;

Through orchards crimson with the flowers of the peach and almond, white with the bloom of the pear and rich with the perfume of orange blossoms;

Sauntering among the vines, green as emerald when the hills are sere and brown, and the clusters hang embowered in the abundant foliage, shining in purple, red, topaz-colored and luscious;

Strolling through fields, when the grain-stalks are bending beneath the bearded heads, and there is the rattle of the reaper and the hum of the thresher;

Halting in the grounds where the young men are developing activity and strength to fit them for the sterner battles of life, and there is a fierce emulation to excel—determination, the antithesis of irresolution—health against the flaccidity of indolence and luxury;

Quiet walks in the evening to weep and laugh over the sorrows and joys, so skillfully counterfeited as to appear actual; lessons burned into the mind with the red-hot iron of realistic effect;

Visits to the family circle, when there is a glow on the hearth; devotees bending over the figures of kings, queens, bishops and knights; eager parties debating the last hand at whist.

This is the merest sketch of the route we intend to compass, a hint of the long journey contemplated.

While the course is marked through a country of sunshine and flowers, enlivened with the song of birds, and which Nature has clothed with a fair garb, there is instruction on either side of the road.

There are learned professors among the travelers to proffer lessons which will benefit, and illustrators who will picture from practical results.

Far from recommending that men—even those who can afford to do so—should spend their whole time in sport, our desires are that they should blend amusement with labor, so that each may have its appropriate place in life. Sport alone is like wearing garments made entirely of decorations, like a meal of condiments and sauces. Ornaments add beauty to the dress, sauces give relish and piquancy to the repast. But there must be strong warp and woof to support the lighter fabrics, and substantial food to produce brain, muscle and bones which will endure the strains which active life impose. To withstand this strain, it is necessary that there should be a proper apportionment of work and a fitting time for recreation. Labor—constant, unremitting labor, especially that work which compels sedentary habits, or long hours of in-door confinement—will speedily wear out the strongest constitution, and there is absolute necessity for relaxation and change. The race horse, with snuws and muscles of the truest kind, endurance perfected by breeding from the best for a score of generations, cannot stand being "keyed up" for long periods. There must be a cessation in the exercise, a change from the track to the roads or fields, else there is a waste which can never be repaired. Man, though capable of undergoing more severe training without permanent injury than animals of any kind, is still amenable to natural laws; and, besides physical loss, the greater danger is from the strain on the brain, and consequently the failure of nerve force.

To aid in adjusting the proper balance between labor and sport, to remove the obstacles which are in the way of a better understanding of the relation between sport and good morals, and to assist in advancing the interests and increasing the enjoyments of all, are our fervent desires.

THE AUSTRALIAN GATE.—From conversations with those who have seen the workings of the "barrier" in Australia, and the newspapers of that country and New Zealand, I have entertained a decided opinion that our people have not yet acquired the art of handling it as well as the antipodean officials.

In the first place, the "flying starts" that are permitted, in a great measure, nullify the advantages, and, conjointly with the recall flag, render it of little benefit. Managed in that way, it is only a slight remove from the old system of starting, whereas, if the horses were compelled to "line up" and remain in that position until the start was ordered, the only advantage obtained would be to the horses which could "break" the best and get away from the score the quickest. A legitimate advantage, as well entitled to the benefit as any other, and then, too, good behavior would secure its just reward.

With an inflexible rule that horses must be compelled to take a position in proximity to the barrier and await the signal to start, and those which were refractory, after a reasonable allotment of time to overcome their stubbornness, forced to accept the conditions consequent upon misbehavior, trainers would take more pains to educate them, and by constant practice remedy the defect so far as it can be overcome. "Bad actors" would then occupy their proper place, and however liberally endowed with other race horse requirements the lack of that one essential, good behavior at the post, render them of small account.

But with such a rule, and that rigidly enforced, trainers would be stimulated to overcome the defect, and in place of instructing jockeys to get off in front at the hazard of incurring penalties, keep their horses quiet as you can and obey the starter's orders. Then the recall. Were the only objection based on the ground that it gave the starter the opportunity to discriminate, to bring them back when the horse he favored had the worst of the "send-off," that would be sufficient cause to banish it from the race courses.

Judging from the newspaper accounts of the race won by Yemen on Wednesday last, that horse was granted privileges incompatible with fair racing.

I have a high opinion of Mr. Ferguson as a starter, but so long as he is handicapped with the power to recall, his talent is negated. The false idea that the favorite in the betting should be given privileges denied to that division which is stigmatized with the application of "dogs" is not sanctioned by "fair play."

And in this connection I enter an emphatic protest against the custom of calling no account race horses by the name of a race so eminently endowed with the qualities which are the reverse of those implied. Greyhounds, inspired by their own spirit, will run until death stops the beating of the brave heart, and there are other breeds which show courage in the highest degree. Even some members of the clan bearing the ignominious title of curs will tackle a bear, and the best pack of bear dogs in northwestern Pennsylvania, when the big woods in that country were measured by hundreds of square miles, were peculiarly curish in appearance. The owner assured me the greatest difficulty he encountered in training them was to restrain the propensity to fly at the head and throat, and notwithstanding his teachings every season some were killed or crippled.

I offer a suggestion, with the smallest hope that it will be accepted and acted upon, that may be of some benefit, however, in considering the starting question. That is the employment of the best starter that can be obtained in Australasia. Not to replace any of the starters that are now engaged by American jockey clubs, but as a teacher, one who is thoroughly competent to instruct, gives "object lessons," of the methods which have proved so successful in his country, these being unquestionably superior to practices here. The prominent clubs in the United States could bear the expense, and whatever the salary, if at all reasonable, a pro rata would not be burdensome. He could commence with the last meetings at Ingleside and Oakland and then travel eastward. Not at all derogatory to our professors of the art of handling fields of race horses to receive instruction! Physicians of the highest standing at home go from California to Paris, to Berlin, to any point in far-away Europe where information can be obtained, not one who has not benefited by the journey. Should this suggestion fail to be carried out, and there is little chance for consummation, then an aspirant for the position of starter might make the trip to the Colonies and pass the racing season in Australia and New Zealand. One who had some practice here who possessed the qualities, or rather a natural bent for the place a quick eye, level head, determination of character, that kind of executive ability which can enforce discipline, in my opinion, would return from his educatory tour eminently fitted for the office.

If he could demonstrate a superiority over that which has prevailed, do away in a great measure with the objections, that are urged against the present methods, do away with the many delays at the post, insure all who were engaged in the race a fair start, save those who had horses that could not be governed, in addition to his own well doing, it would be a boon to racing. It may be that I overrate Australasian methods, and yet when the papers that come from there are free from complaints, when five minutes delay at the post is more than the average waste of time in starting, when printed accounts are verified by the people who have attended races there for years, it is a reasonable assumption that much can be acquired from a study of the system that is so well endorsed. There is little dissimilarity in the conditions. I anything the variation is in favor of this country, at least so far as large fields are concerned, though it may be that the Australasian clubs have been stricter disciplinarians than those of this country. Trainers and jockeys, perhaps, held to a stricter course than they have been permitted to follow here, and that is another point well worthy of consideration.

Many years ago Sir Roderick Cameron, on his return from a long visit to Australia, informed me that the management of racing at Melbourne was superior to any other he had witnessed in Europe or America, and certainly a more competent judge could not be found.

That was before the day of the starting gate, and now that the Australians have had many years of experience, whereas ours is only about twenty-four months, the old adage that "practice brings perfection" is not entirely unapplicable.

LICENSING DRIVERS.—The cauldron in which was thrown the rule for licensing drivers has boiled and bubbled furiously ever since a paper has sought to raise a commotion over the new law.

Should a special meeting of the N. T. A. be held to reconsider the action of the congress, it seems to me that all that is necessary in the way of amendment is to incorporate the word professional with a definition of what constitutes a professional driver.

In order that the "proxy evil" shall not effect the action of the special congress it will be well to send cards to all the members of the N. T. A. with the request that associations which cannot send delegates will express their desires by voting aye or no.

It also might be well to include in the proposition, Shall professional drivers be licensed?

* * *

GOOD NEWS.—Mr. Leavitt, assistant secretary Washington Park Club, has just arrived from Chicago, and he brings the gratifying intelligence that there is more than a probability of that popular club holding a meeting the coming summer. The masses of the Chicago people are so strongly in favor of racing that there is little danger of like interferences to those of two years ago, and everyone connected with fast horses will rejoice over this premier association resuming business. Harness-horse folk have been so well treated by the club heretofore that they will join heartily in the wishes that it may prosper.

* * *

IMPORTANT.—Notices of the meeting of the P. C. T. H. B. A. to be held April 26th, must be sent to the members not later than the 28th inst. in order to be legal. The Secretary will, in all probability, keep the requirements of the constitution in mind, though in that case no harm will come from this notice.

PLEASANTON. Famous all over this hemisphere.—where trotters and pacers are valued—is the pretty town in the eastern portion of Alameda County.

Other parts of the world as well as the harness horses of America have gained high renown in Europe and whoever has acquired rudimentary knowledge of them is aware of the important position the horses trained on the Pleasanton track have occupied.

A string of champions. Alix, 2:03½, carries the honor of the world's record. Azoto, 2:04½, the boss of the neuters, only one second behind. Directum the king of trotting stallions, to which honor his 2:05½ gives title indisputable. Then Flying Jib, who has gone farther when encumbered with harness and "hitched" to a vehicle than any lateral gaited animal has gone, and when 1:58½ was the mark, even with the help of a runner to haul the weight, a wonderful flight of speed. The next fastest is Westmont, pacer, 2:01½, and the fastest for a trotter, 2:03½, so that there is quite a gap closed to his credit. The horses named still hold the world's record, a great many others quondam champions. Direct, Diablo, Directly and a lot more, so that it is safe to say that the track at Pleasanton will be kept in remembrance as long as fast harness horses retain their hold on the people.

A grand collection of them congregated there now. Messrs. Keating, McDowell, William Murray, Mr. Moorhead, Robert Murray, Mr. Sutherland and other knights of the sulky having animals in charge that are sure to make their mark. But my last trip was not made for the purpose of an extended account of the horses—as that will give plenty of material for a chapter by itself,—the object being to get some views of the track and its adjuncts.

A complete failure on my part, though Mr. Silva, an amateur of talent and experience, helped me out, and the illustration accompanying this article is a portion of the main street, the Rose Hotel the conspicuous object in the view. That is headquarters for resident and visiting horsemen and a right comfortable place it is. Reverend Father Powers was included by Mr. Keating in the invitation to lunch and an exceedingly pleasant hour was spent over the noontime meal.

The bill of fare worthy of ecumiums, though the conversation was still more enjoyable. One must be gloomy, indeed, if he can listen to Father Powers, for that length of time, without feeling enlivened, the dark clouds removed, the whole world brightened, and even a confirmed pessimist, getting many radiant glimpses through the rifts in the black and dismal pall that intercepted every ray of sunshine.

"He prayeth best, who loveth best,
God's creatures great and small;"

sang the Ancient Mariner, and a right good creed to adopt.

Disappointed but not disheartened by my failure to secure representations of the Pleasanton track, grounds and stables, and some of the celebrities that are domiciled there. Another visit will be made before long, and as the picture which Mr. Silva took, shows that the instrument is all right, I sincerely hope that Mr. S— will again lend his valuable aid.

A CAPITAL COMMUNICATION.—The subjoined letter from an esteemed correspondent is well worthy of close attention. I heartily agree with him in the general tenor of the article and where we disagree is of small comparative importance.

Enough divergence, however, to warrant fuller treatment than can be awarded now, and not only the points on which there are slight differences in views, those in which we are in accord are well worthy of further elucidation:

March 18, 1898.

MR. JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON—Dear Sir: I have read and considered your various articles on harness racing recently published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

The subject is one that has interested me greatly, not only as the owner of harness horses, but as a citizen having much concern for one of California's most profitable industries. Our State, on account of its mild winters, good pasture, and equable climate, has become the natural home of good horses. With us nature has been liberal in everything that goes to produce speed and strength in horses.

With all these advantages, harness horse racing has not prospered for the past three or four years. There must exist a cause for this, but the knowledge of the cause does not necessarily produce or suggest a remedy. Your articles on this subject, like others upon any subject you discuss, are thoughtful and forcible, but in this instance, I am convinced you have accepted the opinions of others with too little thought. Through all of your articles the idea seems to run, that if harness racing were honestly conducted, the sport would be revived.

Indirectly you charge that harness racing is not conducted squarely. I regret that you should be led into making such a charge, or to so express yourself that others who are inimical can fairly deduce such a declaration from your writings. The later generation of "harness horse men" look to you as one of the first promoters of the sport, and as authority upon all points connected with racing horses.

Parallels have been drawn between running and harness racing, much to the advantage of the runners. The reason for the success of one and the failure of the other during the past four years is not hard to discover. Running in this State is conducted as a business by men or associations who put large sums of money into the enterprise, and like prudent business men, give their exhibitions at or near large cities.

Every facility, convenience and inducement is offered, and with a large population to draw from, success has been reasonably certain, while harness racing has, as of old, consisted of a few days meeting at small towns.

Perhaps the true reason of the decline of harness racing is to be found in the extreme hard times that have existed for the past few years. Harness horses are an agricultural product and are affected largely by the fortunes of the farmer. The fact that farming has not been profitable of late, it is true, and when the foundation of most other industries fail, it carries with it everything connected. Every expense that can be lepped off is dropped. The attendance at race meetings and county fairs, once so good, has steadily decreased until the gate receipts hardly pay for the printers ink. It is good, for many reasons, that some changes be made. The new, even if not so good as the old, will often attract, and that is what we now most desire.

Objections have been urged, but I perceive no danger to legitimate racing in requiring all drivers to be licensed, in fact, much good would result if the plan be carried more into detail. Judges and starters are as much to blame as anyone for much of the dissatisfaction that often occurs. I remember but two races last year that produced any discussion of consequence, in both instances the judges were at fault. In one, the race was an open, bare faced "throw," apparent to even the uninitiated. The judges allowed it "to go" presumably for the reason that the drivers were well known, and no one entered a protest. The bettors caught in the pool box were generally "horsemen" and, as a rule, they do not equal. This should have made no difference, the judges were there to prevent just such occurrences and should have performed their duty unasked. In the other case the judges declared a race off for fraud, because a certain horse did not win, when the least inquiry would have shown them that the horse could not win, and that the owner and driver of the condemned horse had bet their money and were honestly endeavoring to win.

Judges are not made in a day, and it is not every horseman who makes a good one. More is required than a knowledge of racing; a clear head, good judgment and an independence (not stubbornness) that brings a man up to his snuff, soundings, are some of the qualities required which should be united with a thorough knowledge of the horse.

Too much strictness is as bad as too much laxity. You know as well as any man alive that horses are not the same every day, and no reason can at times be assigned for the reversal of form. A judge must be able to understand and appreciate this. The idea some of the gentlemen have, who have recently contributed articles on harness horse racing, seems to be that the judges should fine or expel drivers whose horses day by day do not come up to, or keep to their highest form. This opinion is an unjust one, and illiberal, and bespeaks the "book-made" judge, whose qualifications are determined by the knowledge he has acquired from books alone.

I am heartily in favor of square, legitimate racing, and believe in punishing drivers and owners who are guilty of fraud or unfair practices but I am bitterly opposed to a rule, cut and dried to fit all horses, days and tracks. The Judges and starters are selected by the Association, and upon the fairness and ability of these gentlemen depend the good names of the drivers and owners. From their judgment there is no appeal. Let it then be provided that judges, individually or collectively, and also the starters, may be removed by a majority or a two-third vote of the owners and drivers present at the meeting. This gives the governed an opportunity to right a wrong and would be a wholesome restraint upon the arbitrary rulings and dictatorial manner so often shown. No injury can result from such a rule. If two-thirds of the owners and drivers express their dissatisfaction with the judges or starter, it is high time some change should be made.

While there are many points that are good that could be taken from the rules governing running races, it is not well to adopt them as a whole. Riders or jockeys are generally boys, while drivers are men, most of them grown old in the profession and are entitled to more respect and consideration than I have ever seen shown to jockeys.

If a starting judge is employed, by all means see that he is a harness horse starter, and not one who is equally good with both classes of horses. In preparing the racing programme, your suggestions to have dash, and two in three races is undoubtedly good, but there should be some three in five races. To obtain relief from the present stagnation, let us not wholly abandon the principles that have built up the trotting horse.

Yours very truly,

LYCURGUS.

LOS ANGELES LEADS. As will be learned from Mr. Thorne's letter, published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN last week, the "City of the Angels" has struck the keynote of the harness racing campaign for the season of 1898. And the sound will waken echoes of jubilation, a hearty chorus from owners and trainers, a fervent response from all who are interested in harness horses, and those who have a fondness for that branch of sport. Every breeder of horses on the Coast is, or should be, well pleased with the initiatory movement. There is scarcely a question that public support will be granted when all of the horses now in the State are brought together.

The programme for the Summer Meeting, P. C. T. H. B. A., suggested by the Speed Committee, and which is published in this number, will give an idea of what it will be. Changes undoubtedly will be made by the Board of Directors, and one of the objects of publishing was to elicit opinions from owners, trainers, everyone in fact, who takes an interest in harness racing. It strikes me that until the system of dash races is more thoroughly tried there should be more heats. Forty-nine dashes to nine races of heats will not please a great many owners, and it is equally as well as asured that a very large majority of spectators would prefer a programme in which was incorporated at least one race of heats for an afternoon, and on two days of each week two, when "two in three" is the limit.

Doubtless there will also be a change in the amounts given in purses, though it is unnecessary to go further than to state that the Board of Directors will give it careful consideration, while it can be accepted without qualification that a "rattling" good meeting will be held in mid-summer.

Used With Success for Cooked Ankles, Etc.

ANGOLA, IND., June 22, 1897.

Wish to use "Gombault's Caustic Balsam" on an outside splint, and as our dealer has no printed instructions, I would be thankful if you would mail me a pamphlet. Have used the above remedy with success, on cooked ankles, curbs and enlarged glands, but want some instructions on this splint, as the patient is one of my favorite driving mares.

F. W. KINNEY.

A NEW TRACK, exclusively for harness horses, has been built at London, England, the grounds costing $100,000. The park is located near the old Alexandria grounds in London, and further improvements are contemplated, which will make it one of the finest tracks in England.

Next month the track will be opened with a trotting and pacing meeting.

THE stewards were busy to-day. Early in the afternoon they issued a bulletin ruling off James Robertson, owner of Dousterwivel, Arthur McKnight and Proverb, for making a public statement to the effect that officials of the Crescent City Jockey Club were dishonest and were engaged in robbing horsemen and also for the reason that horses owned by him, or in his charge, were considered to have run suspiciously. Whenever he substantiates his charges against the officials of the club and also proves that his horses have run honestly, Robertson will be reinstated. W. Kinney, who rode Proverb in the hurdle handicap, made use of language reflecting on honesty of the officials of the club while he was weighing out, and he was also ruled off. H. D. Brown, the starter, and the Fosters met in the betting ring and the bad feeling existing between them over Brown's connection with the Sportsman Park track as a starter, brought the men to blows. The combatants were quickly separated and the stewards, holding the Fosters to have been the aggressors, fined them.—New Orleans dispatch, March 19th.

SALVATION, which has been on the shelf for about a year, went to the post very dicky Thursday and pulled up worse. He will probably be relegated to the stud, where he should make a great name. Salvation is by Salvador out of Chimera, by imp. Mortemer. Chimera is a half sister to Cerise (dam of the mighty Morello), their dam being the turf queen, old, gray Lizzie Lucas.

I have used ABSORBINE with great success for a year. Send me another bottle.

ARLENE WILKES, by Hambletonian Wilkes that had a trotting record of 2:22½, took to pacing last year and at that gait earned a record of 2:11½.

Los Angeles Track Items.

Los Angeles has always been famed for the breeding of fast horses in the years that have flown. Here was bred Arrow, who was paced in 2:13 in his first season, as well as the great Stamboul, who was the first stallion to trot below 2:08. Besides these were Ruby, 2:18 at five years old and Alcazar 2:20 at four, to say nothing of a lot of lesser lights. For the past four years it has looked as though the diagonal gait was on the decline in this neighborhood, but the prospect of a big Breeders' meeting in June has given the sport a new impetus.

Out at the track there are already as clever a lot of green horses as ever were seen here this early in the season. P. W. Hodges has half a dozen of them and they are looking well and doing fast. Four of these belong to Dr. C. Edgar Smith who was at one time quite an extensive breeder. He has curtailed his operations somewhat in that direction because he says: "You cannot breed all good horses. Of necessity you must accumulate more or less trash, so it is cheaper not to breed but to buy; and then you will come a good deal nearer getting what you want."

The doctor lost a beautiful filly about ten days ago from lung fever, after but a few hours' illness. She was barely three years old, and Hodges was very sweet on her. He said: "It was hard to give the little beauty up, I tell you, for she was such a nicely balanced little body, and went faster every time I drove her. She could have trotted in 2:25 before the first of May without any great effort on her part, and seemed to be lacking in none of the material points that are required to make a race trotter. It gave me the blues for more than a week."

Another of the doctor's pets is a gray filly by McKinney, out of a mare by Willard Stimson's old horse Larco, son of A. W. Richmond. Larco was a very game horse himself and, like all the Richmonds, had superb legs and feet. This quality he transmitted to all his progeny, and this gray filly has the hard and sinewy Richmond legs under her. She is not a very big mare but it is hard to imagine anything stronger for her size or more mechanically gaited. She goes pattering along with a light and noiseless tread and with as little friction in her way of moving as anything you can imagine. Added to this, she has the real old McKinney structure of back and loins, so indispensable in a game and resolute trotter.

Nor is this filly all that is worth seeing in Mr. Hodges' stable. There is a dark brown colt, coming four years old, in that outfit, that comes very near being a picture. He is not as large a horse as Zombro, 2:11, but shows more quality than any horse McKinney ever got; and McZeus was a very showy horse himself. The fellow is nearly black, with the Sir Hercules tan on the nose and in the flanks, which stamps his color as brown, of course. He is not a big horse, but a good deal bigger than Lumps or Wilton; and they were celebrated performers in their day. He is as shapely a colt as a man can find in a day's drive. He is by McKinney, out of Etta Wilkes, and is therefore inbred to the great son of Dolly Spanker. He is not over 15 1 hands high, but will outmeasure many taller horses than himself. His gait is the very smoothest ever seen and, although he has but a month's work on him, he is already getting down to a form which shows that he is "troubled with speed," as the Missouriian said.

Other horses in Mr. Hodges' stable are a brown mare by the pride of Santa Ana, old Silkwood himself. This filly is the making of a large mare and very powerful in her conformation. So far her instincts all run to the diagonal gait as might have been well expected from her paternity. Her head is large but clean and bony, and she is destined to make a very showy mare. Then there is a young stud colt by Freckles, who is a son of Wilton. This youngster has had little or no work, and yet he goes in such a way as to induce a belief that he will make a campaigner. Then there is a big bay gelding with a narrow blaze in his face, got by Native State 2:14½. This fellow is a great, rangy horse with a good way of handling himself, but, as Mr. Hodges says: "these big fellows are the kind you must take your time to. It don't do to be in too much of a hurry with them."—Hidalgo, in Phoenix.

Licensing Drivers.

The Spirit of the Times, in an editorial on this subject, has the following; there are so many conflicting opinions regarding it that everyone interested in light-harness horse racing should thoroughly understand it, and it is for this purpose that this sterling turf journal is giving it so much valuable space:

Those who were at the Congress of the National Trotting Association held in New York on February 10, 1892, will remember the statement made by Mr. Morse when he presented a resolution in regard to licensing drivers. He said: "After an experience of eleven years as secretary of an association, perhaps a hundred times in the judges' stand, and nearly five years secretary of the National Trotting Association, my deliberate judgment is that licensing drivers will be the best step toward eliminating the ringer. I have thought of it night and day, and it is the simplest thing, and will come the nearest executing itself of any rule that can be thought of. I do not expect to have it acted upon or passed;

I simply want to put myself on record. Some day it will come, or else we will have to throw up our hands and say we are powerless to prevent fraud. Five different men this year that we know of, that we caught, have been driving while under expulsion; some of them have been under expulsion ten or twelve years. They walk right up to the judges' stand and swear they are not the men that are in the Blue Book, and not the men we have reported from the office. They get their money and they get away with it, and by such means expulsion has almost reduced itself to a farce. They do not care anything for it."

Is the experience of a man like Mr. Morse to be considered lightly? Every secretary knows that one of his most unpleasant duties is to collect suspensions for non-payment of entrance from drivers. Under the new rule, that is, the rule for licensing drivers, the secretary will not be called upon to do this, as the claims against riders and drivers will be adjusted with the office of the National Trotting Association during the winter months, when applications are filed for license. Can an association object to have its claims collected in this manner? This is something for the secretaries of all associations to consider before expressing an opinion.

As yet there has not been one driver of any prominence who has filed an objection to the license rule; in fact, all of them are in favor of it, as a license is not only a means of identification, but also evidence that the man's record is clear. The most amusing feature of the whole question is that the parties objecting to this and other rules are those who are not affected by any of them.

Will it benefit or injure the trotting turf to protect the amateur owners or farmers' boys, who drive at the agricultural fairs, from competition with men under penalty, who make it a business of handling ringers. Stop and think of the men in your own neighborhood who sold horse, sulky and cart in disgust after being defeated a few times by strangers dropping into town during the fair, won the premiums, got the money, disappeared, and were subsequently shown to have had horses who were performing out of their classes and under assumed names. You know several who have done this, and so does everyone who pays any attention to the horse interest in your section. The rule requiring drivers to be licensed will stop this, as it will place the Secretary in a position to know the man with whom he is doing business.

Riding Trotters.

Walter Bagsby, well known here as a horseman, is back from Auckland, N. Z., where he has been for several months, handling a stable of trotters. Bagsby went down to the colony for a trip, without any idea of getting into business. He had done some clipping here, but found there would be very little in it in New Zealand. After a time he made the acquaintance of a number of horse trainers and owners, and being given a trial, secured a good position. There is only about a month more of racing down there. Mr. Bagsby intends to return in time for the campaign of next season. He says it is a great place for sporting of all kinds, and that contrary to general report, the liveliest interest is taken in trotting stock. All the saddle horses are trotters and many of them are gaited wonderfully easy. The runners are of course the favorites, but the trotters always attract crowds and there are large sums of money invested in the standard bred horses.

All the trotting races there are under saddle. Bagsby says he had a good laugh at himself the first time he went aboard of a trotter after getting into top boots and tights. The contestants are not so particular about breaking and say nothing if a horse breaks and runs a hundred yards or so, provided it is apparent that the rider is trying to get his mount down. Bagsby says after all he prefers the sulky.

The racing in New Zealand that most interested the Honolulu man, was the steeple chasing. He says it is the most exciting sport that horses can be used in, but at times seems cruel. He tells of one event of three miles and a half of a course with thirty-three jumps. Six of the best horses in the country started, but only two of them were able to finish. Two of the others were hurt by falls and two became so exhausted that they were unable to even attempt the last mile. The jumps are of all sorts. There are stone fences, hedges, open ditches and ditches with water. Sometimes it is a fence and then water and again the water first. The Colonials are very partial to this sport.—Honolulu Colonial Advertiser.

Racing at Los Angeles.

The St. Patrick's day racing meet at Agricultural Park yesterday afternoon did not bring out as large a crowd as was expected, owing doubtless to the unfavorable weather and the fact that there was not sufficient time to make preparations. The sport was, however, first class, and those who did attend were well repaid for their trouble. The races were under the management of Robert Hackney and came off in good shape. J. W. Spooner, W. H. McFee and P. W. Hodges officiated as judges, while E. B. Gifford acted as time-keeper.

There were three races on the card—a trotting race, a mile heats, best two in three; a pacing race, best two in three, and a three quarter mile private sweepstakes running race.

In the first race R. Hackney entered the bay stallion Our Lucky, John Pender entered the bay mare Helen J., and Walter S. Maben entered the bay mare Belle Russell. Helen J. won in straight heats in 2:26½, 2:28.

In the 2:20 pacing race R. Hackney entered the bay gelding George R., Walter S. Maben entered the bay mare Addie R., P. A. Isener entered the bay stallion Judd, and Matt Hare entered the grey gelding White Heat. Addie R. took the first heat in 2:25½ and Robert R. the next two heats and race in 2:20 and 2:22½.

In the three quarter mile private sweepstakes the entries were Prince Hooker, Vishun and Oro. At the first attempt Prince Hooker ran away and covered three miles before the boy could pull him up. The horses were sent to the stables and twenty minutes later were again started. Vishun won after a driving finish, beating out Prince Hooker by a short head, Oro third. Hooker was a hot favorite in the pools, and but for his long run would doubtless have won the race.

The Guy Wilkes Family.

Oro Wilkes brought more money than any stallion that is not in training has been sold for in several years, says Hawley in American Stock Farm. Does not this mean something? Yes, for when Ponce de Leon and Oro Wilkes sell for more than Jay Bird, William L. and others, it means that the thoughtful breeding public want young stallions of good breeding, and that were themselves good race horses. The black son of Helen Mayhew will some day show his greatness, for he is not only well bred, but is in addition a good individual—something not too common among trotting stallions. He represents two of the greatest trotting stallions of their day, and he looks the Directors all over. The Kellogg sale was another indication of what people want, namely, trotters—those that have trotted, can trot now, and will trot in the near future. It seems but yesterday that the little black colt Oro Wilkes won the first big Breeders' stake of the Kentucky Trotting Horse Breeders Association, and Johnnie Goldsmith smilingly received the applause of the multitude from the stand. Most of the net proceeds went to him, I believe, as he had leased the stable from Mr. Corbitt. Oro Wilkes was considerably faster than his record, and I remember of having seen him trot a half in 1:03 and a quarter in 31 seconds.

The retirement of Wm. Corbitt will end the career of an eccentric man, but a successful breeder. However, almost all his success on the trotting turf was derived by the skill of John Goldsmith, who gave Guy Wilkes his record and trained nearly all the good ones by him, and his son, Sable Wilkes. A strange thing about Guy Wilkes' get is that nearly all his fast ones have been mares, and these have, as a rule, been much finer than the colts. Sable Wilkes is a very fine horse, but as a rule the daughters have been the superior, both in quality and speed. Hulda, Hazel Wilkes, Mary Best and, in fact, nearly all the fastest of his get, have been mares of exquisite finish and pure gait. The Corbitt stable, under John Goldsmith, for several years held the same place that Village Farm does now. The expenses were always enormous, but the stable generally more than paid its way, thanks to the good management and skill of the trainer and the high quality of the horses.

CHICAGO ships nearly 100 horses abroad every day.

THE meeting in Colusa in May promises to be one of the best ever held there.

BOISE, Idaho, will give a meeting this year, and would like to join the Oregon circuit.

ADABEL, daughter of Alvertiser, 2:15½, and Beautiful Bells, has been bred to Larabie, 2:12½.

HENRY HELMAN has Alto Rio at Hollister. This horse is a full brother to Chehalis 2:07½, Touchet 2:14, etc.

VASTO, 2:16½, Harry E. Wise's handsome stallion, will make the season of 1893 at the farm near Gilroy.

C. F. BUNCH, of San Jose, will have a number of good ones by Boodle 2:12½ on the California circuit this season.

JAS. SUTHERLAND of Pleasanton has nine yearlings and two-year olds by Direct, 2:05½, in training on his track.

E. P. McKENNA, of New Haven, Conn., the new owner of Day Bell, son of Palo Alto, 2:08½, and Beautiful Bells, will have him raced this year.

R. O. NEWMAN of Visalia has ten yearlings and two-year-olds in training on the track near that city and many of them are going remarkably fast.

MIDI, 2:14½, by Electrician, that took her record as a three-year-old in 1896, is pacing a blue streak at Selma. She is owned by William Simpson, Cuba, N. Y.

G. L. WARLOW has a full brother to Athanio 2:10, that is the prettiest and best-made colt Athalie ever had. Mr. Warlow will breed the mare to Junio 2:22.

CAPTAIN JENKS, the man who gained so much notoriety by starving several cavalry horses in this city last fall, was killed Tuesday by an explosion of gunpowder at San Rafael.

WM. CORBITT, of the San Mateo Stock Farm, arrived from New York City last Saturday. He is about to make preparations to sell the balance of his horses in San Francisco in May.

BILL FRAZIER, 2:14, is one hundred pounds heavier than he was last year and looks a 100 per cent. better horse. Should no accident befall him this season, the Oregon papers think 2:10 will not stop him.

FLEURETTE, a two-year old filly by Dexter Prince out of Wildflower, by Electioneer, was purchased at the Palo Alto sale last Tuesday, in New York, for $675. J. C. McCoy of Kirkwood, Del., was her purchaser.

TRAINER CLAYTON is working Athanio, 2:10, for Prince Engelbert, Auersperg. He is also working Lola Montez, 2:30, Guard, 2:25½, and Ernie, 2:14½, for the Koritschan Establishment, also fourteen horses for S. Spitz & Co.

ADBEL, 2:23, the champion yearling trotter of the world, brought the highest price at the Palo Alto Stock Farm sale in New York City on Tuesday. The Suburban Stock Farm of Glenn Falls, New York, secured him for $3,000.

THE continued dry weather the past six days has had a most depressing effect upon the farmers and stock breeders. It is hoped there will be plenty of rain in April. Two inches of the precious liquid will be worth millions to this State.

PRINCE WARWICK has obtained fresh honors in Russia. His daughter, Cleopatra, the best three-year-old of '97, won the Count Woronzow-Daschkow race for 4000 roubles, distance 1600 meters, on the 13th of February, at St. Petersburg.

MESSRS. PIERCE BROS. of Santa Rosa Stock Farm have a bay mare called Biscara by Director and her dam is Biscara by Harold, a mare that adds to her reputation this year as the grandam of Stambold, 2:21½, Boss Juyler, 2:29½ and Mildard Sanders, 2:27½.

ABBOTSFORD, 2:19½, the once well-known race horse, by Woodford Mambrino-Columbia, by Young Columbus, died March 5th, at the Relair Farm of Lewis Bros., Woodlake, Ky., aged 26. He was, in his day, a great race horse, and became a successful sire, having thirteen list performers headed by She, 2:12½. He was owned by C. W. Smith, of San Francisco, Cal.

CHAS. N. ROBERTS, Secretary of the Overland Trotting and Running Association of Denver, Colorado, writes us under date of March 12: "We have changed one 2:25 trotting race to a 2:24 trotting race and one 2:15 trotting race to a 2:14 trotting race for our June meeting."

THERE are over 130 members to the San Francisco riding Club, which has its headquarters on Pacific avenue, between Polk street and Van Ness avenue. A number of good trotting horses are to be seen in the stalls there, and the interest in riding this class of horses is increasing.

HON. F. C. SAYLES, of Pawtucket, R. I., owner of Sable Wilkes and Campbell's Electioneer, has been investing heavily in high-class brood mares of late. Last week he dipped in again at the Kellogg sale, paying $2,950 for Mary Best, 2:12½, and $2,500 for the noted producer, Annie G., by Le Grande.

THERE are very few fast trotters that require the hoppers—El Rami, 2:14, the big Californian that won so many rich events in 1895, was the best one that ever came down the Grand Circuit. X. L., 2:13½, the racy bay gelding well known in New England, also wears the straps, and is named in the 2:11 class this season.

At last it is known what two horses Ed Geers will handle this year outside of the regular string from the Village Farm Stable. They are Tommy Britton and a two-year-old colt owned by C. D. Creig, of Paris, Texas, which is entered in $70,000 worth of stakes. The impression is that Geers has a world beater in the Texas colt.

BELLE MEDIUM, 2:20, (dam of Stam B., 2:11½) was bred to Alcyone before being shipped to California, and the result of this union was a brown horse foaled in 1887. He was named Ajalon 1002 and this year he appeared as a sire of Ajalon, Jr. 2:30. Belle Medium was bred to Zombro, 2:11, a grandson of Alcyone; the produce should be valuable.

AN effort is being made to arrange a series of intercity wagon races between the clubs of Brooklyn, Philadelphia, Bridgeport, Conn., and Medford, Mass., owners to drive. Those who remember the intercity race of two or three years ago between New York, Philadelphia and Baltimore agree that such contests excite greater interest than do professional races.

ARRANGEMENTS are under way to have horse races at Bodega and down on the bay on May 1st. Some of the fastest runners in the county will compete for valuable prizes, among which will be Lulu B, the little bay mare that carried off the honors in the quarter-mile dash on the Sebas topol track last July; Mollie Mack, Bonnie Belle, Inkerman, Sweetheart and many others. There will also be boat racing on the bay and a good day's pleasure is anticipated. The people of Bodega are working hard to make the affair a success.

THE Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern line, with its daily service of through Pullman and Tourist Sleeping Cars, to all Eastern points, and all meals served "a la carte" in dining car, offers "comforts in travel" nowhere reached in a higher degree of perfection. Passengers leaving San Francisco on the 6 P. M. train arrive in Chicago in 3½ days, and avoid the necessity of changing cars en route. For tickets and sleeping car reservations call on or address R. R. Ritchie, General Agent, No. 2 New Montgomery street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco, Cal.

IN Russia laying up of heats in harness races is not practiced, for each horse is timed separately, and in a dash race the horse making the fastest time gets first money, while in a race of heats the horse making the fastest average time is declared the winner. American racing managers could evidently take a lesson from the Russians in more ways than one. For instance, a Russian racing association taxes the betting man 10 per cent of the money handled; and charges an entrance fee of 2 per cent of the purse from members of the association, and 4 per cent from non-members. This is exactly opposite to the way business is done in this country.

W. J. SUMMERS, representing Mrs. Mary Nelson, who recently foreclosed the mortgage on the Woodland race track, has been in that city a couple of days looking after the property. Mrs. Nelson is very anxious to sell the property and it is understood that negotiations are pending which may result in its transfer to parties who will continue to use it for the purpose for which it was originally intended. Colonel Burns and President Williams, of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club, would probably buy the track if they can get it on terms satisfactory to themselves. It is said that they made an offer several months ago, but Mrs. Nelson was not satisfied with it and the matter was dropped.

It is reported that Mr. Bonner will try to train Sunol, 2:08½, again this year. She is now twelve years old. Others of his horses that will be actively worked for speed are Maud C., 2:10½, Elfrida, 2:13½, and Don L., 2:12½.

AUGUST BELMONT has booked his two driving mares, Augusta and Euphemia, to Island Wilkes. He could readily buy a pair of trotters for road work, but, as he said, there is charm in driving homebred horses. Mr. Belmont will have to wait a good while for the realization of his hopes, but he expects his enjoyment will be all the keener for this period of waiting.

IN the New Year Book all of the performers by Nutwood Wilkes are published as having dams untraced. Mr. Martin Carter, the owner of this great horse, will be surprised at this. Following are the 2:30 performers: Claudius, 2:13½; Fred Wilkes, 2:26½; John A. McKerron, 2:24½, and Irvington Belle, 2:18½. A chapter of corrections should be published in each year book and all such omissions that appear in each annual issue should be published in each subsequent one.

CONCERNING the threatened German boycott of our horse the recent export figures are of interest. During eleven months of last year the horses exported from the United States numbered 42,311, valued at $5,170,389, an average of over $122 a head. The 5,874 shipped to Germany brought $908,070. Great Britain bought 19,873, paying for them $2,742,949. The fact that no complaint has come from the British purchasers shows that the German claim as to their being diseased is a mere subterfuge and pretense. It is hoped that the German boycott may not last so as to permanently injure our export trade in trotters.

THE fair grounds and tracks will soon begin to present a lively appearance. Dr. Powell Reeves of Portland, whom it will be remembered was in Yakima two years ago, will arrive this week with a fine stable of horses which will go into immediate training for the fall meet. Lew Childs of Spokane also expects to be here soon with his string of horses. The track, which has always had the reputation of being the best in the northwest, will be put in better condition than ever before and horsemen throughout the northwest who appreciate the accommodations and advantages Yakima has to offer, are corresponding with Superintendent Joe Baxter and making the necessary arrangements to quarter their horses there.—North Yakima Herald.

THE American Hackney Horse Society is apparently in a flourishing condition. The treasurer's report, issued recently, shows that the total receipts for 1897 to have been $1,448 25, derived from payments for annual and life memberships, registration for stallions and mares, transfers, inspection, sale of stud books, and sundry accounts due from 1896. The disbursements amounted to more than the receipts, but the comfortable surplus on hand took care of the excess. For salaries, $1,050 was paid; for expenses, $174.25, and the remainder of the expenditures were for contingencies, printing and stationery, postage, and telephone and messenger accounts, the total being $1,579.86. Sundry open accounts due to the society January 1, 1898, amount to $231.25, and the surplus cash on hand is $1,192.81. These open accounts are the same as cash, so it may be figured that the total surplus amounts to $1,424.06, or $131.61 less than it was January 1, 1897. During the year 1897 five life members were added to the roll. The officers of the society are: President—F. J. Kimball; first vice president—Robert Cheney; second vice president—A. J. Cassatt; secretary and treasurer—William Seward Webb. Six English and as many Canadian hackney breeders are members of the society.

MANAGER W. B. FASIG, of Charter Oak park, is alarmed at the widespread opposition to the license system recently adopted by the National trotting association, and he says the Hartford track will probably be forced to withdraw from membership in the National trotting association if the new rule is enforced. Mr. Fasig says an attempt to enforce such a rule at Hartford would cost his association many entries, and he cannot undertake it. J. H. Devereaux, the New York horseman who cut such a wide swath with Van Zandt, 2:12, a couple of years ago, is one of those who says he will not enter his horses on tracks where a license is required. Waldo T. Pierce, the owner of Alcidalia, 2:11½, is another prominent owner who is bitterly opposed to the system. Among all the trainers and owners met by "The Horseman's" representative at the Kellogg sale in New York last week, not one expressed the approval of the measure. E. R. Bowne, who advocated the rule at the congress under the mistaken belief that it provided requirements of skill and character in all applicants, now says that the scheme is of no account and will merely be an annoyance to everybody. Manager Fasig has written a letter to President P. P. Johnson, urging him to call a special session of the National trotting association congress for the purpose of reconsidering this and other rules which were hastily enacted last month.

FROM the "Commercial," Bangor, Me., we take the following: "According to all reports from the west in regard to the matter," remarked James Plummer, of the State Assessor's office, "it would appear as though the raising of colts in the west was being dropped, and if that is the case, is there not danger of a horse famine in time, unless more attention is paid to the matter?" By the way that the raising of colts in Maine has decreased in the past few years, Mr. Plummer's question is certainly a well placed one. By the report of the State Assessors in 1892 there were then in Maine 117,332 horses, and there were 9,125 one-year-old colts, or about one colt being raised to every thirteen horses. By the report of the Assessors of 1897 there were 132,480 horses and only 3,132 one-year-old colts, or one colt to every forty-two horses, only about one-third as many as in 1892. Now the increase in horses in that time has been due, it is said, to the vast number of western horses shipped into the State, and if this source is cut off, what will Maine in time do for horses to take the place of those that must of necessity die? Surely a horse cannot live to an average age of forty years, and that is what they would have to do if Maine depended upon its own resources to raise them, at the rate that it is now doing. In Kennebec county there are 11,833 horses, and there are only 237 one-year-old colts to take the place of those that must die. The average value of the horses now is $47.88, and of the one-year-old colts it is $19.43, but this must in time be increased if the conditions in the west are as it is reported they are."

THE programme of races offered by the Speed Committee of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association for the consideration of the Board of Directors, as published elsewhere in this issue, will be read with pleasure by every lover of the light harness horse on the Pacific Coast and awaken an interest among all horsemen and associations elsewhere. It is an innovation that is somewhat of an experiment, yet it is believed it will be successful.

Many conditions (entirely foreign to those which prevail in the Eastern States) have almost forced the Association to offer something new, something attractive, and something that will bring remuneration to horseowners and associations. Situated as this State is, on the edge of the continent, without having any adjoining States to draw horses or visitors to the various race meetings held here throughout the summer months, we are, it might be said, left to our own resources to make these race meetings interesting.

In the large States east of the Rocky Mountains the cities are not far apart, the population is dense, and everyone is interested in light harness horses; breeders are many and stock farms, large and small, are found in almost every county. Horses can be raced in one State one week, and in another the next; they can be shipped north, south, east, or west, and always to some point where race meetings are to be held.

It is different in California. We are all factors in a community that has its limits, and they are small. We are not worrying, as they are in the East, about any ringers being smuggled in and carrying off our principal purses. Everyone who follows the California Circuit knows everyone who has trotters and pacers. Horses and men are all well known, and we have yet to record a case of "ringing" on this coast. The trouble is, we do not have enough visitors with their horses to attend our meetings. Distance lends enchantment to the view of all who desire to race horses here, and the rates of fare and transportation to our race courses from the east preclude any possibility of an immigration such as drives terror into the hearts of the directors of Eastern associations whenever races are called.

We are isolated, as it were, and are left to our own resources to provide meetings that will revive an interest which was once powerful here. We have tried the three-in-five plan until it has grown threadbare, and tried the fractional system and it did not work; we have even to engage the attention of the public for one week and have our grand stands filled, even if we admitted the ladies free, but without avail. That "tired feeling" which spreads like a damp fog on the spectators when the horses are scoring by the hour will, and must, be overcome. The only remedy to apply is "quick action for the money." Heat racing among the thoroughbreds on this coast was considered the only test of a horse's stamina and speed a few years ago, but it was found impracticable, and the people would not attend. It was then that Thos. H. Williams, Jr., and the Blood Horse Association instituted dashes, and the marvelous success of the winter meetings in and around San Francisco are attributed solely to this change. Are the trotting horsemen willing to stay in the same old groove with such an example before them? We say, No! Emphatically, No! The time has arrived when we should endeavor to make our races attractive. It may take a meeting or two to succeed, but we believe—and so does every horseman we have interviewed,—that the experiment is worth being tried. Horses will not get knocked out, transportation charges will be reduced to almost nothing, and horses can have the benefit of racing in company and become more tractable. They can start in as three-minute trotters or pacers and wind up the season with records of 2:10 or better, and, at the same time, net their owners a handsome sum in purses won. Their own value will be enhanced far beyond the expectations of their proud owners and everyone interested in the welfare of the horse will feel satisfied with the change.

Entries will close on June 1st. There will be about nine weeks to prepare the horses before that date, and two weeks more ere they start. Then they are not to be as severely trained as if it is intended to give each and every horse five or six grueling miles in every race they start. They can come for the word in mile dashes every day in the week (if the classes suit) and at the end of the meeting be in better condition than when they began.

It is of the utmost importance then, that every owner has his horses trained for these events. If the meeting is successful for four weeks, perhaps it may be continued longer; it all depends upon the concerted action of the horsemen.

If we show our eastern brethren the class of horses we have, does anyone doubt what the result will be? Buyers from all parts of the world will come and California will again take its place in the galaxy of States from whence greater and better horses will come than from any other.

MANY of the leading horse owners in the eastern States are taking a great interest in the subject of having competent veterinarians and horse shoers lecture on the horse and how to balance and shoe him. The many horse shoers' associations that have been formed in California include on their membership roles the most prominent members of the craft; those who have not joined are, as a general rule, men who do not see what benefits are to be derived from joining such an association, but when they are made acquainted with the objects of these organizations there will be very little persuasion need to get them in.

At the meetings held it was surprising to see how eagerly every subject relating to shoeing was listened to and every argument weighed, and the opinion was freely expressed that if such a lecturer as Professor Rush Huidekoper, of Philadelphia, was invited to give a course of illustrated lectures on the horse, the attendance would include nearly all the influential horse shoers and veterinarians in California.

The formation of these associations in an excellent thing, not only for the members for their own protection but to give them power for legislative action which will place them on a level with similar organizations, and at the same time give them an opportunity for social intercourse and an interchange of ideas, thus tending to make them more united in their efforts to protect man's best friend from the cruel methods of shoeing practised by incompetent smiths.

In New York City some two or three years ago, Mr. Depew, one of the Vanderbilts and two other wealthy men interested in the horse, engaged a noted veterinarian to deliver a set of lectures on the horse, and many of the men who attended them maintain at this moment that they then derived a measure of benefit that has been of immense service to them. Take, for instance, the merchant who owns say twenty horses engaged in heavy trucking or delivering goods. He, perhaps, knows that the horses are not iron, but he knows little else about them, the charge for horses being an item in the annual expense account to be deprecated each year as something that cannot be helped. If that merchant and all his employees attend a course of such lectures they are quickly placed in a position to better judge of what a horse is, how he should be cared for, shod and driven, and how easy it is to detect any sickness or ailment that might affect him.

Here in California we need just such a course of lectures and when the new Affiliated Colleges (which are almost completed) are opened, this journal will do all in its power to have one of the leading veterinarians lecture on the subject which is so essential to every horseman, farmer, breeder, horse-shoer, and merchant, and we ask the co-operation of all our readers to accomplish this much-sought-for end.

Now that the weather is moderating at Skaguay and Dyea, the use of dogs is being abandoned and horses are substituted. Advices from Seattle dated March 24th, say 300 horses will be purchased at once to be used on the Dalton trail. The steamships sailing from San Francisco have not had stable room for the large number of horses purchased for the Alaska trade, but now that the rush is on the wane, room will be made for these horses and many of them will find their final resting place amid the glaciers and boulders along the trails leading into Dawson City.

GREAT preparations are being made in the East by horseowners to have their trotters and pacers in readiness for the big circuits being formed there. Large purses will be given, and the fact that record holders sold better than those without during the winter of 1897 and 1898, it will be an incentive to breeders to make their horses salable by having them win often and lower their records every time.

It is hoped the efforts of The California Jockey Club to bring to justice those who are suspected of crookedness will not go amiss, and the guilty ones will be made examples of.

THE Year Book for 1897 has been issued and copies may be obtained at this office. It is on the same lines as its predecessors.

VIRTUALLY RULED OFF THE TURF.

The Cases of Eddie Jones and Ollie Johnson Disposed of by the O. J. O. Stewards—H. M. Mason's Suspension and Other Matters

After a five hours' session last night, the California Jockey Club stewards (Thos. H. Williams, Jr., J. W. Brooks, John J. Carter and Joseph A. Murphy), announced that they had suspended indefinitely (amounting to virtual ruling off) Jockey Eddie Jones and ex-Trainer Ollie Johnson. The suspension against Trainer H. M. Mason, over the running of Lobos, still stands, and matters look very gloomy for the owner of Gloaming, who has ever borne a most excellent reputation. The morning papers state that the stewards are in possession of an incriminating letter from Mr. Carpenter, of Chicago, owner of Lobos, but in view of the fact that after the colt had worked half a mile in 0:49 with 122 lbs. up at Oakland and the Chicago owner was apprised by telegraph of that fact, the letter does not appear at all "incriminating," as the morning papers see it.

A score or more of owners, bookmakers and track employees were examined and Johnson and Jones were offered immunity from punishment if they would reveal the names of the person or persons with whom it is charged they have been doing business, but both declared themselves innocent of complicity in any jobbery.

Jockey Spencer, though present, was not called upon.

Among the turmen called before the meeting and asked to give any information that would tend to purify the game were: Hugh Jones, John Coleman, Billy Beverly, Jim Davis, Jimmy Coffey, Ab Stewler, Barney Schrieber, Billy Magrane, Sam Hildreth, William Fitch, H. Hoffman, Don Cameron and Tom Boyle.

No testimony of any great importance bar that of one bookmaker, was gleaned. This one pacifier stated that on December 22, 1897, Ollie Johnson approached him with a proposition to "lay up against" the horse Satsuma, to be ridden by Eddie Jones. He declined the offer. Jimmy Coffey, the horse's trainer, was told previous to this particular race that he was not going to get a ride, and so informed the judges. Jones was warned and Satsuma won the race. The stewards also said they were in receipt of several letters which did not tend to help the case against the accused riders and Johnson.

William Brown, who with "Sandy" McNaughton was warned off the track some days ago, was reinstated.

The investigation of the suspected bookmakers and riders will be continued by the C. J. C. stewards, but not at the club's rooms, it is understood. The trial was not as sensational as was expected, and bar this one piece of evidence the affair was disappointing to the host that looked for some startling developments.

DECLARED TO HAVE RUN A "RINGER."

Harry E. Wise Promptly Ruled Off the Turf for Life—The First "Ringing" Case on Record in California.

Harry E. Wise, a wealthy young man of high standing in business and political circles, the son of ex-Collector of the Port John H. Wise, was ruled off the turf by the California Jockey Club last night after a careful investigation. His offense was the substitution (or "ringing") of the four-year old bay mare Mary Nance for Los Rosas, also a four-year old bay mare, at Oakland track on the afternoon of March 11th. P. A. Finnegan, of Theodore Winters' stable, ridden by Mike Hennessy, beat the good thing out in a drive by a length, but had Los Rosas (Mary Nance) gotten away as well as Finnegan there would have been a different tale to tell. Al Goodin, trainer of Mary Nance, a man well known among the Jesse Jameses of the turf, follows young Wise in his retirement.

The contemplated coup was well-planned. Mary Nance formerly owned by ex-Jockey Elmer Slaughter, was brought out here from Texas by Goodin, who ran Arion, White Cockade, Ozark II, and other fair performers around the out-law courses. Mary Nance, who is by Miracle—Martha K., Las well-known at St. Louis, where she has won good races. Los Rosas was sold for a song at the last Baldwin sale, young Wise purchasing her. Both animals were taken to the Wisconsin ranch near Gilroy, Cal., Mary Nance coming from Texas on the same car as Nolan & Tholl's horses. Later the latter was brought over to Oakland and stabled just outside the track. She bears a striking resemblance to Los Rosas, and to all inquirers she was Los Rosas. Having been observed to have worked five furlongs in 1:02 one morning, she was not as long a shot in the betting market as she might have been had she galloped around in 1:06.

On Friday afternoon, March 11th, the opening race on the card at Oakland track, was a five furlong sprint for maiden three-year-olds and upward, and a big field of twenty horses lined up at the gate. Before the betting had fairly begun it was hinted about that Los Rosas, entered in the name of one Plunkett, was a real good thing, and the books were fairly flooded with all sorts of coin, soon forcing the odds from 6 down to 2 to 1. The warm one was beaten out in a drive by P. A. Finnegan, an outsider. On the programme Los Rosas appeared as a four-year-old bay mare by Emperor of Norfolk—Josie Anderson.

Young Wise, called before the Board of Stewards yesterday, declared himself innocent of any attempt at fraud in the matter, saying that the horses were misrepresented to him, Mary Nance being pointed out to him as Los Rosas and vice versa, and that he only wagered $150 on the result of the race. Goodin, when found in Oakland yesterday morning, wore a very nonchalant air, declaring that he "got the coin" and it was immaterial to him what action was taken in the case. He further stated that others were interested in the job, but refused to disclose their names.

Plunkett, in whose name the mare started, is an employee at the Wise ranch, and undoubtedly was not interested in the result, his name merely being used as a subterfuge to deceive the public. No credence was placed in the statement of Mr. Wise, with the result stated.

Harry Wise is well known on the trotting turf as the owner of the fast pacing mare, Lena N., which appeared on the Montana circuit with some success last year. It would appear from outside sources that while Wise may not have cleaned up any great amount on the race, the price for place being very short, Trainer Goodin "knew something" and wired friends in the South to plug Los Rosas for the place. Conley rode the mare in the race, and to all appearances did his best to win, though getting away from the post none too well.

Little sympathy can be felt for young Wise, for he has ample means and a prospect of being a millionaire, and therefore had no need to resort to unfair methods to beat the bookmakers. According to his own stories, he was not "out for his health" alone with his harness horses. In many States "ringing" is a felony, and this affair will probably cause a law to be passed at the next session of the Legislature similar to the ones in operation in Missouri, Wisconsin and Illinois.

No CALIFORNIA racing season has passed of recent years without some good jockey material being unearthed. Last year it was Clawson and "Skeets" Martin, who went East and more than fulfilled the promise they had shown here. The year before it was Tod Sloan. The present season the two new aspirants for fame, who are genuine California products, are Spencer and Gray. And strange to say, one man can be credited with having made three out of the five. It was Tommy Lottridge who took up Tod Sloan at a critical period in his career and put him on George Rose's horses, when they were sweeping everything before them. Judge Burke, on the occasion of his first visit here, in a letter to this journal made special mention of Sloan's great ability, and ventured at the time to prophesy his success in the East, whenever he should strike there—only another proof of the excellence of that shrewd turfman's accuracy of foresight and good judgment. It was Tommy Lottridge who discovered Clawson as an exercise boy, while Spencer, who has been riding off and on here for several years, was never given a chance until Lottridge rode him on the best horses in their big stable. There are several owners who are after this lad for the coming season, but it is probable that Mr. C. C. Maffit, of St. Louis, will secure his services.—Henry Forsland in N. Y. Spirit of the Times

The World's Records.

Printed below is a complete list of "best on records," embracing all those standing as the fastest ever made at both harness gaits and all ages and distances, including, also, race records for different heats and races of heats, the team, saddle and wagon records, those for half-mile tracks—in fact, all either of importance or interest. Carefully revised and brought up to date, it will be found the most useful and valuable compilation of its kind ever printed—one to be filed away for reference "many a time and oft" during the coming campaign on the "track around the stove." Glancing down its length it will be observed that the date of 1897 appears thirty-six times, which is evidence that last year's work was a truly notable one.

YOUNG SINK, "the American Handicapper," has got hold of a very good colt in Formero, by imported Conveth. We have always contended that if Col. Dan Burns or Mr. Adolph Spreckels had owned Conveth he would have ranked as high as any stallion in the State. We are aware that is the fashion to decry Favonius and everything that comes from him, but we must also remember that he not only got the Derby winner Sir Bevy, but also got Madame Du Barry, who won the Goodwood Cup, as well as Favo, who was a winner at all distances and in very hot company. Nor could we ever understand why Mr. Baldwin bought old Chesterfield when he could have gotten Conveth for the same money, and he at least five years the younger horse. There are many neglected sires in Southern California, but poor old Conveth is about the worst overlooked of any of them.—"Hidalgo," in Los Angeles Phoenix.

P.J.DWYER thinks he has the Hamburg of 1898 in Miller a two year old bay colt, by Hindoo, out of Bonnie Gal, which has been tried very highly. So well does James R. Keene, who bred the youngster, think of him, that he lately bid, Dwyer $15 000 for the colt. Seeing, however, that Phil is as fond of owning the best as any man it is needless to say that the offer was declined.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES.

If secretaries of gun clubs will send us the full scores of their regular monthly shoots we will be pleased to publish them; but we must receive the copy on Wednesday to insure its insertion that week.

The Game Law.

The open season for shooting quail, doves, deer and wild duck as fixed by the State law is as follows: Doves, 15th July to 15th February. Mountain quail and grouse, 1st September to 15th February. Valley quail, wild duck and rail, 1st October to 1st March. Male deer, 15th July to 15th October.

The clerks of all the Boards of Supervisors have advised us that no changes have been made this year, but the ordinances passed last year hold good if they do not conflict with the State law. ## Pigeon Shoot at Ingleside.

The California Wing Club held their initial medal shoot for the season on the Olympic Gun Club grounds at Ingleside last Sunday. The birds were a hard lot for the guns and a high wind blowing across the traps all day placed a handicap on skill that was noticeable in more than one score. The bad luck was evenly distributed, however, as is evidenced by the number of birds scored "dead out of bounds."

In the club race at 12 birds there were ten entries. H. C. Golcher made a straight score in this event, followed by Owens, Nauman, Feudner and McRae in the eleven hole. Owens' miss was at his ninth bird, a left-quartering driver. Nauman lost, a similar bird on the eighth round. Feudner's eighth was a driver from No. 2 trap, and fell out of bounds, while McRae lost his last bird, a left quarterer from No. 1 trap. He dropped the bird in bounds, but when a retrieve was attempted by hand a good pair of wings carried the wounded bird over the line.

McRae's work was somewhat surprising to the veterans, as Mac faced the traps for practically the first time. He is one of the best of our local field shots, and his experience on marsh and upland stood him well in hand on Sunday.

Another new man who made a creditable record was A. M. Shields.

The events, with the detailed scores, were as follows:

Garden City—Empire Team Shoot.

The team shoot for a trophy between representatives of the Empire and Garden City Gun Clubs took place at the Bridge House, near San Jose. Nine men from each club shot at blue rocks, the order of shooting was alternative, first an Empire man shot then a Garden City shooter followed him. The Garden City boys fell down somewhat on a few of their best men, whilst the shooters who were not expected to make big scores did very well. The Empires could not "get onto" the havg of the traps at first, but after the team shoot, in other events, they made some very good scores. The Empire members are unanimous in their praise of the cordial treatment given them by the Garden City Gun Club.

The race was at twenty-five targets per man. Out of a possible 225 the Garden City scored 174 and the Empires 169, giving the palm of victory to the former club by a narrow margin of 5 birds. The following is the score of the individual shooters:

EMPIRE GUN CLUB.	GARDEN CITY GUN CLUB.

Fresno—Stockton Club Shoots.

The Fresno Gun Club entertained Merced and Stockton trap shooters on Sunday March 6th.

In the afternoon the club held its regular monthly shoot at blue rocks on its grounds near Pollasky. There were some excellent scores made, principally by the local gun men. Those who led were: Armitage, 96 out of a possible 105, 35 straight; Dismukes, 89 out of 105; Thompson, 83 out of 105; St. John, 77 out of 105; Hyde of Merced, 61 out of 75; Fyx 88 out of 105; Naher, 69 out of 90.

The score in detail was:

The Stockton Athletic Association Gun Club in return entertained the Fresno Sportsmen last Sunday. A general good time was enjoyed by all. The Stockton Club held their regular monthly shoot, which was participated in by the visitors. It is claimed that the shooting was "good" considering the day. The scores were not made public, the Stockton boys being credited with a desire to keep their scores a secret.

Spokane Trap Shooters.

At the Spokane Rod and Gun Club tournament on March 6th at Natatorium Park the medal was won by Murphy. The handicaps and results were:

	Birds Shot at.	Broke
Monk.....	25	19
Smith.....	32	20
Murphy.....	28	23
Ajax.....	35	15
Bruce.....	34	14

Other events and scores were as follows:

Fifteen bird pool—Monk, 12; Smith, 7; Murphy, 10; Ajax, 10; Bruce, 11.

Five pair doubles—Monk, 6; Smith, 6; Murphy, 4; Bruce, 3; Tull, 7; Dahl, 7.

Ten birds, reversed traps—Monk, 9; Smith, 6; Murphy, 7; Tull, 4.

Ten birds, reversed traps, unknown angles, both barrels—Monk, 8; Smith, 6; Murphy, 7; Tull, 2.

Ten birds, known angles—Monk, 9; Smith, 8; Murphy, 8; Tull, 7.

Ten birds, known traps and angles—Monk, 9; Smith, 5; Murphy, 8; Tull, 3.

Fine pair of doubles—Monk, 8; Smith, 7; Murphy, 6; Dahl, 5.

Pelican Gun Club

The commencement of the trap season in Sacramento was inaugurated last Sunday by the Pelican Gun Club. The birds were a good lot and put the shooters on their mettle. Seven members only ficed the traps. Their scores were as follows:

Olympic Gun Club.

To-morrow at Ingleside the Olympic Gun Club will hold an open-to all blue rock tournament. A number of events will be on the programme. A large attendance of shooters is expected as this club shoot is the only one held in the vicinity of San Francisco on the fourth Sunday of each month.

Geese Shooting at Maine Prairie.

When Al Cummings and Eli Marks came back to the city last Monday morning they were well satisfied with what proved to have been a very enjoyable hunting trip. They left town on Friday night and spent last Saturday and Sunday shooting geese at Maine Prairie, about ten miles southeast of Elmira, Solano county. The bag numbered 360 geese. Mr. Cummings is very enthusiastic over the sport he enjoyed, particularly so as the methods employed were somewhat new to him, and he is not a novice at the game by any means. The shoot was conducted under the management of "Doc" Stewart and Abe Crump, two well known experts in river and field hunting. Each morning the party made an early start for the ground so as to be in readiness and posted for work by daybreak, as the geese commence their flight from the tules to the fields at the first peep of day. The proper and careful preparation of the shooting ground is an important factor in making the hunt successful. Cover for the shooter is secured by digging holes, and care must be taken that the excavated earth is spread evenly around the hole else the birds will be frightened off. Decoys are staked out in the following manner—on this occasion Stuart and Crump procured 150 dead geese, they distributed them near the cover, the brant and white geese bunched separately; while these two varieties feed on the same ground they are always in distinct groups. Wire standards were used to prop up the birds and give them a natural attitude and appearance, some with their heads buried in the grass and in the act of feeding, and others posted erect and alert as sentinels—the direction of the wind determined the position of the watchers. A perfect knowledge of the habits of the geese is requisite in preparing the ground for a shoot, as the goose is a very wary bird and ready to keep far away from the slightest indication of danger. Everything being in readiness, the hunter and his guide, each located in their holes, (about twenty feet apart), are both on the qui vive for the first flight from the river. This is not a great trial on one's patience in that district. There is plenty of game, the main thing is to have the ground in proper order. A flock of birds is sighted, the guide easily perceives whether they are brant, white or speckled geese and "calls" them repeatedly in, so to speak, their own vernacular. The flock hears the call and swinging round, gradually circling nearer and nearer, finally alights among the decoys; but not all of them; some of the geese are not satisfied with the appearance of the dead birds and they won't settle down with the rest. Now is the critical time and on signal both hunters jump up for a "punch" at the flock which takes immediate flight, in such manner that a "flock shot" is almost an impossibility, singles are the rule, and on this particular shoot Cummings had but four doubles in two days. The dead birds are immediately utilized as additional decoys, and the same programme of calling and shooting is gone over again and again. On one occasion Cummings dropped his handkerchief on the ground when retrieving a dead goose and this kept the birds away for some little time until Crump found out what was wrong, after the handkerchief was picked up the birds heeded the call again. A number of hunters were shooting in that vicinity when Cummings and Marks were working over the decoys but they did not average a bird apiece. Other sportsmen who have been geese-hunting on Maine Prairie recently have made fine bags and had good sport shooting in the manner above detailed.

Illegal Deer Hunting.

The Willows Journal of the 16th inst. has the following concerning a deer hunt on the part of some enterprising citizens of that burg recently.

"That unfortunate hunting party of five must be commencing to think that life is one long nightmare, for here pops up more trouble. G. M. Potts, game patrol officer, has received orders from the Game Commissioner to arrest five gentlemen for killing deer out of season. March 15th, Officer Potts placed Tom and Phil O'Brien under arrest. Messrs Schulz and Bowen will also be arrested on the same charge."

The Maugtrap.

The Cleveland Target Company of Cleveland, Ohio, reports that the Maugtrap is meeting with great favor among trap shooters in the East. Over one hundred and sixty are now in use. The claim is made that the average of breakage is less than by any other style of traps and that the cost of running them is materially reduced. The Olympic and Empire Gun Clubs have one of these traps on their grounds and one of the gun clubs in the southern part of the State uses a Maugtrap. The Selby Factory are the manufacturer's representatives for the Pacific Coast and will furnish all desired information to interested parties.

A Cat Hunt.

W. L. Prather, Jr., Chas. Clay and a friend had a lively run after a big wild cat last Sunday with the Olinda Kennels' pack of hounds. Prather had six of his old dogs and ten puppies on the trail. The old dogs started the cat in a heavy thicket and, after running a while, the cat broke from close cover, and, as it happened, ran right into the bunch of youngsters, who jumped him at once and in such a manner as to make him fight fiercely at close quarters for a few moments, and then when he saw his chance was off again with the pups in hot pursuit. The old dogs then got in ahead of the little fellows and stayed with the quarry until they cornered him in a thicket and made the kill. The chase was one of two hours and a half. This is the second time the pups have been out and they are now practically broken in, one of them, Dan, the only living pup of old Ring, bids fair to out-point his sire. His work for a young dog is remarkable. This pup early in the morning started a skunk; after he tackled the job he showed evidences of his dislike for the game but he stayed with "mephitis" and killed him. The older dogs watched the proceedings with some little degree of interest, but they studiously kept away from the distribution of odoriferous diplomas. The rest of the juveniles acquired a certain amount of experience which it is believed they will remember.

Feeding Young Pheasants.

The raising of the young of the Mongolian pheasant can be made successful if proper care is taken in their feed. It is claimed by those who have raised them, that they should be fed on worms for the first two weeks of their existence. A good source of supply is to prepare for the hatching of the chicks by allowing pieces of beef to decay and fill with worms.

The Grand American Handicap.

The event of absorbing interest in the East during this week has been the Grand American Handicap held at Elkwood Park Long Branch, New Jersey, March 22, 23 and 24. In 1897 this event brought out 135 crack shots and this year a reasonable presumption is, that at least 200 shooters will face the traps. The handicapping committee will have a difficult task at their disposal no doubt, and considerable interest has been manifested in the results to be determined by the gentlemen composing the committee. Representative shooters will attend from all sections of the United States, the Coast shooter in the big event will be John S. Fanning, the local talent will await with more than usual interest a record of the genial John's work in the hot company he will meet. Recent advices in regard to his form shows that Fanning has been doing some very clever work and it is not at all improbable that he will be with the top-notchers at the end of the meeting.

The Seattle Rod and Gun Club have adopted the Sargent system during their weekly shoots.

Game Warden Godat of Salinas arrested Frank Castro on the 14th inst. for killing deer in the close season.

O. M. Judy of Visalia, a genial sportsman well known to local trap-shooters, was in the city on a visit this week.

A week ago last Sunday Messrs. A. Jackson, F. Irelan and Tod Sloan made a bag of 260 geese on the hunting grounds at Maine Prairie, near Elmira.

L. S. Upson and Fred Adams of Sacramento, made a combined bag of 159 geese on Thursday, March 17th. They hunted on the Maine Prairie district.

The largest and most comprehensive sportsmen's exhibition ever held in New England, opened in Boston on March 24th. The show will be of two weeks' duration and is under the auspices and direction of the New England Sportsmen's Association.

The annual meeting of the members of the Grass Valley Sportsmen's Club was held March 7th, when the election of officers took place. E. W. Donnelly was elected president; E. C. Morgan, vice president; W. Baker, secretary, and W. H. Morgan, treasurer. The directors elected were George Fletcher, Dr. I. W. Hays and C. H. Mitchell.

Harvey McMurchy, of Syracuse, N. Y., and Phil B. Bekeart, left the city on Wednesday, for a week or ten days' business trip through the Southern portion of the State. Incidentally they will be seen here and there at the traps as opportunity offers. They are very ambitious to take the scalps of Chick and Nicholls when they reach San Diego.

A shoot held at Wallace, Wash., on Sunday, March 6th, Whitelaw won in the medal contest; the scores were at 25 birds, as follows: Whitelaw, 23; Scott, 20; Flohr, 20; King, 19; Carmichael, 17; Rossi, 16. Whitelaw also won the Jamieson challenge prize, defeating Heard. This is three Sundays in succession that he has won both of the regular shoots.

The Territorial Gun Club's Association of Arizona have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: President, Hon. James Finley of Tucson; Vice-Presidents, M. P. Chuob, Phoenix; Walter Miller, Jerome; C. W. Mansfield, Prescott; K. L. Hart, Tucson; Treasurer, J. H. Holmes, Phoenix; Recording and Corresponding Secretary, Charles R. Meyer, Tucson.

Female jackrabbits breed every six weeks of the year, excepting the months of October, November and December. They drop from five to seven in each litter, so the killing of from 5000 to 7000 jackrabbits each year in the neighborhood of Lamar, as was recently the case, does not by any means rid the vicinity of the pest, for the following year they will be as plentiful as ever. Five jackrabbits will consume as much food as one sheep, so it is no wonder that the farmers want to get rid of the rabbits.

In the sighting of shot guns there is a general impression that the sight proper is of very little use to the average quick shot. Most gun experts say that this idea is a mistake and that the sight is seen instinctively in the act of raising the gun to the shoulder, and that it is of vital importance. Ivory sights have been long in vogue, but not commonly with a rear or breech point of ivory, as well as the one at the muzzle, and a still later idea is a protected piece of glass at the muzzle, under which is a streak of self illuminous material.

The Stockton Athletic Association Gun Club officers for the ensuing year are: F. D. Nichol, president; G. A. Atherton, vice-president; C. J. Haas, captain, and A. H. Wright, secretary and treasurer. Some new features will be adopted at the club shoots this season instead of having the class shoots all of the members will be placed on an even footing by a handicap committee, which includes W. H. Lyons, W. E. Johnson and A. H. Wright. The club will shoot twice a month, commencing March 20th and closing June 26th.

W. Eley Quilter and G. Bernardiston of San Diego went south on the steamer Pacheco Wednesday night to San Quentin. Awaiting them there were a couple of guides, cook and a string of pack mules for a shooting expedition to the San Pedro Martir Sierra. They were well equipped, will be away about a month, and it is to be hoped will return with the trophies they covet—the heads of several big-horn or mountain sheep. Big-horn sheep, once common in the Rocky mountains and higher ranges of the southwest, are now almost extinct, except in the most inaccessible parts of this peninsula. Besides, antelope and deer are plentiful in the wild and broken waste south and east of this high peninsular range.—Lower Californian.

NOTICE TO ANGLERS.

Every angler is invited to drop us a line occasionally, telling us of the condition of the streams they have visited and the killing lure of the number and size of the fish caught, or any other item of interest to anglers.

Coming Events.

April 16-17—San Francisco Fly-Casting Club. Fourth series of Saturday and Sunday contests. Stow Lake, Golden Gate Park.
June 5-9—West Michigan Fly-Casting Association. First Angling Tournament. Grand Rapids, Mich.

Where the Trout Lie.

The angler will be at liberty on Friday next to follow the bent of his inclination and practice the gentle art on the epreckled beauties to be found in his favorite stream. The reports to date show that most of the streams are now as low as they are generally found two months hence, but the water is clear and fishing conditions in many streams good. Unless we have heavy rains between now and the 1st of April the season promises to open early and propitiously, particularly so with most of the waters within reach of the city.

The streams to the south are in good condition evidently, from recent reports. San Mateo county, from Pescadero to Half Moon bay or Spanishtown, affords the choice of a number of mountain streams that have always been good during the beginning of the season. One of the best is the Purisima, which can be reached by stage from San Mateo to Spanishtown, the morning trip is advisable. The San Gregorio is another favorite; stop off at Redwood city and drive over to the creek. On the same route will be found the La Honda, another excellent stream. Further south are the following well thought of early streams: Lobitos, Trinitas, Clear creek, Pompano, Pescadero, Burtano and Frijoles.

From Santa Cruz, on the narrow gauge, to Felton and then change for Boulder creek near the head waters of the San Lorenzo river, will bring the angler to excellent fishing water. Boulder creek has the reputation of being one of the best early streams for small fish, but is rather brushy.

At Gilroy Hot Springs one can fish down the Coyote, which has proven a prolific stream in past seasons. The Llagas and Yagas are also known as good streams.

From San Jose or Pleasanton, Alameda creek should afford plenty of early sport, fish down stream. San Pablo creek has generally been an excellent stream early in the season, but is quickly fished out. Take the California and Nevada Railroad at Emery station, then to Bryants, Orinda Park and Lavegas. This will afford four hours of fishing should one desire to return to the city the same day. This stream has yielded some excellent early catches of fish.

Los Gatos will enable the devotee of the rod to reach many good side streams and creeks. Los Gatos creek, four miles from town, is good, the Guadalupe Mine creek is a fine stream, so also is Saratoga creek, four miles distant, and Stephens creek, eight miles distant.

Streams accessible via San Francisco and North Pacific Railway should afford most excellent results this season. Nearly 1,000,000 trout fry have been liberated in these streams by direction of the railroad management and the most encouraging reports have been received as to the success of the transplanting. The waters are reported to be full of trout and the indications are that fishing will be first-class. At Cloverdale the Big Sulphur and Squaw Creek invite the angler. Glen Ellen offers the waters of Sonoma, Calabaza, Stewart and Graham creeks—the fish are there. At Pieta, Vassar, Pieta and Gillespie creeks are reported to be just right and teeming with fish.

Between Ukiah and Cloverdale, the various tributaries of the Russian river: Pluton river, Sulphur, Squaw, Ash, Pieta, Felix, McNabb, Morrison creeks, etc., have been the resort of many a jolly fisherman in past seasons, and will no doubt bear out their good reputations by yielding much sport and many weighty baskets. The trout are reported to be multiplying rapidly in these streams.

Further north of Ukiah, Eel river and its tributaries invite the attention of rod and fly; many of these streams have been plentifully stocked during the past year.

It is hardly probable that the streams here mentioned have been poached to any great extent, as they have been guarded closely by the railroad officials, who have been ably seconded in this respect by the majority of the residents and others along the line of their road.

The streams of Marin and Sonoma counties are always favorite resorts of city anglers, being easy of access. The Nicasio is a good early stream. Its waters are reached by way of the North Pacific Coast Railway line to Nicasio; thence walk over the hills to the north and fish down to the Paper Mill. The San Geronimo is in the upper waters of Nicasio creek. To fish this creek go to San Geronimo station; the fishing ground commences there.

The San Anselmo is next in line. Go to Fairfax and fish down stream to San Anselmo, taking the return train at San Anselmo.

The next stream is the Lagunitas, a beautiful piece of water. Leave the train at Lagunitas station better known as the "Wood Pile," and fish down the Carson to the Lagunitas and then either up stream or down to Camp Taylor; or, go to San Rafael, take the Bolinas stage to Liberty, the headwaters of the Lagunitas, and fish down stream to the "Wood Pile," where you can take the return train. This is a ten-mile walk and the waters can be fished in a manner, but two days is the time necessary to fish it properly. At Fairfax it is a small stream and somewhat bushy, but full of inviting pools and riffles.

Olema creek is an excellent early stream, one of the best. Take the train to Tocaloma, thence to Olema two miles by stage, or get off at Point Reyes station and fish up the stream. Several miles of productive water will be found before reaching the preserve of the Country Club.

Point Reyes has long been noted as one of the most popular resorts on this line. John Gallagher and his chum, Mr. Libby, have been having great sport in the tide waters recently. George Walker, Del Cooper, M. J. Geary, Jno. Butler, Chas. Precht, Jno. Baun, H. Miller and numerous other well-known anglers testify to the sport offered in this district. Arthur Rochfort at the Point Hotel is a boniface whom the angling fraternity swear by. The famous Paper Mill creek at this point furnishes sport both early and late in the season. Steelhead and grilse may be caught at any time and one should be prepared for large fish.

Two streams on this line are known as Salmon creek. The one near Tomales is properly, Mud creek. To reach this stream leave the train just after it crosses the trestle at Tomales and fish up stream.

Salmon creek proper is a beautiful stream that empties into the ocean and affords many miles of good fishing. Go to Bodega roads, it is but a short walk to the stream.

Duncan's Mills affords the choice of a number of excellent streams to those who can spend two or three days there. Austin creek, one mile from the El Benito Hotel, is a very fine stream and generally clear. There is plenty of native trout in this stream and 10,000 rainbow trout were planted there a few years ago; large rainbow trout have been caught near its mouth.

Kidd creek, a branch of the Austin, four miles from Duncan's can be depended upon for a nice lot of fish.

Old Bridge creek, another branch of Austin creek, two miles from Duncan's, is a nice little stream with plenty of fish in it.

Willow creek, three miles from Duncan's, is a reasonably sure creek for any season. Sheep House creek, which empties into the Russian river direct, opposite Willow creek, is another good stream. Russian Gulch creek, eight miles north of Duncan's, is a large stream and empties into the ocean, it will stand lots of fishing. Freezeout creek, one quarter of a mile away from Duncan's, is good for a nice breakfast almost any time. Howard's creek, three and half miles north of Duncan's, runs into the Russian river at Russian river station; this is another excellent stream. Jennie Gulch, four miles south of Duncan's, empties into Russian river near its mouth. This creek is small, but full of trout. All the streams of this section are accessible by the county roads, and in most of them there is a good chance for two to four pound steelheads on the first of the season.

The upper Austin can be fished from Cazadero, and just above the town is Ward creek, one of its tributaries, an excellent early stream. A two mile walk from Watson's hill brings one to the East Austin, one of the very best streams in that section. The little Guallala, a six-mile drive from Cazadero, is a good early stream of fair size.

The Fly-Casters.

The third series of fly-casting contests of the San Francisco Fly-Casting Club took place at Stow Lake on Saturday and Sunday last. The weather conditions were not conducive to the making of high scores. On Saturday the wind was very strong and on Sunday it was blowing great guns. On Saturday W. D. Mansfield, in the long distance event, made the remarkable score of 117. The bait-casting event had eleven entries; the scores made were comparatively low as most of those in this event were novices at this style of casting.

The scores in detail for both days and all the events are as follows.

CONTEST NO. 3, SATURDAY, MARCH 19, 1898.

Steelhead are now running in the Salinas river.

A fish never renews its scales. A wound may heal up and be covered with a thick protective skin, but nature provides the fish with only one suit of scale armor, and leaves lost out of that are never restored.

The best and finest tackle, and a greater variety in flies, leaders and lures than will be found on the Pacific Coast can be seen at the stores of either Clabrough, Golcher & Co., or the E. T. Allen Co. A brief examination of their goods will satisfy the most critical angler.

Fred Donohoe and John Crow were arrested a few days ago for illegal fishing near Ukiah. The complaisant village dogberry before whom they were brought, released them on their own recognizance—the culprits have been “non est” since and the justice is calmly awaiting their return.

The following note appears in the Lompoc Record: A few salmon, or rather steelheads, are being taken along the river. There are myriads of them outside waiting for high water, that they may reach their spawning ground up the Santa Ynez. As yet the water is too shallow to admit of their ascending very far or very fast.

Game Warden Mackenzie of San Jose will place a fish ladder in the Guadalupe creek at the dam in the vicinity of Lick Mills. Hundreds of salmon and trout were trying to go up stream at that point recently. The pestilent Chinamen, of course, took advantage of the run and netted considerable fish before they were stopped.

Among the best stories recorded by a well-known angler is one about a Scottish laird, who was one day relating to his friends at the dinner table the story of a fine fish he had caught. “Donald,” said he to the servant behind his chair—an old man, but a new servant—“how heavy was the fish I took yesterday?” Donald neither spoke nor moved. The laird repeated the question. “Weel,” replied Donald, “it was twal’ pund at breakfast; it has gotten to achteen at dinner-time, and it was sax-and-twenty when ye sat down to supper wi’ the captain.” Then, after a pause, he added: “I’ve been tellin’ lees a’ my life to please the shooters, but I’ll be doonied if I’m going to tell lees noo, in my old age, to please the fushers!”

DOINGS IN DOGDOM.

BENCH SHOWS.

Mar. 31-Apr. 1-3—Santa Clara Valley Poultry and Kennel Club—California Collie Club bench show at San Jose, Cal.; Chas. R. Harker, Secretary, San Jose, Cal.

May 14-21. San Francisco Kennel Club's bench show, San Francisco. H. H. Carlton, Sec'y.

COURSING.

March 26-27—Ingleside Coursing Park. Regular meetings every Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Drawings every Thursday evening, 1019 Market street.

March 26-27—Union Coursing Park. Regular meetings every Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Drawings every Wednesday evening, 909 Market street.

The crack pointer Fay Templeton has been purchased by Mr. Clarence Mackay from Mr. Fairbairn.

The Olinda Kennels will enter a kennel of foxhounds in the San Jose show. The selection will be Sport and Belle, Jim and Dora.

The office of the San Francisco Kennel Club will be located in the same place as last year, 224 Montgomery street, and not at 14 Post street, as heretofore reported. The change has been made recently.

The mastiff Leamington, bred by C. E. Bunn, of Peoria, and owned by N. G. Alexander and Son of Delavan, Ills., recently died. It is claimed he was one of the best in the Western States, having won at bench shows repeatedly. He was in great demand in the stud.

The affairs of the Alaska Dog Company, that shipped a ca-load of dogs, gathered in Lake and Klamath counties, from Ashland to Seattle some weeks ago, have had a sad financial ending. Last week over forty of the dogs were turned loose on the streets of Seattle, no sale having been found for them, while the few that were sold brought less than cost price. It is reported that the promoters of the venture lost $800 in it.

In view of the action recently taken by the American Kennel Club with regard to inaccuracies in the matter of entries, etc., it is important that care should be taken in filling out entry blanks by intending exhibitors during the coming bench show season. Premium lists will publish the rules in force at present. Any other information desired can be easily obtained from the office of the A. K. C., 55 Liberty street, New York. If the existing rules and regulations are not satisfactory, it behooves the opposers to make proper motion for repeal and change. So long as they stand in force, the only fair way for all concerned is to observe them.

Kennel Registry.

The Dog Show Girl.

She looks with smiles, and frowns and shrugs—
For she was very wise—
Upon the poodles, pointers, pugs,
The beagles, bulls and Skyes;
Of setters, spaniels, St. Bernards,
Of dogs of every breed,
Of every canine on the cards,
She knew a lot, indeed.

She talked to me of “apple-head”
Of “brisket” and of “blaze,”
The “button-ear” was bad, she said,
But gave the “rose ear” praise;
The “Dudley nose” quite met her views,
A “dew claw” gave delight
She criticized a blood hound's “fews,”
But thought his “couplings” right.

Then she descanted on the “haw,”
The “feather,” “frill” and “flag”
In “bucklebones” she found a flaw,
But loved a “pily shag”;
To me it all was Dutch or French,
I tried to learn in vain;
And thus she went from bench to bench,
While I just went—insane!

St. Bernard Club.

A special meeting of the St. Bernard club was held on Wednesday evening, March 23d in the office of Dr. Cluness, Jr., 406 Sutter street. The members present were: Thos. H. Browne, Jos. E. Cutten, Chas. Stutz, F. H. Bushnell, Dr. Cluness, Jr., Dr. Terry; C. Kirkpatrick, Hubert White, J. Littrell, W. G. Saxe, H. McCracken and H. A. Wegener. After certain regular business was disposed of the club took under consideration a communication received from the Pacific Mastiff Club of California, the purport of which communication was an invitation to join in a movement tending to independent organization by Pacific Coast specialty clubs and secession from the American Kennel Club. After consideration of the proposal, the secretary was instructed to forward to the Pacific Mastiff Club the following: “The St. Bernard Club of California does not approve of the action taken by the Pacific Mastiff Club, and that the St. Bernard Club cannot accept the invitation to join in any convention with a view of discussing secession from the American Kennel Club, as we fully believe the A. K. C. has acceded to every reasonable request demanded by the different clubs of the Coast, and the St. Bernard Club does not believe in secession.”

The following resolution was then adopted:

“WHEREAS, it having come to the knowledge of the St. Bernard Club of California that certain organizations are considering the advisability of seceding from the American Kennel Club, and

“WHEREAS, the said A. K. C. have heretofore given prompt and courteous consideration to the requests of the Kennel Clubs of the Pacific Coast, and

“WHEREAS—The A. K. C. has labored assiduously and impartially to promote the best interests of breeding and the improvement of dogs throughout the country, therefore be it

“Resolved, That that the St. Bernard Club of California will use all honorable means to support and uphold the American Kennel Club, and strongly disapproves of any and all efforts to encourage Pacific Coast organizations to secede therefrom, and be it further

“Resolved, That the St. Bernard Club of California will refuse to exhibit its dogs at any bench show held on the Coast not under the rules of the American Kennel Club, nor will the St. Bernard Club recognize any such show.”

The following statement in reference to certain press announcements speaks for itself:

“It having been printed in some sporting paper that the St. Bernard Club had followed the footsteps of the Pacific Mastiff Club in passing a resolution to secede from the A. K. C., I hereby claim that no such resolution was ever passed by the St. Bernard Club and the party or parties inserting such notice had no authority from this club for such action and simply took it upon themselves to do so.

THOS. H. BROWNE, Pres. St. Bernard Club.”

San Jose Bench Show.

Entries for the San Jose show closed last Monday. The entry list is a good one. San Francisco promises to be well represented. The bench show opens next Wednesday and continues until Saturday night. C. D. Nairn of Ballston, Or., will judge all classes. Spratts Patent will feed and bench. The show will be under the supervision of J. C. Berrett.

Coursing.

The attendance at Union Coursing Park on Saturday last was a large one. The stake was contested by fifty-six of the cracks on the Coast. Twenty-eight courses were raced during the afternoon, many of them fine performances, and gamely stood by the hounds that ran over the sward. This made the betting lively and added a zest to the programme for the following day.

On Sunday there was another large crowd in attendance. The surprise of the day was the masterly performance of For Freedom, the property of the Pasha Kennels. From being a rank outsider at 30 to 1 he gradually claimed attention, and when he turned Rosette down there was a drop in the betting till 5 to 4 were the odds.

The betting was lively all day and the ring was well patronized by the ladies, they backed their favorites to a standstill. The courses were as follows:

Puppy stakes—Second ties: Sandow beat Dempsey Lass, Bonita beat Belle Seward, Pastime beat Arrow and Master Jack beat Quiver. Third ties: Bonita beat Sandow and Master Jack beat Pastime. Final: Bonita won.

Open stake—Second ties: Rosette beat Rusty Gold, For Freedom beat Mountain Beauty, Eclipse beat Patria, Santa Alicia beat Gallagher, Theron beat Green Valley Maid and Moondyne beat Commodore in the bye. Third ties: For Freedom beat Rosette, Eclipse beat Santa Alicia and Moondyne beat Theron. Fourth ties: For Freedom beat Moondyne and Eclipse beat Blackstone in the bye. For Freedom won the final.

The entries for today and tomorrow promise to show a series of high class coursing, the programme will be found in the daily BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

The popularity of Ingleside coursing is evidenced by the large crowds in attendance on Saturday and Sunday last. On Saturday the Eastern flyers were bowled over by the local dogs easily. Sunday's programme afforded a chance for lovers of the sport to do considerable guessing.

First Ties—H Hanrahan's Mercury beat W G Gleason's Sylvanus; B Dougherty's Tessie Fair beat W Ryan's Soprano; T Cronin's Johnny R beat W Dalton's Lady Napoleon; D Leonard's Bendalong beat D Flynn's Tom Bell; Dr Van Hummel's Van Cloie beat W C Glasson's Mystery; W C Glasson's Magic beat M Michalik's Fireball; G Smart's Silkwood beat Henry Spring's Dawn; P Reiley's Ranger beat P Carney's Nelly Daly; D Kabers Bell of Moscow beat Dr Van Hummel's Chit Chat; Deckelman & Panario's Glen Roy beat James Byrne's Mohawk; Henry Spring's Pat Malloy beat E J Heney's Harkaway; D Hooper's Koo Laun beat J Dean's Brilliantine; J M Stilwell's Little Dell beat J J Edwards' Vida Shaw

Third Ties—Mercury beat Bendalong; Magic beat Silkwood; Glen Roy beat Little Dell; Pat Malloy a bye.

Fourth Ties—Magic beat Mercury; Glen Roy beat Pat Malloy.

Final—Magic beat Glen Roy and won the money.

In the Consolation Stake Princess Marie ran a bye; J. J. Edmond's Forget beat Dr. Van Hummel's Van Traale; R. L. Lee's Coralie beat J. R. Dickson's Premier; H. Devine's Gilt Edge beat S. E. Portal's At Last; P. Brophy's Benicia Boy beat James Byrne's Nelly B; S E. Portal's Lightning beat F. C. Mack's Black Patti; F. Brown's Alma beat Dr. Van Hummel's Van Nida.

First Ties—Forget beat Princess Marie; Coralie bent Gilt Edge; Lightning beat Benicia Boy; Alma a bye.

Second Ties—Coralie beat Forget; Lightning beat Alma.

Final—Coralie beat Lightning.

Los Angeles Coursing.

At Agricultural Park last Sunday the sport was of a very good standard and was witnessed by a large crowd. In the Consolation Stakes there were twenty-four dogs entered. Shamrock took first money, Blue Bird second, Grace H. third, Here We Are fourth, Joe fifth and Sharkey sixth. Orpheum Lass won first money in the crackjack stake of eight entries, D. V. H second.

Romeo and Don Caster ran three ties, and Don Caster won the fourth race after running the full course.

Manager Farris of the Athletic Club, San Bernardino, proposes to inaugurate a series of coursing meets in the local racing park during the coming summer.

G. Smith, the owner of Lucky Jack, was ruled off for life from the Los Angeles Coursing Park. The charge against him was doping his dog with intoxicants.

H. GLOVER, Esq., 34 HANSON PLACE, BROOKLYN.
Dear Sir—I have used your Mange Cure with great satisfaction.
Yours truly, H. F. ATEN, M. D.

A Fair Race Horse Owner.

Although woman from time immemorial has been a lover of the horse, and a liberal and most enthusiastic patron of the race track, but few have ever openly engaged in the business of conducting a regular racing stable. Among the first to identify themselves with the business of racing on anything like an extensive scale, was the Duchess of Montrose, who was known as the "racing Duchess" and Lilly Langtry, known the world over as the beautiful "Jersey Lily." The latter's reputation was first acquired by her striking beauty; this was afterward extended and to a very great extent, embellished by her successful experience with blooded horses.

Among the most noted of her many famous horses, was imp. Friar Tuck, purchased in England and brought about nine years ago, in company with imp. Greenback, to her once celebrated stock farm in Northern California. For several seasons Mrs. Langtry has been a contestant for purses and famous stakes at the noted tracks of Old England and famous stakes at the noted tracks of Old England and famous stakes at the noted tracks of Old England.

Her favorite horse was for a time one of the best known animals in the world. This was partly due to his performances in England and partly to his fair owner. Friar Tuck has probably been patted and petted by royalty and the swaggers of both continents to a greater extent than any other horse that ever lived. During the halcyon days of her California racing career "the Langtry place," the name of her extensive stock farm in Lake County, was the scene of many a brilliant gathering. Some of Mr. Gebhard's valuable horses were killed in a railroad accident some years ago in New Jersey, and Turfman Matt Storn, injured very severely, was nursed through it by the Jersey Lily. She has probably made more money out of track sports than any other woman the racing world has ever known. It is said that she won $300,000 on Merman's recent victory in England. One of her recent purchases was Aurum, for which she paid $25,000.

Since her departure for Europe, California has had no female representative in the racing world. But the fair Lily, it seems, is not to remain in undisturbed possession of track sports as a woman patron; a new figure in the person of Mrs. Nettie Harrison, the well known dermatologist of San Francisco, has appeared upon the scene and promises to take up the work along the lines laid down by the Jersey Lily. And strange to say, her stable will include some of the Greenback colts bred upon the famous California farm of Mrs. Langtry and Freddie Gebhard. The fact that Mrs. Harrison—who is herself a woman of striking beauty—should enter the racing world and start with the progeny of that famous farm, seems to be something more than a mere coincidence.

But as Mrs. Harrison is not engaging in the business altogether through sentiment, it is not likely she will confine her stables to any one family of horses, no matter how romantic their ownership may be. Her horse, Mocorito, has already won two races, which netted something like $5,000. Like others of means who have become identified with the track and high-class brood farms, she expects to make it a means of recreation, and, incidentally, a means of revenue. This she can certainly do if her success in other lines may be taken as a criterion. There is one thing that track patrons can rely on, and that is that her horses will always be out to win. Few women are better known in the professional world of California than Mrs. Nettie Harrison.

Her summer home among the ancient oaks of San Mateo, which has just been completed, is one of the handsomest in that famous resident section. Hers has been a well won victory in the struggle for riches. If she does not succeed in making her colors known upon the track, from one end of the country to the other, the turf will enjoy the distinction of recording her first failure. Her plans for the immediate future are not yet fully matured, but it is understood that she will have at least a few entries in the important Eastern events during the present season. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will watch her career upon the track with more than usual interest, first because she is a woman, and secondly because she is a Californian.

Somehow or Other.

The good wife hustled about the house,
Her face still bright with pleasant smile,
As broken snatches of happy song
Strengthened her heart and hand the while.
The good man sat in the chimney nook,
His little clay pipe within his lips,
And all he'd made and all he'd lost
Ready and clear on his finger tips.

"Good wife, I've just been thinking a bit.
Nothing has done very well this year;
Money is bound to be hard to get—
Everything's bound to be very dear;
How the cattle are going to be fed,
How we're to keep the boys at school,
Is kind of a debt and credit sum,
I can't make balance by my rule."

She turned around from the baking bread,
And she faced him with a cheerful laugh:
"Why, husband, dear, one would think
That the good rich wheat was only chaff
And what if the wheat was only chaff,
As long as we both are well and strong?
I'm not a woman to worry a bit.
Somehow or other we get along."

"Into some lives some rain must fall,
Over all lands the storm must beat,
But when the rain and storms are o'er,
The after sunshine is twice as sweet.
Through every straight we have found a road,
In every grief we've found a song.
We've had to bear and had to wait,
But somehow or other we get along."

"For thirty years we have loved each other,
Stood by each other whatever befell.
Six boys have called us father and mother,
And all of them living and doing well.
We owe no man a penny, my dear,
We're both of us living, well and strong,
Good man, I wish you would smoke again,
And think how well we've got along."

He filled his pipe with a pleasant laugh;
He kissed his wife with a tender pride:
He said: "I'll do just as you tell me love:
I'll just count up the other side."
She left him then with his better thought,
And lifted her work with a low, sweet song,
A song that followed me many a year,
"Somehow or other we get along."

The Sugar-Beet Industry.

[BY J. T. FLYNN.]

Although the manufacture of beet sugar ranks among the great staple productions of the world, it is of comparatively recent origin. It was first attempted by the great Napoleon, who caused four small refineries to be erected in France in the year 1812. These met with but indifferent success, the means of extraction employed being very crude. It may be said, therefore, that beyond establishing the fact that the beet contained the elements of sugar, nothing was accomplished by the efforts of the great French soldier. It brought to him nothing but the ridicule of other nations.

A few years later the industry was established in Germany, where it continued to be but little more than an experiment for many years. Between these two countries, however, a spirit of commercial rivalry kept the matter alive for nearly fifty years. The total output for France of the years 1826-7 was only a little over 1,500 tons. From that date on the yield increased with occasional fluctuations until 1879, when it reached 420,396 tons of 2,200 pounds each. Germany and the other European countries also increased their productions to such an extent that the beet-sugar product of that year formed nearly two-thirds of the entire sugar crop of the world. From that time on its increase has been rapid. It now forms three-fourths of the world's supply.

The first attempt to make sugar from beets in the United States was made in 1830, which resulted in the production of a few hundred pounds of a rather inferior quality.

Although beets grown in certain portions of the United States revealed a phenomenal adaptability to the production of sugar, exceeding in many instances the quality of the European product, the business remained in a state of comparative lethargy until 1863. Between that and the year 1871 there was produced a total of about 500 tons of 2,000 lbs. each. In 1873, 500 tons were produced. The following year found 700 tons to the credit of American manufacturers; the three following years it dropped back to 100 tons per annum. The year of 1896 found 40,000 tons to the credit of American refineries. Of this amount California alone produced 60,000,000 lbs., nearly one-half of which was the product of the Chino refinery. The world's production of cane sugar for that year, that is for the years of 1896 and 1897, was 2,747,500 tons. The beet product for the same period was 4,900,000 tons. It will thus be seen that while the beet sugar product of the United States has grown at a remarkable rate, it still forms but an insignificant part not only of the world's product, but a very small part of the sugar importations of this country. The consumption of sugar in the United States in the year of 1896 amounted to 1,960,000 tons; of this amount 1,711,556 tons were imported from foreign countries at a cost of over $100,000,000.

The greater portion of this came from Germany, and was grown upon land vastly inferior to that of the sugar-beet districts of California. This vast sum represents what may well be called the needless outlay of the nation. It is just so much money taken out of the business channels of this nation each year and placed to the credit of others without the slightest reason for so doing. To defeat this enormous drain upon the country has been the purpose of both the law-makers and the manufacturers for many years, but, unfortunately, the question of promoting and protecting this important branch of trade has not met with the legitimate favor which has been extended to many other industries of less note.

With the exception of the Sugar Bounty Act, which enjoyed but a brief existence, there has practically been no encouragement offered to the growers of sugar beets except such as has come from private hands. To the men who put their money into refineries rather than to the favor of the law does the sugar-beet industry of to-day owe its existence. In order to promote the growth of the sugar beet, which was practically suspended with the repeal of the Sugar Bounty Act, the refiners of California entered into a contract with growers to take their product at a fixed price for a term of years. By this system of aid the risk was transferred from the grower to the refiner.

The man who grows the beets has no care but that of cultivation, while the refiner is left to wrestle with the problems of legislation. One deals with the unerring laws of nature, while the other faces the perplexities of politics. Among the first to extend encouragement to this most important industry were the Oxnard Brothers of Chino, California. This first took life in the form of a refinery erected in 1891 at a cost of nearly $1,000,000. The first year they took up the product of some 2,250 acres, which has been increased year by year until it now reaches many times that figure in the Chino district alone. The next step in the direction of encouraging the industry was the contract system, which insures the grower a handsome profit regardless of economic or other conditions. As the result of this liberal policy the cultivation of sugar beets is surrounded with a measure of protection enjoyed by no other branch of productive industry, either in California or elsewhere. This, as might be expected, has given impetus to that line of husbandry.

Thousands of acres of land in this section of the State which was used heretofore for pasture and other purposes, have been converted into cozy homes of ten and twenty acres each. The great "Chino Ranch" comprising some 40,000 acres, once the foraging point of wild Spanish cattle, has been transformed into one of peaceful and profitable settlement by the magic wand of industry. On the site occupied by a single hacienda a few years ago, there stands the city of Chino with a population of nearly 1,200, more than one-half of whom find employment in the refinery alone.

During the year 1897 the Chino refinery disbursed for wages, sugar-beets and fuel more than $700,000. Of this sum $100,000 was expended for California petroleum, the factory consuming about 700 barrels a day. In addition to this enterprise, the Oxnard Brothers have just completed another large refinery at Hueneme. W. A. Clarke, the Montana copper king, has also completed a large sugar refinery at Los Almitos, in Los Angeles county. And then there is the Spreckels refinery now in course of completion at Salinas. This is said to be the largest institution of its kind in the world. All of these new enterprises will commence active operations this fall, and will afford employment to many thousand people. When it is considered that a very large part of California is adapted to the growth of the sugar-beet, the bundle of possibilities of this industry becomes apparent.

Breeding Too Early.

The following article, copied from an Eastern exchange, contains some valuable hints about the breeding of hogs. Applicable to California, though there is wide difference here and in the middle and other side of the continent, there are general rules that can be followed with advantage in all sections. One thing is settled, that some of the breeds which meet with favor in the older States will not do here, especially in the interior, but it has also been proved that with a proper selection of stock there is nothing in the way of full success in the production of "hog products." It would appear that California should be able to furnish a full supply of these products for home use in place of depending on large importations from the East, and the day is not far distant when every pound of pork, ham, bacon and lard consumed on this Coast will be furnished by home production.

Appended to the longer article a couple of paragraphs urging the necessity of exercise for the breeding sows, and the plan recommended, to let them have the run of a pasture or a wood lot, is certainly worthy of adoption.

On the celebrated Vina Rancho there is a large area of bottom land on which the hogs run the year round. Left to do their own foraging they thrive and "wax fat," and several thousands of dollars worth are sold each year, the only cost to drive them in a chute and load them on the cars.

A great mistake is often made by mating the gilt to a boar at too early an age. Until maturity is reached the dam cannot transmit strength and vigor of constitution to its young. Some breeds mature earlier than others, but in no case, probably ought the sow to be bred until it is upward of one year old. The first litter will indicate her value as a brood sow, and, if good, she ought to be retained for that purpose until she is seven or eight years old. Some farmers will not keep anything longer than until it reaches about the age of two years, keeping up their stock entirely from young sows. Looking upon all sows only as meat animals, they are all alike considered unprofitable to keep after reaching maturity. No greater mistake could be made. A good brood sow kept until it is eight years of age and properly cared for all the time, is valuable property, and for the money invested nothing on the farm that will bring a larger return. Sold or killed at two years of age, it is worth probably not more than fifteen to twenty dollars, with the best care. Of course, those that are not good should be fed for sale or for bacon. To be a good brood sow she must not only be prolific; she must also be a good feeder, a good milker and care well for her young. For her best development on these lines she must be well cared for, and wise, unceasing care will be liberally paid for.

The best plan I have ever found is to give them the run of the wood lot all winter. If, in addition to this, they can have the run of a patch of rye, or a pasture that has not been cropped too close, so much the better. In the rye and pasture they can get some green food nearly all the time and in the wood lot they can root among the leaves to their heart's content and find roots, plants and insects that are exactly suited to their nature. This is a sufficient inducement to them to take plenty of exercise every day. Since adopting this plan they always do well at farrowing, and the pigs are strong and healthy.

Practical hog growers know that fall litters are apt to be stronger, more even and healthy than those farrowed in spring. There is a cause for this, and in knowing the cause and providing, as nearly as possible, the summer condition depends largely the success with spring litters.

One of the important summer conditions is that of proper daily exercise. We formerly had a good deal of trouble with sows at the spring farrowing, but of late years have had none, and can now see that one of the main troubles was the want of proper exercise. I have never had a sow do much good when confined in a small lot or pen during the whole time of pregnancy. We have all read of many plans to give them this needed exercise, and I have tried a number of them, such as feeding at some distance from the pens each day and allowing them to wander back, giving them the run of cow lot for a couple hours each day, but none of them seemed to work very well.

Poultry Notes.

Bisulphide of carbon as a vapor bath for fowls and as a fumigator of the house is death to lice.

Charred corn on cobs is a good way to feed charcoal to fowls and nothing better for bowel troubles.

Do not allow strange dogs in your poultry yard, and do not allow your own dogs to chase the fowls.

The hatching room should be so thoroughly ventilated that upon entering it the odor from the lamps would be detected. Tobacco smoke is injurious to hatching eggs.

It has been estimated that if farmers could be induced to discard scrubs and use only pure breeds, the increase in value of poultry products would be fully 100 per cent.

If you have a lot of late hatched chickens, separate them and fatten for the table. They will be worthless as layers or breeding stock.

If possible, sow a patch of rye for the chickens during the winter season. It will be relished, and besides it will benefit the ground.

Sulphur mixed with soft food and given two or three times a month, has a very beneficial effect. It seems to permeate through the system of the fowl, promoting health and preventing disease. It also has a tendency to rid poultry of vermin. Mix with the feed intended for ten or a dozen dozen fowls, about two dessert spoonfuls of pulverized sulphur. Given as directed, and the beneficial result thereof will be seen in a short time.

The Trotting Horse.

BY CHARLES MARVIN.

This great practical horse book is a handsome, three hundred page octavo, bound in cloth, elegantly printed, superbly illustrated, and explains in every detail the remarkable success of CHARLES MARVIN and the whole plans and methods pursued at Palo Alto as to breaking, training, shoeing, gaiting, driving, keeping racing and breeding trotters.

Read what J. C. Silby, the owner of St. Bel, says of this book: "In this work Marvin has let out all the mysteries of the craft, and it is so simple and plain that any breeder, owner, trainer or rubber who has any relish for his business can take a colt as a yearling and develop to the highest and fullest extent that colt's capacity as a trotter. The work impressed me so strongly that I have ordered twenty copies, and shall place one in the hands of every rubber on our farm.
Mailed postpaid for $3.50. Address

THE FASTEST OF THE GUY WILKES FAMILY

SEYMOUR WILKES, 2:08 1/2

(REGISTERED 0232)

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

J. H. White's Stock Farm, Lakeville, Cal.

TERMS—$25 FOR THE SEASON

SEYMOUR WILKES was sired by the King of the Wilkes family, Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, dam Early Bird, by Playmail (brother to Barney, 2:25 1/4); second dam Lucy, by Odd Fellow (son of Chloroform); third dam by a son of Williamson's Belmont; fourth dam by Blackhawk 767. Playmail was by Mike 3403 (the by Vermont 322, out of the Peniger mare), out of Kate McDonough (dam of Ella Lewis 2:27, and granddam of Saladin, 2:07 1/4).

SEYMOUR WILKES stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds. He is a seal brown in color, and in conformation is one of the most symmetrical of any in California. His qualities as a level-headed, game and speedy race horse are known to all horsemen. He is the fastest son of the mighty Guy Wilkes, and on his maternal side traces to the very best of sires and dams. He has an iron constitution, and all owners of good mares that want horses that will have breeding, size, bone, quality, good disposition and extreme speed should not overlook this horse. His service fee is placed at a very low figure considering his merits. He never was bred but to a few mares, and his progeny are models of perfection. Mares can be shipped direct to the ranch via steamer "Gold." The best of care taken of them on the farm, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Pasturage $3 per month. For further particulars apply to

TORSO

Will Make the SEASON of 1898 at the Parkview Stock Farm
(HALF MILE EAST OF SACRAMENTO.)

Chestnut horse, foaled 1886. Bred by HON. W. L. SCOTT, Algeria Stud, Pa.
TORSO	Algerine	Imp. Australian
	Abd-el-Kader	West Australian
	Nina	Imp. Emilia
	Lord Lyon	Berthune
Imp. Santa Lucia	Lady Margarette	Alice Carneal
		Timoleon
		Sister to Tuckahoe
		Sister to Catterick
		The Baron
		Pocahontas
		Paragon
		Ellen Horne
		Stockwell
		Honiton
		Flax
		Retreat

Torso sired the following winners : Torsina, Joe Roger, Torello, True Love II., Tortosa, Una Que Amo, Torsion, Torsolene, Myrtle H., Tortenson, Sister Ella, Solution, Hearso, Torsida, Sculptor, Torchdance, The Shrew, Vada, Odds On, Cosina, Caricia, Restless, Our Johnny, Sweet Liberty, Tessa, Finanza (dead) and Merry Lass (dead).

During his two years of turf career, Torso won nearly $45,000. His full sister, Aurelia, was one of the best mares of her day, winning $20,385, and her first foal was last season's capital two-year-old performer, Aurelian. Their dam, Imp. Santa Lucia, also threw the winners, Tasso and Aureole. She is a daughter of the triple event winner, Lord Lyon, and through him obtains the potent blood of Paradigm, who produced Achievement, and two of whose granddaughters are the dams of Ladas and Glare, two of the best two-year-olds in England in 1892.

Algerine, the sire of Torso, was a superior race horse, winner of the Belmont Stakes, etc., and is by Abd-el-Kader, out of Nina, by Boston. Abd-el-Kader (a full brother to the good four-miler, Abd-el-Koree), although badly hiped, was a fine race horse at all distances. He won a dash of four miles at Saratoga, in 1869, in 7:31 1/4, a very creditable performance. Nina, the dam of Algerine, was one of the best race mares of her day. She was a winner at all distances, from one to four-mile heats, in good time, and produced Planet, one of the best horses in the country at all distances, and a successful sire, also Echequer, Ninette, Eclipse, etc.

Torso was a brilliant two-year-old. He won the first of the Double Events from a field of nine and also the second Double Event with a five-pound penalty, making his weight 123 pounds. In the Surf Stakes he beat Cayuga, St. James and four others, and in the Flatbush he defeated Reclaire, Onaway, Burlington and three others.

At three years of age he won the Lorillard Stakes, 1 1/2 miles in 2:36 1/4, from Tournament, Banquet, Badisha, Devotee, St. John, Burlington and Protection, a high-class field; was second to Burlington for the Brooklyn Derby, in front of Tournament, Padisha, Lisimouy, Kenwood and four others; was second for the Equinoctial Stakes to Reclaire, beating Tournament and others, and carrying nine pounds more than he winner, and was third for the Omnibus Stakes, 1 1/2 miles, carrying a penalty of five pounds.

TERMS $50 THE SEASON.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898. All bills payable not later than that date. Good pasturage at $5 per month.

Sire of Eight new 2:20 Performers for 1897.

Sire and Grandsire of ALL the 2:10 Performers ever Produced in Oregon and Washington.

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

Alameda, at $100 the Season.

(WITH USUAL RETURN PRIVILEGES.)

LIMITED TO TWENTY-FIVE MARES.

ALTAMONT shares championship honors with Baron Wilkes, a horse of great opportunities, in having six 2:10 performers to his credit. He has taken a leading position among the foremost trotting sires of the country under such conditions that phenomenal ability alone has saved him from oblivion. A very small proportion of his progeny has been trained, and an extremely small number of these by competent men. As a partial illustration of his meagre advantages, it may be stated that he has never produced a colt from a pacing-bred mare or from one with a fast record. Nor until 1897 had he ever been crossed with a descendant of George Wilkes, Electioneer, Dictator, Sidney or Dexter Prince. Oregon and Washington have produced seven 2:10 performers, and EVERY ONE of these are ALTAMONTS.

ALTAMONT is a horse of iron constitution, and at twenty-three years of age is in the full vigor of his prime, a sure foal-getter, and, except for his blindness—the result of an accident—is without blemish. He has never sired a sorrel, all of his colts having been solid colors—bays, browns or blacks.

NOTE—Bessie Rankin, by Altamont, sold November, 1897, brought the highest price obtained for a harness horse at public auction in California during the year. Address

BAY STREET STATION. J. M. NELSON. Cor. St. Charles and Eagle ave., Alameda, Cal.

THE THOROUGHBRED STALLION

ZOBAIR

—Sired by—

ST. SAVIOUR, out of NIGHTHAWK, by HADDINGTON; second dam by NORFOLK, etc., to the thirteenth dam.

ZOBAIR is a bay stallion, foaled in 1890, and is one of the finest-looking thoroughbreds in America. His career on the turf compares favorably with any thoroughbred in America. He started 38 times, won 11, was second 9 times and third 7 times, and won almost $6,000 in purses.

ZOBAIR will make the SEASON OF 1898, ending JULY 1st, at the PETALUMA RACE TRACK. TERMS $25 THE SEASON.

Mares kept in any manner owners may desire. Facilities for doing so are first-class. Mares can be shipped per steamer "Gold." For pasturage, etc., apply to

THE STANDARD-BRED TROTTING STALLION

MONTEREY, 2:13 3-4,

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT ALAMEDA
(Cor. Arbor St. and Eagle Ave., end of Speed Track.)

MONTEREY, 2:13 3/4.	Sidney, 2:19 1/4.	Sire of	Santa Claus, 2:15.	Sire of	Strathmore 402

			Wm. Penn, 2:07 1/4.	Dam of	Lady Thorn Jr.
			and 15 others.		Navidad, 2:22 1/2.
Hattie	Sweetness, 2:21.	Sire of	Sidney, 2:18 1/4.	Sire of	Volunteer 55
	Dam of		Com. Belmont 4340.	Sire of	St. Julian
	Monterey, 2:13 3/4.		Meteor, 2:17 1/2.	Sire of	Lady Merrit, by Edw. Everett
	Montana, 2:16 1/4.		Cora Bell, 2:23.	Sire of	Belmont 64
Hattie	three-year-old record 2:30 winner of the Occident Stake in 7 heats.		Dam of	Sire of	Maud S.
			Iago, 2:11.	Sire of	Miss Gratz (by Commodore)
			and six others.		Woodford Mambrino, 2:21
			Barona, 2:16 1/4.	Sire of	Abbottsford
Hattie			Dam of		and 13 others.
			Monterey, 2:13 3/4.		By Alexander's Norman 25
			Montana, 2:16 1/4.

If MONTEREY begets colts like himself he will prove to be the poor man's friend, for it will cost but little to bring them to the races.

MONTEREY had but five months' training before making his record of 2:13 3/4, last half in 1:03 1/4. Last season I had no idea of getting him beaten, but his foot was injured in the blacksmith shop, consequently he had to be let up in his training. Previous to this unfortunate accident, I drove him a mile in 2:11 1/4, last half in 1:02 1/4, last quarter in 30 seconds. This was done in the presence of 3,000 people about July 10th. I could have driven him better than 2:10, as he seems to be all right. I look for him to get the harness record this year, which ought to make his produce very salable.

MONTEREY is a thorough race horse, as he is level-headed and game as a pebble. He has a fine, resolute way of going a gait so much admired by all. A glance at his pedigree will convince any horseman that he is bred in the purple and is justly entitled to his extra speed. Every one of his family are producers of early and extreme speed.

MONTEREY is one of the gamest horses I ever drove, and, like his full brother, Montana, 2:16 1/4, the races are never too long for him. Montana won the Occident Stake in seven heats and many a hard-fought race since.

Hattie, dam of Monterey and Montana, is a grand-looking bay mare, and I consider her one of the very strongest, as well as one of the best-bred mares in America. Her sire is strongly bred, and sires speed. To his credit may be mentioned Meteor, 2:17 1/4; Carrie Bell, 2:23 1/2; the dams of Iago, 2:11; Fell-fare, 2:10 1/4; Galette, 2:12 1/2, and thirteen others in the list.

I have every reason to expect that Monterey will be the "King of all Trotters." In color he is a rich chestnut, and in conformation he has strong loins and back, good shoulders, fine head and neck, and the best of feet and legs. He weighs 1,200 pounds and stands 15 3 hands.

I will have Monterey at my ranch at Milpitas any time mares are sent there.

TERMS, $50, With Usual Return Privileges.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898, as Monterey will then be prepared for the races. All bills payable not later than that date. Address all letters to

THE BREEDING AND INDIVIDUALITY OF CHAMPION RACERS AND SIRE

Because a horse is a champion racer it does not follow that he will be a champion sire of racers, and queens of the turf have often proven absolute failures in the harem. English (O'Kelly's) Eclipse was the champion race horse of his era and also the greatest sire. In this country Lexington was the best race horse of his generation and the leading sire for very many years—in fact, the best American-bred sire of gallopers ever known. Stockwell, "the Emperor of Stallions," the greatest sire ever known in England, while he was good enough to win the 2,000 Guineas and St. Leger, lacked considerable of having the racing ability of either Gladiator, Flying Dutchman or West Australian, who were real champions in the lists of racers. Norfolk and Asteroid, both unbeaten, were much better as race horses than as sires, though they were anything but failures. War Dance, another son of Lexington and a Glencoe mare, who did not closely approach as a racer either Norfolk or Asteroid, is regarded as a better sire. Tremont, far and away the best youngster of his years, retiring undefeated, is anything but a good sire. Salvator is not the great success that many predicted he would be, and though his opportunities have been of the best, he has yet to sire a performer of the first class. Hanover, our leading broodmare, was as great on the track as in the stud. The best broodmares of this generation, Marion and Belle Knight, were not known as great stake-winners and would never have been heard of except through the performances of their produce. And so it goes.

What, then, should be the first requisite in a stallion or mare to be placed at the stud? We say—first, individuality—"masculinity" and strength in a stallion, "roominess" in a broodmare—both without defects that can be transmitted to their offspring. The pictures of all the great stallions indicate that they possessed the qualities we have mentioned to marked degree. O'Kelly's Eclipse and Stockwell (the latter traced to Eclipse in the male line) bore a strong resemblance in conformation and color, though Stockwell was a larger horse. Rataplan, Stockwell's brother, and nearly if not quite as good a race horse, was nothing like as successful at the stud. He did not have that masculine look that Stockwell did and was built on lines more trim. Whalebone, Sultan, Melbourne, Touchstone, Irish Birdcatcher, Flageolet, Consul, English Salvator, Vertusaglin and Vermout, all successful sires, had that sturdy, masculine appearance, while Gladiator, The Flying Dutchman, Tremont and other racing successes and sire failures looked like females about the head and neck.

We predicted the success at the stud of imp. Watercress when we first set eyes upon him, and that was at the Stet Fair of 1894, if memory serves us aright. He looked "all horse," he had that indescribable masculine look, that sturdiness possessed by all truly great sires. Goldfinch was handsome and a trimmer-built fellow, and Salvator, also shown at the fair, was a picture of equine beauty, but not of strength and masculinity. Imp. Midlothian, while small, was "all horse," "a little big fellow." This very successful stallion has no "feminine" head and neck, either.

All the great broodmares were built on roomy lines. There was never a noted matron that did not have a large body and very heavy, muscular quarters. Marion, Belle Knight, Reel, Levity, Thora, Miss Woodford, Fairy Rose, Flirt, Lizzie Lucas, Nevada, Nora Worth, Pocahontas, Sylvia or any other great mother of gallopers were of good size and had extra "roominess," wonderful width of loin—in fact, great muscular development at all points. Of the mares mentioned above that have achieved greatness at the stud Marion, Belle Knight, Thora and Miss Woodford do not trace on the female side of the house nearly as far as many others, so that it must have been their wonderful "individuality" more than their breeding that made them throw races of degree with regularity. Two of Miss Woodford's foals (Sombre and the Woodford Filly), by different sires, won the same afternoon one day last week at Ingleside. Maggie R. (dam of Tim and Tat Murphy and several other winners), a mare whose pedigree is untraced after the fourth generation on the mother's side, is a superb individual, shaped upon the lines we have spoken of above. All this would indicate that if you mate a roomy mare of more than common muscular development with a masculine-looking stallion of good conformation and breeding you are likely to get a race horse, provided there are no defects in either sire or dam that are likely to be transmitted to the foal resulting from the union.

After the individuality of the animals comes the breeding—their blood lines. There is no doubt in our minds that there are great sires of sires as well as horses that do not begot one-fourth the number of successful sires that they do stud matrons out of the ordinary run. The careers of Lexington and imp. Glencoe go far to prove that. Lexington begot forty successful mothers where he begot two high-class sires of performers. Outside of Norfolk, War Dance and Pat Malloy, where were the sons of Lexington that were very successful in siring winners? But Lexington mares! What a host of harem celebrities by the Milton of our turf! The mothers of a few like Salvator, Luke Blackburn, Sensation, Onondaga, Aranza, Volturino, Elias Lawrence, Susquehanna and Hindoo! And as to imp. Glencoe, what became of the great number of his sons that went to the stud? But one achieved fame of any great moment, and that one was Vandal. And Vandal had a great mother, too—the dam of the immortal Levity. But Glencoe mares were great. There's no mistake about that. Think of Reel, Charmer, Sister to Pryor, Dolly Carter, Magnolia and others in America, and the greatest mare ever known in England—Pocahontas, mother of Stockwell, Rataplan, Knight of Kars, Knight of St. Patrick, Araucaria, etc. There must be something in the late Bruce Lowe's theories anent "sire blood" and "brood mare blood," for the excellence of Lexington and Glencoe was certainly transmitted much oftener through their daughters than through their sons. It looks, then, as if the best mares trace in the direct male line to Herod, the best sires to O'Kelly's Eclipse, or the Darley Arabian, to go further. The descendants of Matchem or the Godolphin Arabian in the male line are quite scarce. It being demonstrated, to our minds, that Herod is the best "brood-mare blood" and Eclipse the most successful "sire blood," it seems reasonable to suppose that if one could possess a stallion of the Eclipse male line with a preponderance of the blood of that horse, one looking masculine and sturdy (resembling in general make-up Eclipse, Stockwell or our successful later-day stallions) and a broodmare of the Herod male line, of generous proportions, as much like Marion, Thora or Miss Woodford as possible, having in her veins more of the blood of Herod than of Eclipse, and mate this mare with the above described stallion, a foal possessing more than ordinary merit as a racer should be the result of the union. To sum the matter up, it is our belief that the breeder who secures first-class individuals, the stallions used (tracing direct to Eclipse in the male line) having more of the blood of O'Kelly's great horse than of Herod, the mares (of the Herod male line) having a preponderance of Herod blood coursing through their veins, and continues to breed on that plan, will make no mistake. In regard to "tap roots," as the late Bruce Lowe would say, the records will show that those bred in America tracing to the Old Montague mare will greatly outnumber those tracing to any other "tap-root" matron. It is a peculiar fact that Lexington and all the members of the great "Levity family" trace to that mare, but through different channels.

CONTINUATION OF THOROUGHbred ANALYSIS.—Encouraged by some private commendations I received on my late article in your paper trying to prove the superior merit of the Leedes Arabian as a factor in the thoroughbred horse, I have concluded to add a few more evidences as presented to my mind. Not so much that I think them very instructive as to indulge a pleasant pastime in an interchange of thought with those interested in the breeding problem.

Analyzing the blood lines of the thoroughbred is somewhat like chemically resolving compound matter into its original elements to ascertain its component parts. For instance, if asked whence came the prime quality of Pocahontas, I would not go back to her primitive ancestress, but would without hesitation say from her sire, Glencoe, and her near relative, Yung Giantess. Why? Because these are conspicuous prepotent factors near at hand. If asked where the pronounced prepotency of Glencoe came from, I would say you need look no further than Buzzard and the Alexander mare on one side and Framp and Web on the other. Thus I would say of those remarkable mares, Betty Leedes, Bay Peg, Little Hartley Mare, Sister to Soreheels, Roxanna, etc., and of such sires as the two Childers, Fox, Why Not, Bald Galloway, Secord, Marske, Snap, etc.; I could draw no other conclusion than their merit came from the Leedes Arabian.

To estimate the blood lines of the thoroughbred horse by the usual rule of male tail descent is unsatisfactory and misleading.

Take Sir Peter, for instance, supposed to belong to the Byerly Turk line—by Highflyer, son of Herod. To begin with, Herod, it must be borne in mind, was one-half Leedes. Herod got Highflyer out of Rachel, by Blank, he out of the famous Little Hartley Mare by Childers. Rachel's dam was daughter of Regulus, her granddam daughter of Soreheels. Regulus was out of a daughter of Bald Galloway. Here we find three additional strains of Leedes to that already in Herod. Now we take Sir Peter, son of Highflyer out of daughter of intensely bred Snap, by Snip, by Childers, and out of sister to Soreheels, Snap's dam by Fox. Here we have a thriffling cross of Leedes close up. Can the figure system figure out intelligently Sir Peter's mixed-up pedigree?

Let us analyze another pedigree and see how misleading it is to count Diomed as belonging to the Byerly Turk line. Diomed by Florizel, son of Herod. Florizel's dam, by Signet, she out of a daughter of Crab, and she out of a daughter of Childers. Crab out of sister to Soreheels. Diomed's dam granddaughter of Blank and great grand daughter of Childers. Here we find five crosses of Leedes close up, with Herod's half blood to begin with.

Now when Whiskey, son of Saltram (by Eclipse) and out of a daughter of the famous Snap, is bred to Diomed's daughter, Young Giantess, the prepotent sisters, Julia, Eleanor and Cressida, are the result. Again, when Diomed, Saltram and Shark united their forces in one pedigree, the phenomenal race horse and sire, old Boston, was produced. The celebrated imp. Cub Mare, that Col. Bruce says was the most valuable ever imported, was by Cub, son of Fox, and out of a daughter of Second, son of Childers; from whom come Sumpter, Flirtilla and Ringgold.—"S. Y. K." in Thoroughbred Record.

THE GALLOPERS AT MEMPHIS, TENN.

MEMPHIS, TENN., March 23, 1898.—[Special to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN]—Ornament's work of a mile in 1:43½ is the "turf topic" of the day. The track was considerably cut up at the time, and necessarily slow. He went out and on his own courage made the circle of the track in the time recorded. The weight he carried was something like one hundred (100) pounds, and in none of his fast works has the son of imp. Order carried a very heavy weight. The impost assigned him in the Montgomery Handicap is one hundred and twenty-seven (127) pounds, and should he win from the class of horses he will meet in that event he will be "the horse of the century."

Buckvidere is a much improved horse and shows more speed than he did in last year's trials. With a good weight up, he worked a mile in 1:47½, and as he is not a work horse, he is considered a dangerous factor in the Montgomery. Wm. McGuigan, as was fully expected, registered the first and only kick against the allotments of weights, but even his was a very mild one, and with all of his careful study and figuring of weights, the only flaw he could find was a comparison between the weights assigned Bonerger and Macy, yet he did not declare his nominee, and signifies his intention of starting. Meadowthorpe will in all probability carry the orange, black sleeves, white cap of Schorr's stable. Belle of Memphis with R. Jones weighing about one hundred and fifteen (115) pounds galloped a half mile in 0:54, and as she is in light, her chances are more than fair. Everything now points to a large field composed chiefly of the following horses:

Ornament	127	Good Times	106
Bonerger	115	Marquise	100
Meadowthorpe	113	Belle of Memphis	92
Presbyterian	100	Sidonian	96
Salvable	108	Opus	94
Buckvidere	105	Performance	105
Ulysses	110	Harry Duke	108

There are other eligibles which might go to the post, yet the above mentioned are known to be in active preparation for the big race of the opening day. No sensational two-year-olds have developed as yet, and with few exceptions, they seem to be of a uniform class. Halves in 0:50 are about the best the youngsters have done up to date, although there are many as fine-looking colts as ever galloped on a track, but the trainers claim there are no more May Hempsteads here, and say that filly can gallop faster than the rest can run. Elenore Holmes worked a mile in 1:45. She belongs to Stanton & Tucker and is greatly improved in appearance. Irwin, b. g. 3, by Julian—Mattie Irwin, belonging to this firm, died of a congestive chill this week. As a two-year-old he started but three times, winning twice, and was second in the other start.

On Wednesday, a chilly, raw morning, Lieber Karl, with his weight up (122 pounds), worked a mile in 1:45, swinging. The last three quarters Timemaker was his running mate, and the Derby candidate, with his head in the air and his mouth wide open, galloped as if he could have worked in 1:42, leaving Timemaker as if he was tied to a post. He is certainly a good colt, her good will not be known until he gets to the races, but if Bannockburn or any other colt beats him for the Tennessee Derby, they will know they have had a race.

Col. W. E. Applegate and President Wm. F. Schulte, of the New Louisville Jockey Club, Harry Laudeman, and John Fry were visitors to Montgomery Park this week.

Secretary McFarland wants it positively understood that all reputable bookmakers can draw at this meeting. He does not want the sale of the betting privileges confounded with the one book or syndicate of books arrangement.

A PLAN TO PREVENT FRAUD.

Leaving at the post a well-played favorite like St. Calatine, also such excellent performers as Meadow Lark and Sutton, makes one think more safeguards should be thrown around racing. With this in view, and recollecting that there is no recall flag in use at Ingleside track, we would respectfully suggest that one of the P. C. J. C. stewards (selected because he has a good knowledge of racing and racing methods, because he knows when a boy is trying to get away from the post and when he is endeavoring to get left) be sent to the post with the starter before every race. The latter certainly has his hands full trying to get the horses away on good terms, and cannot note everything that should be noted regarding the aims of the riders at the starting point. Then too, it should be a steward that goes to the post, for the reason that stewards do not mix socially with jockeys, as a general thing, and therefore have no friends to favor and no axes to grind. That boys would try harder to get away and win if they had the eyes of a stern official ever upon them goes without saying. At the far East the plan outlined above is followed out, and the result is easy to guess. The steward could act with the judges in the stand, note whether any horses went back to any great extent in the betting, and, if so, he would carefully watch those particular horses at the post.

We would go further and suggest that another steward be placed near each quarter pole when a mile race is on and a patrol judge half-way down the homestretch. In shorter races the stewards could be placed closer together. They could have stands built at the proper elevation along the fence, be armed with glasses and be men with unimpaired hearing, so that odd remarks could be heard as well as strange actions noted. In this way fraud would be reduced to a minimum. Of course great care should be taken in the selection of the stewards, and they should be both capable and fearless. We hold that judges in a stand cannot note every suspicious move in a race, and crooked work is generally done at the point furthest from the stand. The increase outlay would be "bread cast upon the waters," a 100 per cent profit being realized in the way of heavier gate receipts secured through the feeling made general that they were always going to get a "run for the money," that the club was doing all in its power to bring about an honest endeavor to win upon the part of the horse-pilots, in whose hands are often entrusted the fortunes of many a lover of the "sport of kings."

THE CRACKS RACING ON CALIFORNIA SOIL.

The racing season is fairly well advanced now in California, and the chances are that most of the really good two-year-olds have faced the starter. It is a pleasure to state that the best of the youngsters is a native daughter of the Golden West, and that she was bred at far-famed Rancho del Paso. Reference is made to Sombre, a wee black filly by imp. Midlothian (sire of Sir Walter, Tea Rose, etc.) out of the ex queen of the American turf, Miss Woodford, by imp. Billet. Not only has she shown her heels twice in one week to the best this land by the sunset sea afforded, but both of her wins were in stake races, and in the last she carried 113 pounds and easily broke the track record for four and one-half furlongs. The next best, Magdalenas, is also a filly bred at the renowned Santa Anita rancho. She is by Emperor of Norfolk, out of Espirito Santo (sister to Wheel of Fortune, by Gano. Maul Ferguson, by Prince Royal, is a rare good one, Toluca a high classed filly, too. She is by Nomad, out of Sweet, by Hanover, and was bred by L. J. Rose, of Los Angeles. The best two-year-old colt, probably, is Lobos, by imp. Golden Garter out of Temblor, by imp. Cheviot. His half in 0:47½ was with but 98 pounds up, however, and the wind helped him along materially. El Mido and Formero perhaps follow after Lobos among the two-year-old colts. El Mido was bred at Rancho del Paso and is by Sir Modred out of Ethel (sister to Ban Fox and King Fox) by imp. King Ban. Formero is by imp. Conveth out of Formosa, by Rutherford, and was bred at E. J. Baldwin's Santa Anita farm, in Los Angeles county.

The three-year-old championship over a mile and a quarter of ground probably lies between Traverser, Morellito, Count of Flanders and Linstock, among the colts, and Briar, Sweet, Napamex and Recreation among the fillies. Of these, Traverser and Linstock were bred in Kentucky, the rest in the Golden State.

Amongst the four-year-olds and upward it is bad to pick the best over a distance of ground, but a special race at weight for age, mile and a quarter, between Geyser, Fleur de Lis, Senator Bland, Ostler Joe, Won't Dance, Scarborough, The Roman and Buck Massie would attract a large crowd and elicit very lively betting, beyond peradventure. Were Ruinart fit and well he could be added to the list of starters and make matters more interesting, but we fear that we have seen the last of Ruinart as a racer for some time to come.

LAST WEEK'S 'INVESTIGATION.'

The investigation by the C. J. C. stewards last week was neither sensational nor satisfactory to most race-goers. Several supposed to be on the list of "suspects" were not called up, and they go right on in the uneven baritone of their way. But one piece of evidence was elicited that was worth anything, and that was from a bookmaker who declared Ollie Johnson had come to him with an offer to have Eddie Jones do as he (the pencil) desired in a particular race. If the bookmaker was a man in whom the stewards could place reliance it strikes us that this was all the evidence necessary to place Messrs. Johnson and Jones under the ban forever. Apparently, the officials conducting the investigation did not place any great value upon the testimony of the bookie, or there would have been no case of "indefinite suspension." The "in" would be left out. Jockey Spencer was not even called upon, though he was present. A bookmaker supposed to have incurred the official displeasure and made wrathful all those race-goers loving fair play was also on hand, but he, too, was not questioned. Could it be that the club had made a mess of the whole affair, having not a scrap of evidence upon which to convict the suspected ones about whose heads such a hullabaloo had been raised? Or was the evidence in their hands of such a character that a host of persons connected with racing would have been damned forevermore in the eyes of decent people, and the club considered it for the best to "let it drop?" That it was one or the other there can be no question, but which surmise is correct is one of those things that no ordinary fellow can find out.

MANAGER ED TIPTON, who arrived here Monday, comes in the hope of inducing several of the California stables to race in Butte and Anaconda this year. The meeting opens up in Butte, and the twenty stakes offered aggregate $26,000. There are to be six or seven running races every day at all distances, from three furlongs and upward. "We expect 300 horses from Texas, New Orleans, California and the Middle West," said Manager Tipton Monday, "and should certainly have a most successful season. I expect to make very favorable rates between California and Butte." In reply to a question, Tipton said that the Montana associations would charge entrance money as usual, claiming that an owner can win just as much money, as the fields are naturally smaller than when no entrance fee is charged. Ed Hopper, Secretary of the Latonia club, and Colonel W. S. Barnes, the well-known breeder of Lexington, Ky., have been secured as judges for the Montana circuit, and James B. Ferguson has been retained to do the starting. The betting will be controlled by the association, as it was in 1897, and J. McAllister will again be in charge. The track at Anaconda has been made anew, and the Butte track will be especially prepared for the running brigade. Ed Tipton will consult with California owners during the week, and expects to secure a number of strings.

THE determination of J. B. Haggin to sell only a few fillies in New York this season makes one think he makes a mistake—at least, turfmen are in error when they don't purchase racers of the female persuasion. L'Alouette, a filly, won the richest American two-year-old stake of 1897, The Futurity, while out this way the best of the early comers, Buena Ventura, is a filly. Magdalenas, too, has shown ability to beat about all the colts in California, while Primavera on Saturday last beat Frank Ireland, one of the supposed crack colts. Then there is May W., good up to seven furlongs. A few days ago Sombre, a filly, beat a fine field. Briar Sweet, sister to Dr. Hasbrouck, appears able to defeat anything racing here up to a mile, while Fleur de Lis and Won't Dance can take care of almost anything from a mile up. In view of this, why should there be any prejudice against fillies?

YOUNGSTERS by several brand-new sires have made their appearance upon our tracks this season, and those by imp. Watercress, imp. Golden Garter, imp. Conveth and Nomad have shown great advantage and bid fair to outstrip the progeny of the older and more famous sires of gallopers. Sevens and Mossbrae are by Watercress, Lobos by Golden Garter, Formero by Conveth, Toluca by Nomad, and all have considerable class. The best youngster of the California racing season is Sombre, in the opinion of most persons. She is by imp. Midlothian from the famous race mare, Miss Woodford. Among the horses that have been sent to the stud this season are Magnet and Ruinart, sons of imp. St. Blaise and St. Carlo respectively; Jack Richelieu, son of imp. Great Tom; Lew Weir (sire of Satyr), by Longfellow; Wernberg, by imp. Muscovy, and Zobair, by St. Saviour. All were excellent turf performers, and as their breeding is exceptional, they should prove sires of gallopers of more than ordinary ability.

YESTERDAY at Ingleside Tod Sloan revenged himself on his San Francisco detractors, atoned for the E. Come incident and performed a really noteworthy feat of jockeyship by riding the winners of five straight races. He had no mount in the first race. But good as Sloan's performance was, it is not the record of winning mounts. That is an honor that belongs to "Monk" Overton. July 10, 1891, when he was really a jockey of high rank, Overton rode Gorman, Post Scout, Guido, Philora, Balgown and Take Notice to victory over the Washington Park track. His record of six winning mounts that day was achieved by good judgment, good placing and masterly finishing. It is still the high mark for emulation by the jockeys of this country and day. Overton did not ride in the second race that day. All of the others he won.—Daily Racing Form.

SOMBRE, the little black daughter of imp. Midlothian and Miss Woodford, again showed her heels to a lot of good youngsters Monday in the Olympic Stakes, four and a half furlongs. Not only that, but she went the distance in 0:54½, carrying 118 lbs., clipping a quarter of a second off the track record. And she did it easily, too. "Sombre doesn't weigh much over 600 lbs.," said John Mackey after the race, "but she's a runner from the ground up, the best for her inches seen in these parts for some time." The Rancho del Paso Superintendent was right. Sombre is surely the best two-year-old shown in California this season, and it's astonishing how the little black filly packs weight and wins.

GEORGE CARROLL, well known locally as a turfman and formerly a judge at Hawthorne, has the following trio in training: Leon Meyers, blk f, 3, by Montana Regent—Pike's Peak; Nellie Riley, ch f, 3, by Riley—Nellie G.; What's Is To You, ch g, 3, by Forester—Maggie Moore. This colt has shown three furlongs in 0:38½.—Daily Racing Form. It's a wonder he hasn't dropped dead, loaded down with such a name. That appellation beats Can I See You, I Don't Know, Don't Skip Me and Sweetest When Naked.

WON'T DANCE, winner of the Evergreen Stakes, is a wonderfully good mare. Over a month ago we were informed she was about as good a racer as Fleur de Lis, and when we told some friends about how she was regarded they laughed at the idea of her being as good as the daughter of Maxim and Fleurette. Now if they were to come together at weight for age in a race of about a mile and a quarter there would not be a vast difference in the prices quoted against them, that's pretty certain.

A row anent the claiming of Hermoso and Hohenzollern by S. Reagan is among the possibilities. Both horses are said to have been claimed for Billy Timmons. The judges are investigating the matter, and if the facts are proved the horses will probably be ordered returned to their respective owners and the guilty persons punished.

W. G. Los Gatos, Cal.—Will you kindly inform me through your paper of age, color and breeding of the stallion Boots? Also the age of Lady Boots. Answer—Boots was a bay horse, foaled 1878, by imp. Hercules out of Emma Barnes, by Norfolk. Lady Boots not being registered, we cannot inform you as to her age.

MARCUS DALY visited Ingleside Monday and was delighted with the appearance of the track. He was especially pleased with the win of Ostler Joe, whom he once owned.

Saddle Notes.

THERE are twelve thoroughbreds in training at the Petaluma race track.

CUBA, sister to Traverser, won at Elkton, Md., recently. She has been successful frequently of late.

A. B. SPACKELS has been quite ill for over a week. He was able to leave his residence Tuesday for the first time.

DIDO has a colt foal at the Elmwood Stock Farm. This is the eighth foal by Brutus this year, and every one is a colt.

MARCUS DALY will send about twenty-five thoroughbred yearlings to New York this fall to be sold. They will bring big prices.

H. L. FRANK has engaged Joe Piggott for the rest of the year as premier jockey for his stable. Piggott is pretty nearly a top-notch.

W. A. SIPPY's Assignee is showing as well as any horse in training at Little Rock. He has all of his old-time speed and moves as if sound.

LIGHTWEIGHT Jockey McNichols, in attempting to get through a very narrow opening, was thrown off Duke of York and had his collar bone fractured.

HENRY WEHMOFF, of Louisville, has sold his Latonia race track stock to "Col." W. E. Applegate, thus rendering the latter the principal owner of the track.

PARSON, an erratic performer on the flat last year, has been schooled over the jumps this spring and is said to be a very promising timber-topper. He is by imp. Paramatta.

PRESBYTERIAN won the Crescent City Derby by a length, driving. He was bred at Rancho del Paso, and was one of the first of imp. Prestonpan's get to appear on the American turf.

MRS. NETTIE HARRISON is said to have had $100 on her winning filly, Mocerito, which was at 15 to 1. Mocerito should never have been at such a price, in view of her previous performances.

LOUIS H. EZELL has purchased the fair, old jumper, Reno, of James J. McKinnon. Consideration private. The son of Jumbo and Sooner may be introduced to some fences in the Middle West ere long.

TOLUCA was bred by L. J. Rose of Los Angeles, and was one of a bunch of half a dozen sucklings that Chas. Kerr purchased for a song. Billy Murry gave $550 for her at the Kerr sale last November.

LADY ELLERSLIE, a chestnut three-year-old filly that won at New Orleans March 22d, is by Knight of Ellerslie out of Dan Lamasney's favorite mare, Little Minnie. Mr. Lamasney owns Lady Ellerslie.

SISTER MARY, the grand race mare of two or three years ago, will shortly foal to imp. Midlothian, sire of Sir Walter, Tea Rose and other swift ones, and will probably be mated with St. Carlo next month.

EUGENE LEIGH is said to have purchased Plaudit, the favorite in the Kentucky Derby, for $20,000. He is believed to have acted for an Eastern turfman, Phil Dwyer being mentioned as the real purchaser.

OLD STRATHMEATH, winner of the American Derby and many other rich stakes, has been presented to Milt Young, owner of McGrathiana Stud, by Green B. Morris. The grand old gelding was bred at McGrathiana.

SUTTON's entry will not be accepted at Ingleside in future. It is claimed that the horse is a sulker, but the judges decided that in view of his well-known propensity for running first or last they would race without him in future.

THE three-year-old filly, Lady of the West, is showing remarkably well in her work at Nashville. Tuesday she went a mile in 1:43, doing the quarter in 24½, the half in 50½ and six furlongs in 1:16½. Lady of the West was a very good two-year-old.

GOVERNOR BUDD appointed Adjutant-General A. W. Barrett as a member of the State Board of Agriculture, vice Richard Gird, term expired. President A. B. Spackels will have an excellent Board of Directors to help him make the State Fair of 1898 a great success.

THE thoroughbred stallion The Mallard, purchased by a prominent breeder of Hilo, H. I., from Messrs. Burns & Waterhouse a few years ago has sired a number of very choice colts and fillies. Some are two-year-olds and will be seen at the races in Honolulu July 4th.

GEYSER lowered the Ingleside track record for seven furlongs half a second Tuesday in his race against Fleur de Lis by winning in 1:26½. Billy Murry's filly Toluca equaled the half-mile record for the track in the first race by running in 0:49. Nomad is likely to prove a great sire of racers.

THE Derby starters to-day, with the probable riders, are as follows: Linstock (Tod Sloan), Borgia (Conley), Traverser (Thorpe), Recreation (Clawson), Napamax (Clayton), Morelito (Piggott), Fossovannah ("Skeets" Martin), and Tolsida. Marplot and Bitter Root are both doubtful starters.

WALLIE WEAVER claimed Satyr out of the third race Tuesday. Caesar Young also had a claim in, but Weaver finished third with Satyr and had priority. Weaver afterward offered to return him to Mr. Corrigan, but the latter told him to keep him, and at $725 "Pop" certainly got a very useful animal.

THE Overland Trotting and Running Association has decided upon George J. Common as the official poolseller for the spring meeting. He had charge of this important department during the Overland Park race meeting two years ago. There will be a number of running races given at this meeting, which will prove good drawing cards.

NOTWITHSTANDING the sale of the Fort Erie track, the Highland Park syndicate will retain its lease for five years and run off all the stakes announced. Judge John J. Carter has reconsidered his decision to remain on the Pacific Slope, and has accepted the proposition to reside at Highland Park, Fort Erie, Montreal and Windsor.—Daily Racing Form.

LIVERPOOL, March 25.—The Grand National Steeplechase, the grand event of its kind of the year, which was run at Aintree, near here to-day, was won by Drogheda. Cathal was second and Gauntlet third. Twenty-five horses ran. The betting was 25 to 1 against Drogheda, 7 to 1 against Cathal and 100 to 12 against Gauntlet. The race was for 2,500 sovereigns.

MONDAY after the second race, Sid Reagan, the owner of Lone Princess, claimed the Sir Modred colt, Hermoso, who was entered to be sold for $800, which, with the exception of Good Friend, was $300 more than any other horse in the race. Reagan was supposed to have been acting for some one else in the matter, but as Hermoso belongs to a lady the claiming came with bad grace.

H. EUGENE LEIGH has sold to General W. H. Jackson, of the Belle Meade Stud, Nashville, the following well-bred broodmares: Fannie Ellsler, by Sir Modred—La Scala (dam of Sir Walter); Ma Belle, by Charaxus—Ada Belle; Mic Mac Queen, by Midlothian—Patty, by Longfellow, and Clotho, by Kantaka—Olio, by Rayon d'Or. Fannie Ellsler is in foal to Kingston, while Ma Belle carries a foal by Tenny.

RECENT indications point to the early reinstatement by the Jockey Club of the well-known plunger, Riley Grannan. An Eastern turfman now sojourning here received a letter the other day in which the writer states the press is a unit in favor of the plunger, and also that the turf officials are beginning to look with favor on the young Kentuckian.

LADIES' DAYS at Latonia this year will be few and far between. Secretary Hopper has made up his mind to give but one or two Ladies' Days at the coming meeting of the Latonia Jockey Club. Secretary Hopper will pattern his Ladies' Days, after those of the Crescent City Jockey Club, which are very few, but a distinct feature when they are given.—Commercial Tribune.

COL. W. S. BARNES, proprietor of the Melbourne Stud, has shipped East his promising two-year-old filly, The Lady in Blue, and she is now in the stable of James Rowe. She was the highest tried filly in Kentucky last season, having won three-eighths at the Melbourne track in 35 2-5 with weight up, and has many rich engagements in the East. She is a daughter of Himyar and British Blue Blood, by Bendigo.

It is proposed to have bookmaking on the light harness races to be held at the Oakland Track by the P. C. T. H. B. Association commencing June 18th. The races will be patterned after the running races now in vogue and consist of dashes of a mile with three moneys, entrance, five per cent and five per cent for starters. The idea is a novel one and races of this kind should be very attractive and promise opportunities for plenty of betting.

W. H. MCCORKLE has the following stable at Lexington in charge of Trainer Lee Pemberton: Trimuda, b f, by Bermuda—Trianna; Plon-Plon, br f, 3, by Candelmas—Flibbertigibbet; Queen Doll, ch f, 3, by Prince Royal—Queen of Trumps; Blue Dan, b c, 3, by Daniels—Blue Bells; Blue Lick, b c, 2, by Daniels—Blue Belle; Lightning Express, br c, 2, by Order, out of Falstaff's dam; Billy House, ch c, 2, by Terra Cotta—Tagliona; Wainsborough, br f, 2, by Wagner—Wisteria; Sarah McCorkle, br f, 2, by Julien—Mattie Irwin.

THE Racing Calendar of this week contains the following list of names claimed for two-year-olds, being probably the closing list for this year: J. B. Haggins's Plumage, ch f, by Goldfinch—Miss Dunbar; Milton Young's Try Try, ch c, by Macduff—Mysterious; Robert Collier's Bob Salter, b c, by Minstrel—Queen; White & Stafford's E. B. Guthrie, ch c, by Tea Tray—Isbell; W. J. Taylor's Karabel, b f, by Kismet—Briarfoot, and Dianora, b f, by Duncombe—Eye Sweet; T. J. Brush's Lady Canewood, ch f, by Ormonde d'Or—Winning Eyes; Duke & Wishard's Doremus, b c, by Luke Blackburn—Lythe, and H. Davis, ch c, by Greenland—Callera.

MARCUS DALY is delighted with the wonderful work done by the two jockey clubs in building tracks for thoroughbred racers. Yesterday morning, in company with Ed. A. Tipton and Mr. Frye of Montana, he visited the Oakland track, and in the afternoon attended the races at Ingleside. He had nothing but praise for the way racing is conducted here. There are a number of horses bred by Mr. Daly running this winter, and they have all shown they were race horses of high calibre. He is an enthusiast on the subject of breeding and his collection of broodmares at Bitter Root Farm, Hamilton, Montana, is unequalled for quality in America.

MESSRS. CLAY & WOODFORD of Paris, Ky., have the following horses in training for this year: Duncan Bell, br g, 4, by Hindoo—Miss Used; Black Heart, b f, 4, by Hindoo—Cherry Blossom; Mariti, br f, 3, by Hindoo—Mary McGowan; Herman, ch g, 3, by Sir Dixon—Hindoo; Little Mary, ch f, 2, by Candelmas—Jaconet; Grievance, b f, 2, by Hindoo—Miss Used; Duplicate, br f, 2, by Hindoo—Miss Moore; Terrene, ch f, 2, by Terra Cotta—Duchess of Montrose; May-Be So, ch f, 2, by Hindoo—Mary B.; Factory Girl, b f, 2, by Hindoo—Morgan Hand; Kanaka, b f, 2, by Sir Dixon—Kissengen; Janie Clay, ch f, 2, by Sir Dixon—La Colons; Governor Wood, b g, 2, by Hindoo—Cherry Blossom.

THE report was current at the race track that, as a breeder, Magnet was not successful; that is, he had never shown a disposition to care to be stunted to mares, but since being placed in K. O'Grady's care his whole nature seems to have undergone a change and has shown that he is more amorous than any stallion ever handled by this well known horseman. Every mare bred to Magnet so far is believed to be in foal, and his new owner has every reason to believe that his procreative powers are far greater than those of stallions who have been placed in the stud at the early age of three years. Magnet looks well and we know that he is destined to be one of the greatest sires in America if performance, conformation breeding and an iron constitution are any criterion to be judged by.

MR. CHARLES M. REED, a prominent millionaire of Erie, Pa., spent a few days in Lexington this week. Mr. Reed is well known as an owner of many fast and high-priced trotters, but has recently taken a fancy to thoroughbreds, and has purchased at a large figure from John E. Madden the promising bay colt Hapsburg (half brother to Hambur, Strathreel and Amanda V.), 2, by imp. Candelmas—Lady Reel. Mr. Reed left for Louisville Wednesday, presumably to see his purchase. The turf celebrities Harry Reed and Ella Reed were named by Mr. Madden in honor of members of Mr. Reed's family.—The Thoroughbred Record.

"GENE" LEIGH, said to be acting for some one else, has purchased the crack colt Plaudit, $20,000 being said to be the price paid. Whom the purchase was made for has not been declared, but it has been surmised that M. F. Dwyer is the new owner. It is in line with the Dwyer policy of acquiring developed race horses through which at one time and another, he and his brother Phil became the owners of such famous horses as Rhadamanthus, Vigil, Hindoo, Miss Woodford, Luke Blackburn, Ben Brush and others known to all horse lovers. However, there are others who stand ready to pay a good, round sum for a good horse, and the passage of a few days may show that the purchaser of the Kentucky Derby favorite was some one other than the noted New York turfman.—Daily Racing Form.

A PETITION was put in circulation among the horsemen Wednesday, and all signed it. It urges the Supervisors, who meet this morning, not to restrict racing to forty-eight days per year in California, for it would not pay turfmen to bring their gallopers from the East to race such a small number of days. If the Board cuts the number of racing days down to forty-eight they will paralyze the thoroughbred breeding interests of California and ruin several gentlemen that have risked their all in the breeding enterprise. From a moral standpoint it is ridiculous to limit racing, too. If it is bad for a community to have racing, it should be stopped altogether; if it isn't, but on the contrary brings $1,600,000 into circulation in a single season of racing, it is a good thing for a city, and the longer turfmen and their employes and their charges remained in the city the more money the hotel keepers, merchants, &c, would get out of it.

J. B. HAGGIN, says the New York Telegraph, is discouraged over the poor demand for fillies, and this coming summer he will bring only a select few to the New York market to be sold. The Eastern company is cataloguing 130 head of yearlings for him, and of these 98 are colts and 32 fillies. About one hundred fillies will remain at Rancho del Paso Stud. In view of the showing made by two year-olds this season, Mr. Haggins might do well to reconsider his decision in this respect. For example, of the list of thirty-four two-year-old winners published in the Telegraph, seventeen, just one-half, are fillies. These include May Hempstead, winner of three races, and both probably the pick of the two-year-old division so far. The record of the fillies ought to encourage buyers. It would certainly do so if the associations would offer two or three purses a week exclusively for the filly class, as the Morning Telegraph has been urging them to do. Such events would fill, would make good racing and would improve the thoroughbred market.

THE latest English mail brings intelligence of the death of Orlando Charles George Bridgman, third Earl of Bradford and one of the pillars of the British turf. He was born in 1819, and had almost completed his eightieth year, when he passed away on March 9th at Weston Park, Shropshire. Lord Bradford became identified with racing about 1853, but it was not until 1879 that his colors were prominent in important events. In that year he had marked success with Chippendale, who beat Palmbearer at Liverpool, after the latter had run second to Sir Bevis for the Derby. Chippendale also won the Ascot Derby, the Hardwicke Stakes, the Great Metropolitan and the Cesarewitch. In 1879 Lord Bradford won $40,000, mostly through Chippendale, and almost duplicated that sum in 1880, with the additional assistance of Zealot, Zucchero, Retreat, Grey Hen and other noted performers of their day. In 1882 the Bradford jacket was carried conspicuously by Quicklime, who ran second to Shotover in the Derby and won the Epsom Grand Prize at the same meeting, as well as the Prince of Wales Stakes at Ascot. The Earl's winnings in that year footed up $60,000, half of which was credited to Quicklime. During the subsequent decade the Bradford stud was more noted for breeding than racing, but there was a brilliant exception as recently as 1892, when his Lordship's Sir Hugo beat the noted "charity mare," La Fleche, for the Derby. The late Earl held high office at different times, being successively Vice-Chamberlain, Lord Chamberlain, Master of the Horse and Lord Lieutenant for Shropshire. He is succeeded by his eldest son, Lord Newport.—New York Sun.

THE regular monthly meeting of the Jockey Club was held on Thursday, March 10th, and the rules of racing were amended as follows: Rule 105—To be stricken out and the following substituted therefor: "The starter shall have authority to fine or suspend a jockey for disobedience of his orders, or for attempting to take any unfair advantage, but the suspension of a jockey shall not take effect until after the last race of the day of his suspension, and the stewards only may modify or remit penalties imposed by the starter. The starter shall not impose any fine exceeding $200 for any offense, nor suspend beyond the last day of the meeting, and he shall report all fines and suspensions to the clerk of the scales in writing." A meeting of the stewards of the Jockey Club was also held in the afternoon. There was present August Belmont, J. H. Bradford, James Galway, F. R. Hitchcock, James R. Keene and Andrew Miller. S. S. Howland was appointed steward to represent the Jockey Club at the Washington Jockey Club Spring meeting, to begin Easter Monday, April 11th. The following officials, appointed for the meeting, were approved: Stewards, Jesse Brown and Samuel Ross; Starter, Matt Byrnes; Judge, C. McDowell; Handicapper, W. S. Vosburgh; Clerk of the Scales, H. G. Crickmore; Paddock and Patrol Judge, J. L. Hall. The following applications for licenses were granted: Jockeys—Charles A. Ballard, John Coyle, Samuel J. Doggett, J. H. Hewitt, Harry Hewitt, Anthony Hamilton, Philip Neville, John P. Neumeier, J. Willard Peck, J. Covey Thompson and F. Littlefield. Trainers—John Allen, John E. Cook, Lewis Elmore, Edward Feakes, James J. Haggerty, A. D. Hampton, James Hogan, William Jennings, William Lakeland, Eugene Landsberg, George W. Meehan, George T. Taylor and J. J. Sheridan.

Equestrianism Reviving.

The growing interest in equestrianism throughout the United States is the principal topic among progressive horsemen everywhere. During the past year riding clubs have increased in number and size in all the large cities, and the demand for good horses suitable for riding has raised their prices considerably. Some people attribute the growth of horse back riding to the decadence of the bicycle as a fashionable means of going from place to place, and, no doubt, this claim is not without some foundation, but the growth of polo clubs among the wealthy young men, the introduction of outdoor sports, such as fox hunting and paperchasing, as well as the adoption of the best English methods of riding have had much more to do with it. Added to this is the endorsement of our leading physicians, who are unanimous in approving this method of outdoor exercise in preference to all others.

The makers of riding suits and riding habits have their shops filled to overflowing with customers, and the demand for saddles patterned after the English make is unprecedented in the history of saddle making. Handlers of saddle horses find their time well occupied and a quiet investigation for the very best seems to be carried on by those who are seeking to satisfy their patrons.

Horseback riding has been indulged in, either for necessity or pleasure, ever since the world began. Statues of horses and horsemen, and bas reliefs depicting scenes of peace and war, have been unearthed in ancient cities where they have been buried thousands of years, so it seems that amid all the changes of time horses have been in daily use as beasts of burden.

The pleasures of the chase in times of peace were not forgotten when the demands of war forced men to leave their homes, and the best horse was not considered too good to use in the invasion of neighboring countries or keep others for invading their lands. To this recourse to the use of horses can be attributed the love of riding, which comes almost as a heritage to the human race.

Since the day when Cortez landed in America with his band of horses from Spain and by them laid the foundation for the horse of America, horseback riding has been indulged in by the Indians as well as the settlers who came from Europe. When the vast valleys and mountain ranges of California were first visited by the Spanish padres and their followers, band of wild horses roamed in countless numbers; a few were captured and subjected to the uses of those who were engaged in pastoral pursuits. The hardy pioneers who braved the terrors of the plains on their way to California, rode horses which were related to either the hardy Morgan horses of New England or thoroughbreds that traced to ancestors that were noted money winners on the race tracks of the East. Many of these gold seekers could tell thrilling tales of the superiority of their horses when followed by the wily Indians who infested the plains. Their sons and daughters have listened to their hairbreadth escapes and the seeds of love for a good horse were thus planted in their minds which is sure to yield a bountiful harvest of good wishes for the noble equine. This younger generation is beginning to take the active interest we have always hoped they would in horseback riding, and the desire to enjoy the pleasures of this health-giving and health-preserving exercise is growing stronger every day.

In Golden Gate Park it is no unusual thing to see parties of twenty or thirty young gentlemen and ladies riding along the smooth roads, and where, a few years ago, it was seldom that more than three or four could be seen riding along the bridle paths, sometimes as many as eighty may be frequently met at this time.

There are several riding clubs here, the largest being the San Francisco Riding Club, its membership of 130 includes many of our wealthiest and most prominent society leaders. The headquarters of this club is a magnificent brick edifice on Pacific avenue, and every month exhibitions of equestrianism are given, which attract large audiences.

Horseback riding is becoming the "fad," and with so many prominent people to take a deep interest in it, it is not beyond the bounds of reason to expect that in 1900 there will be five times as many interested in this pastime. We have the horses, the roads, the climate, and enthusiastic horsemen and horsewomen, and nothing can stop its growth and popularity, now that it has received such an impetus.

Horse Show at Sebastopol.

The centre of attraction in Sebastopol last Saturday was the horse show. The country folk and visitors from neighboring towns were quite in evidence, but did not form such a surging mass of humanity as the aristocrats who flocked to the New York and San Francisco equine exhibits not long since. Nevertheless, it required no strain of the optics to note quite an increase in the ordinary moving throng. Those who were here had no occasion to regret their visit, for they saw as fine a string of horses as were ever bridled. There were horses that had circled the oval in less than 2:20, some that had passed the grand stand at a 2:10 gait, Clydesdales, runners and a donkey.

One of the first horses to arrive was Clay S., owned by H. Schlusser of San Rafael. This animal is seven years old and last year he reeled off a mile in 2:17½ in the fifth heat of a race at Chico.

Ed. Wilkes, owned by O. A. Kenyon of Petaluma, credited with 2:18, was one of the stars.

Lynwood Wilkes, the property of Geo. Campion of Santa Rosa, record 2:20½, loomed up among the best.

Illustrious, the pretty little bay, with 2:30 opposite his name on the record book, owned by Geo. A. Stone of Santa Rosa, was on exhibition.

Romeo, handsome, game and fast, but without record, J. H. Smith owner, was admired by all.

Klondike, Al Stahl's bay pacer of Santa Rosa, credited with 2:20, made a splendid appearance.

Charlie, a bay horse from Occidental, owned by John Bones, came in a little late, but was noticed by many.

The last of the string of trotters was a horse who has made many a man glad that bet on him and an equal number sorry that bet against him; an animal that has, in days gone by, brought cheer after cheer from the grand stand as he gamely led the fleetest horses of those times over the goal. This famous trotter is Silas Skinner, now owned by Grace Bros. of Santa Rosa. Skinner is now a back number among the light harness horses, but in his prime he traveled in the dust of none. As he passed up Main street, Saturday, few people recognized him, although many of those who stood by had once admired him for his speed and beauty. He is now stiff and unable to travel fast, but he is still as game as when a colt. Skinner's record is 2:17, having been made at a time when 2:20 was considered more than extraordinary.

Only one running horse was here. His name is Zebair, owned by O. A. Kenyon of Petaluma. He has a record of 2:06 for a mile and a quarter, only one second below that of the famous runners, Morelio and Salvator.

The Clydesdales exhibited were Duke, owned by Wm. Beach of Santa Rosa, weight 1,800 pounds; Chief, owned by H. Ludolf of Peachland, weight 1,607 pounds; Benjamin Franklin, owned by J. H. Brackett of Santa Rosa, weight 1,750 pounds. Ben, a carriage horse owned by Robt. Crane of Santa Rosa was also among those that were admired. Dexter, a donkey, the property of Barney & Beach of Santa Rosa, attracted more attention than all the thoroughbreds.

While the parade was in progress Dave Seely appeared on the street with his sorrel Daly and set a swift pace up and down the main thoroughfare of town.

In the afternoon there was some fast trotting on Main street by Lynwood Wilkes, Romeo, Illustrious, Ed Wilkes and others. The show closed very satisfactorily.—Times.

STERLING, N.E.B., Jan 28, 1897.

Mr. Young—Dear Sir:—Please find enclosed draft of $2.00 for which please send me one bottle of ABSORBINE. This makes the 13th bottle I think I have used and find merit in each.

J. M. RICE.

Honolulu Race Track Items.

Over thirty horses are in training at the Kapiolani Park stables for the coming races, and half a dozen more that will be entered are kept in private stables.

There are more horses and better horses than ever before. The "unknowns" are so many that even the old horsemen will find it impossible to pick the winners.

Full arrangements for the meeting have about been completed, but the entries in the various events will not be announced until a day or two before the meetings. The judges appointed are Captain Tripp, Captain Clunie and Theo. H. Hoffman, all men in whom the horsemen and public alike have the utmost confidence. Of course C. B. Wilson will act as starter.

The event of the day will probably be the 3:00 minute pacing and trotting race. So far as is known six horses, all new to patrons of the track here, will be entered for the race. They are Jim Quinn's "Violin" ("2:30 Girl"), Decker's grey mare, McCandless' "Irish Lassie," Cunningham's bay mare, Dave David's grey mare and an "unknown." None of these horses have records, but in all trial heats some of them have shown great speed. The prediction is made that the winner will have to go the mile in close to 2:20.

Great interest is evinced in the free for all trotting and pacing race (best three in five) in which the only probable entries will be Creole, who holds the Island record at 2:20½, but who has done the mile in 2:15½, and Our Boy. Billy Cunningham's new horse, which has a record of 2:12½. Considerable money will undoubtedly change hands on this event. Although Our Boy has the best time record, he has scarcely been in the country long enough to be acclimated.

In the 2:30 trot and pace the entries will probably be such well-known horses as Directress, Watermelon Joe and Ralph, and two strangers, one of them a black mare recently imported by J. McDonald.

Plenty of sport is promised in the running events. The three-eighths mile race for Hawaiian-bred horses will be contested by seven or eight horses from Shuman's, Decker's and the Gay stables. They are most of them new animals, although Magnet may be started. In the half mile dash Magnet and Sympathetic's Lass will surely be entered, with two new ones from Decker's stables, and probably some others. Colonel Cornwell has some fine animals which he may put in, but he is non committal on the subject at present. He usually has something up his sleeve. The same horses will go into the three fourths mile dash. The mile dash will include some of the same horses and some new comers.

An interesting number on the program will be the gentleman's driving race, the first that has been held here in years. At least six entries are expected for the event, and great interest will be taken in it.

If these races are successful meetings will be arranged for May 1st, June 11th and July 4th. The gentlemen who have arranged the coming meeting have already expended on the track $1,000, raised by popular subscription.

Fresno Track to be Farmed.

The Fresno fair grounds will not be opened this season if the owner, William Helm, adheres to his present determination not to lease the property. For some weeks the owners of trotting and running horses have urged that the race track be opened, but the owner refused to permit this, giving as his reason that unless he could sell the property he desired to farm the land. The horsemen endeavored to prevail upon him to change his mind, but were not successful yeste day. Mr. Helm was interviewed, and he said:

"Yes, it is true that I have closed the fair grounds. Leasing the property was so unsatisfactory that I concluded to farm the land. The track will not be opened again while it is in my possession.

"The fair ground contain 100 acres, and while I am willing to sell the property it cannot be secured by any other means. The city or county or some private company may conclude to buy the place, but if not I will utilize it for agricultural purposes. If I make a fortune before the place is sold I will present it to the city for a park."

The horsemen have given up all hope of securing the race track and they will be compelled to go elsewhere to train their promising animals. About twenty-five trotting and running horses are being trained by Fresno men, and if these animals are taken away from the county it will mean the loss of at least $500 a month in trade for this city.—Fresno Expositor.

Hints on Horse Management.

A horse may have a bad habit of carrying its tail on one side. This defect may be easily remedied by a slight surgical operation which divides the muscles on the inner side of the curve of the tail, and tying it over toward the opposite side until it begins to heal. Divide only the superficial muscles. To thicken the mane or tail, common kerosene oil thoroughly rubbed into the roots once a week will do it. In rare cases when animals have a sensitive skin it acts like a blister and takes the hair off, being too strong. In cases of this kind it is better to mix it with equal parts of sweet oil, or to substitute mercurial ointment, which is also an excellent remedy. The mane and tail should be thoroughly washed with castile soap and warm water once a week.

To prevent rubbing the mane and tail wash with warm soap-suds and apply a lotion composed of a fluid ounce of sulphuric acid in a quart of water with a sponge two or three times a day. Take notice if this trouble is caused by hen lice. To turn the mane on either side, wet and brush it daily, followed by weighting it with sheet lead to hold it in place. A few weeks will effect the change. To prevent horses from chewing the bridle mix bitter aloes in a solution of gum arabic. Rub it on the part of the bridle that the horse is in the habit of chewing and it will stop the trouble.

Some horses will always be tender in the mouth. The corroding of an iron bit in the mouth of a thin-skinned animal will sometimes produce canker. The headstall too tightly buckled sometimes will cause tenderness and sore mouth. The tight check-rein is another source of trouble. Be sure and have both rein and bridle of proper length. Keep the bit silver-plated or covered with a firm piece of calf skin, with the seam on the lower side of the bit. A rubber covered bit will often relieve the trouble. A lotion of an ounce of tannic acid in a pint of water, applied daily, will often produce a cure and toughen the skin. Never put an ice-cold bit in a horse's mouth. Always warm it first. It is not only cruel but injurious.

No treatment of harness galls will be successful without cleanliness and attention to both the animal and the harness; too small or too large neck gear is one of the principal causes. The wound will not heal while the harness presses it. Use the following wash: Sugar of lead, one ounce; sulphate of zinc, one ounce; alcohol, six fluid ounces; water, one quart. Mix well and apply with a sponge three or four times a day. If it is an old case which has hardened the horse will have to rest and the hardened place be blistered. Saddle galls which have become hardened had better be cut out with a knife and healed by the same treatment as given for wounds.

How to Make Harness Wear Well.

The first thing to be done is to unbuckle every strap, and remove all adjustable pieces of the mountings. Then with a good stiff brush remove all surface dirt, and where there are accumulations that the brush will not touch, scrape off with a round edge scraper, and then brush thoroughly, being particular to remove the dirt from among the stitches, and around buckles, etc. When thoroughly cleaned with the brush, wash all plain leather straps thoroughly in tepid water, well charged with some good harness soap; then rinse in cold water, wipe off with chamois, and hang up each strap for a few minutes to become surface dry; then lay out each strap upon a board, and apply a liberal coating of neatfoot oil, and after all the straps are oiled, apply a coat of beef tallow, warmed soft enough to be laid on with a brush stretch out all straps upon a board and allow them to remain until thoroughly dry—twenty-four hours won't be too long a time.

Do not allow the straps to remain in the water any longer than is absolutely necessary to wash them, as the soaking will injure the stitching, and will open the edges when the leather has been doubled. It is not necessary to put the leather in the water until the washing begins; then wash one strap and dry it, as has been directed, before beginning another. Patent and enameled leather should not be put into the water; these leathers, having but little oil in them, must be rubbed well with a moist cloth, or brushed with a soft brush, kept wet in tepid water. Immediately after brushing, rub the leather perfectly dry with a piece of chamois, and hang up to dry out the moisture from places where it cannot be reached by the chamois. When thoroughly dry, rub the leather with an old chamois and a small quantity of linseed oil, and rub thoroughly with an old silk rag.

After the water has dried out from harness leather, remove as much of the tallow as possible from the surface with a round edge scraper; then brush with a good, stiff bristle brush, and finally clean with an old rag, rubbing until the straps can be handled without greasing the hands. If red spots on the surface are developed, or if the edges have a rusty appearance, touch up with vinegar black; allow it to dry, and then rub with a silk rag until a good soft finish is secured. Clean all mountings thoroughly with some good preparation, of which there are a number in the market. Before buckling up the straps, apply by the means of a spring-bottom oil can, a little castor oil around buckle bars, rings, etc., where wrapped with leather, and on the bolt and bases of mountings. A very little oil applied at these points will prevent rust, and keep the leather from becoming hard.

Of course, if stitches are broken, or repairs of any kind are to be made, it is necessary to turn the harness over to the harness-maker, as no man but one skilled in the business should undertake repairs.

Ketcham on Thoroughbreds and Arabs.

To an interviewer at Columbus, O., George H. Ketcham, Toledo, O., recently said: "I do not, nor have I ever decried the runner. We must have a foundation upon which to build. This hotel had to have its foundation or else it would never have been erected. From this basis we inter-weaved until to-day we have a better article than the original; a performer with ample lung power, pure gaited, and with the speed and requisite stamina. Now then, as we progress scientifically, so does speed and endurance in a proportionate ratio. You will agree with me that the heats of to-day eclipse those of a decade ago, also that the farther they go, the better they are, so, you see, we are progressing and not standing still and the two minute trotter is not here yet—but he is coming and will be here if we only have the patience of wait."

The writer then interposed, saying: "I notice, Mr. Ketcham, that one of the writers who saw fit to oppose your theory, rather inclined towards the Arabian as the only true type from which to breed. What is your opinion?"

"Why, my dear sir," replied he, "what on earth has the Arabian ever accomplished for the turf? Take the World's Fair string or the pair General Grant was presented with. What did they have outside of a list of antecedents, forefathers, pedigrees—if you wish to be so kind, longer than a Thanksgiving day menu. Do you find any bottom there? If the Arabian is so high-classed, why does Russia persist in purchasing American bred horses? The Russians purchase more horses than any other nationality and they know a good horse when they see one. Look at the Russian Orloff. Ever see a finer type of horse in the world than a full bred Orloff? But—and here's the rub—they lack the very thing they are most in need of, viz., stamina. This the American has mastered and Russia wants the best."

From a Prominent Manufacturer.

Mr. N. B. Wheeler, a prominent manufacturer at Cresco, Ia., writes March 8th as follows: "Enclosed find money order for one package of Quinn's Ointment. I sent three years ago for some and will say I think it has no equal for curbs, splints, bunches, etc., on horses." This is the general verdict of the masses who use Quinn's Ointment. For curbs splints, spavins, windpuffs and all blemishes try it. Regular size $1.50. If you cannot obtain it at your druggist, address W. B. Eddy & Co., Whitehall, N. Y. For sale in San Francisco by Messrs. J. A. McKerron and J. O'Kane.

THE Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern line, with its daily service of through Pullman and Tourist Sleeping Cars, to all Eastern points, and all meals served "a la carte" in dining cars, offers "comforts in travel" nowhere reached in a higher degree of perfection. Passengers leaving San Francisco on the 6 P. M. train arrive in Chicago in 3½ days, and avoid the necessity of changing cars en route. For tickets and sleeping car reservations call on or address R. R. Ritchie, General Agent, No. 2 New Montgomery street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco, Cal.

MR. KILLIP & Co. will sell about seventy-five head of highly-bred roadsters at their salesyard, Tuesday, April 12th. Catalogues will soon be ready for distribution. Many excellent road horses and double teams will be sold. Do not forget the date, Tuesday, April 12th.

GRACE (dam of Creole, 2:15), by Buccaneer, has been bred to Diablo, 2:09½. Geo. H. Fox, her owner, would like to get another colt as good as the phenomenal Dahdalion.

Our New York Letter.

NEW YORK, March 26, 1898

"Matt" Sharpe, the well-known ring announcer, died on the 19th at Baltimore, of consumption. A fund was taken up by the horsemen to defray the expenses of his burial.

Running horses in partnership is being brought to the attention of stewards, and a change is advocated by a great many members of the Jockey Club, urging that horses shall run under the name of a member of the firm and not as a partnership entry.

The question of using the starting gate on the Eastern tracks is exciting considerable interest. The Washington Jockey Club has virtually decided to return to the flag, but the gate is certainly popular and it would appear as if it had come to stay. The Coney Island Jockey Club will probably continue its use.

Tod Sloan's work at Ingleside last Monday should restore him to the confidence of those who have written some unkind criticisms of late.

The failure of Mr. Keene's horse Voter to get even place at Lincoln was a great surprise here. His manners while in this country were of the best, and it is thought by many he was badly handled. Quite a large amount was cabled London from this city to be placed on him.

The Philadelphia Horse Show is announced for May 24th to 29th.

A half mile track is to be located at Juneau, Alaska.

The famous Narragansett Park at Providence, R. I., will be reopened in grand style for the season of 1898.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature at Albany making it a misdemeanor to knowingly drive a horse in a class that he is ineligible for or under an assumed name. The penalty is a fine of $500 to $1,500 and imprisonment for not more than one year.

I recognized the genial face of Mr. Samuel Gamble at the recent horse sales at Madison Square Garden.

At the sale Thursday evening, Alcantara was sold for $600. He goes to Virginia.

A driving club has been organized at Toledo, Ohio, and will give trotting races during the summer.

Washington Horse Show, May 4-7th.

It is said if a price can be agreed upon, Onoqua, 2:08½, will go to Austria.

Monette, 2:14½, recently beat Muta Wilkes, 2:11, in Russia. Such things have happened since John Goldsmith died.

Hopkins Theater, at Chicago, was robbed on Monday night. Two safes were blown open; diamonds and $200 were taken.

"Ten Nights in a Drug Store" is taking the place of "Ten Nights in a Bar-room" in some of the prohibition towns over East.

The season in this city for the theaters has been, as a rule, a profitable one. Most of the plays have been rather light. Samuel Jacks is running the Jonah (formerly Hermans) and gives probably the "raciest" show in town. He presents a wonderful combination of homely faces and attractive figures.

The latest song announced is entitled, "I Know He Loves Me Deeply for He Beats Me Every Day."

"Monte Carlo was produced at the Herald Square Theater, Monday evening, and will require a deal of casting before it can be called a success.

Mme. Modjeska appeared at the Fifth Avenue Theater as Lady Macbeth. Her audiences, both in size and appreciation, must convince her that New York does not want Shakespeare. Modjeska, is no doubt, the very best Lady Macbeth in the world.

At the Garrick, "The Little Minister" was given its 200th representation.

Miss Florence St. John, the noted light opera prima donna, is dying of consumption in London.

The bill recently introduced in the Legislature at Albany, prohibiting theater managers from selling "standing room," is very likely to become a law. It makes selling more tickets than there are seats in a place of amusement a misdemeanor.

Anna Held is probably at this writing in your city. Her inviting shoulders are certainly attractive if not viewed with a strong opera glass.

Charmion still continues to undress at Koster & Bial's.

Henry E. Dixey's Company have stranded at Baltimore. "Unfaithful" was produced at the Irving Place Theater Tuesday evening.

The vilest play ever presented in this city. "The Conquerors," beside it, would be a Sunday-school hymn. In one scene the Countess asks of Ricciardi: "Why don't you lead me astray?" No properly educated young lady would take her grandmother to see it.

All the creditors of the Abbey, Schoeffel & Grau Opera Company have been paid in full.

Frank J. Gould has bought at the Kansas City bench show three of the finest St. Bernards in the world. They are the famous Le Prince, which cost the youngest Gould $12,000, and La Queen and Santa Monica, $4,000 each or $20,000 altogether. This is the highest price ever paid for three dogs in this country.

In a six-round glove fight at Trenton, N. J., on Monday last, Harry Brown was killed by Jack Smith. The blow dislocated the jaw and drove the joint where it is attached to the head through the base of the skull.

IMPORTANT SALE of 50 Head High bred Roadsters—Mares and geldings—from 3 to 5 years old, thoroughly broken, by the following well-known sires: DEXTER PRINCE, CUPID, DEXTERWOOD, WHIPS, AZMOOR, TRUMAN, etc. Among these are a number of well-matched teams, very handsome and speedy. These horses were the property of DAN MCCARTY, and are in prime condition, thoroughly seasoned for road work. We will also sell 20 Head of first-class Team and Work Horses, from 1,600 to 1,800 pounds, young animals, thoroughly broken and well matched. Horses will be at the yard FRIDAY, April 8th.

KILLIP & CO., Auctioneers, 11 Montgomery Street.

Sulky Notes.

MOLLIE H., by Bay Rose, 2:20½, out of Lucie Collier 2:15½, has been bred to Dictatus, 2:21.

F. W. COVEY, Superintendent of the Palo Alto Stock Farm, arrived from New York last Monday.

A MARE by Chas. Derby, 2:20, out of the dam of W. Wood 2:07, has been sent to Oakland to be bred to McKinney 2:11½.

LOU CHILDS is driving Stanwix, 2:22½, and the green trotter Greyling, full brother to Caryle Carne, 2:11½, at Spokane.

ATHANIO, 2:10, and Bismarck, 2:13½, are showing fast in their work at Vienna, in preparation for the European spring meetings.

SEARCHLIGHT 2:09½, won more races than any pacing horse in 1897, ten in all, and he is a better and faster horse than ever.

THE brown stallion McZeus, by McKinney—Grace Kaiser, that was fired in front last season, is being jogged. He is owned in Richmond, Va.

MILO KNOX, of Haywards, accompanied Monroe Salisbury in his trip to the Klondike. Mr. Knox was at one time the owner of Jummye, 2:27½.

IN Marcus Daly's racing stable, that will go East this season, will be Baronade, by Baron Wilkes, out of Lemonade, the dam of Bessie Wilton, 2:09½.

THE Golden Gate Driving Club intend to hold a great meeting at the Ingleside race track Decoration Day. Further particulars will appear hereafter.

SECRETARY ED. A. TIPTON has great faith in the progeny of Prodigal, a horse that had five enter the list in 1897; the fastest was 2:10½, the slowest 2:20.

CHEHALIS is not credited with the two-mile pacing record of the world, in the new year book, though he knocked 3½ second off the record over an association track.

JOHN DELANEY, of this city, has sent Capt. Hackett (son of Steinway, 2:25½) to Jas. Sullivan, Willows. Frank J. Brandon, of San Jose, had this horse all winter.

H. DUTARD, the well-known commission merchant of this city, recently purchased that game trotting gelding, Chris Peterson, 2:13½, to match one equally as good.

J. M. STUDEBAKER, the famous carriage and wagon manufacturer of South Bend, Indiana, arrived in this city on Monday. He reports a revival of interest in the West.

DON'T say advertising don't pay just because you tried it one day and got no returns. It's a strong and clever man who can drive in a nail with one blow.—Mansfield (O) News.

THORN, 2:14, will be in W. H. Brown's stable this season. She will be a stable companion of the fast Allerton stallion, Altoka, 2:13½. Both will go down through the Grand Circuit.

THE McKinney filly out of Stemwinder, 2:30½ (dam of Directum, 2:05½), is as black as coal. She is not large, but a more perfectly-made one would be hard to find in any country.

HIJO DEL DIABLO, 2:13½, by Diablo, 2:09½, is being trained at the Alameda race track. J. M. Nelson is working this promising pacer and preparing him for the races this year.

THE bay gelding Palon, by Palo Alto, who came out green last year and scored a record of 2:18½, was retired early through shoulder lameness, but is expected to be a very good horse this year.

MOREA, 2:23½, by Electioneer, foaled a chestnut filly by Cresceus, 2:11½, at the Ketcham Farm, Toledo, O., a few days ago. The youngster is the first foal sired by the great son of Robert McGregor.

P. QUINN, of Fortuna, Humboldt County, has started overland with a string of seven trotters and pacers to the Santa Rosa race track. These are by Iris, Poscora Hayward and Wayland W., 2:12½.

THE great pacing gelding Our Dick 2:10½, has been sent to Honolulu to join the pacing brigade there. It is remarkable how many pacers have been purchased by our far-away neighbors during the past three years.

JOHN PHIPPEN has a splendid string of young trotters and pacers at the San Jose race track. He is one of the most careful colt handlers in California and will be "right in it" when the trotting horse meetings commence.

HARRY AGNEW is about to send about twenty choice trotters and pacers to Honolulu, H. I., and it would not surprise us if he returned to live on that far-away isle of the sea on which he resided for almost twenty-five years.

THE Rancho del Paso mare, Alice Brown, by Hambletonian 725, out of Alice Daniels (dam of Jackson Temple 11042), by George M. Patchen, Jr. 31, is the dam of Brown Albert, 2:22½, and Shakespeare, 2:23½, both new performers in 1897.

THE horsemen who are advertising their stallions in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN report an increase in the demand for the services of their horses. Owners of broodmares are awakening to the fact that the demand for good horses four years hence will make prices exceedingly high.

THERE is a Diablo filly, out of Grindelia, by Gen. Benton, in Sam Keating's string that is one of the best at pleasanton.

MATT DWYER, formerly of Palo Alto, but now of New York, has telegraphed Geo. F. Beckers, of Sacramento, asking the price of Zombro, 2:11. Mr. Dwyer at one time handled a number of horses at the Fresno track.

BRIARHILL, 2:18½, the handsome son of Billy Thornhill, will make the season of 1898 at Napa and Petaluma. He has sired some of the finest colts and fillies seen in Sonoma county.

THE story is published in many of the Eastern turf journals that C. Griffiths, who was with Monroe Salisbury last season, will bring a string of fast trotters and pacers over the mountains again this year. This is untrue. Mr. Griffith's horses will be seen on the California Circuit.

KELLY, 2:27, full brother to Expressive, 2:12½, by Electioneer, out of Esther, by Express, is at Belgravia Farm, Mt. Jackson, Va. He will soon be trained at Harrisonburg, Pa., by O. A. Trowbridge, for the campaign of 1898. It is thought that he will beat his record by a number of seconds.

THE Alameda Driving Association met last Saturday and elected the following officers for the ensuing year: John Thoms, President; Charles S. Neal, Vice-President; A. O. Gott, Secretary; L. L. Borden, Treasurer. These, with Dr. Bull and J. M. Nelson, constitute the Executive Committee.

FAUSTINO, 2:12½, is being credited with a pacing record of 2:14½, but the truth of the matter is that the horse never paced a step in his life. Efforts were made by his trainers when he was a colt to make him pace, but he successfully resisted their designs to convert his natural gait.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

H. H. HELMAN, lessee of the Hollister race track, started in this week to work his horses for the Breeders' meeting which will be held at Oakland from June 18th to July 15th. He will have in his string Alta Rio, full brother to Chehalis and Del Norte, Uncle Johnny, 2:19½; Ned Thorne, 2:25; and two very promising three-year-olds.

J. MALCOLM FORBES' colt Nico, 2:17½, by Arion, 2:07½, is reported to have stepped an eighth at a rate away below the 2:00 line at Lexington last fall. He did it at the last end of a half which was trotted in 1:03. If the Ponkapog colt holds anything like the form shown at Lexington, Cresceus will have some competition for four-year-old honors this year.

JOHN F. BOYD, proprietor of the Oakwood Park Stock Farm, has leased the game trotting stallion Jas. Madison, 2:17½ from R. E. deB. Lopez of Pleasanton. Jas. Madison is one of the largest trotting horses in California and his progeny is noted for size, speed, pure gait and quality. He will be valuable to cross on some of the good mares at this celebrated farm.

A. J. FEEK, the well-known horseman of Syracuse, N. Y., will sail for Europe next Wednesday with a string of horses which he will work on the English tracks. All of them have enviable records. In the string is the trotter Raven's Wings, 2:25½, which Mr. Feek recently purchased. He expects to play the trotting game for a time and eventually to dispose of the string across the water.

OFFICIAL FIGURES show that in twenty counties in Illinois only about one-third as many foals were dropped in 1896 as there were in 1892, and this may be taken as a fair criterion for the whole country. That there will be a great scarcity and correspondingly improved prices for horses maturing in 1899, 1900 and for several years thereafter is as sure as that there is a commercial law of supply and demand.

AT the late Kellogg sale, at Madison Square Garden, W. R. Janvier bought from W. T. Radir, proprietor of Prospect Stock Ranch Co., Portland, Ore., the 15:2½ hand two-year-old brown filly by Sable Wilkes, out of the great mare Annie G., that sold for $2,500 at the same sale. The filly has shown quarters in 34½ seconds. She has been sent to Silver Spring Stock Farm, Ticonderoga, N. Y., to be bred to Potential.

JAS SUTHERLAND, of Pleasanton, is noted as one of the best colt handlers in California. He has a number of young trotters by Direct, 2:05½, but the best is by Kate Chapman, by Naubuc. This filly is bred like Directly, 2:07½, but beyond the dam he is much better bred, tracing to the Bassford mare. Mr. Sutherland refused an offer of $600 for this filly. She belongs to R. E. deB. Lopez, of the Merriwa Stock Farm.

EVERYTHING looks favorable for race meetings being held in Vancouver and Victoria, B. C., Tacoma, North Yakima, Spokane and Walla Walla, Wash., Pendleton, La Grande, Baker City, Ore., Boise, Idaho, and more than likely Portland, Ore. Should this circuit be completed it would draw a great many horses from California and Montana, and we would have the greatest racing carnival this country has ever seen.

LEADING horsemen of Michigan and Indiana have formed the Michigan and Indiana trotting and pacing circuit. Fifteen meetings will be given this year, the circuit to close in October. The dates already given out are: Port Huron, June 14 to 16; Flint, June 21 to 24; Jackson, June 28 to July 1; Battle Creek, July 4 to 7; Charlotte, July 12 to 15; Elkhart, Ind., July 19 to 22; Sturgis, July 26 to 29; Grand Rapids, Aug. 2 to 5; Jackson, Aug. 9 to 12; Port Huron, Aug. 16 to 19; Alpena, Aug. 23 to 26; Bay City, Aug. 30 to Sept. 2.

FOLLOWING is the programme of the race meeting to be held at Pleasanton, April 30th. The leading citizens of the town and surrounding district have united in an effort to make it a success. Verona Stake—Trotting, two in three, purse $250; Ruby Hill Stake—Pacing, two in three, purse $250; Pleasanton Mercantile Stake—Harness road race, open to horses that have not beaten three minutes in a contest, purse $100; Pleasanton Hop Company—Running, three-quarter-mile dash, purse, $200; Merriwa Stock Farm Stake—Running, one-mile dash, purse $200.

C. L. CHASE, Proprietor of Grand View Stock Farm, Gilmanton, N. H., has sent his young horse, Directum Star, to Johnny Marston, who is located at the Pittsfield, N. H. track. Directum Star is by Directum, 2:05½, out of Lynde (dam of Silkwood, 2:16, and Judge G., 2:21½), by Lynwood.

"WHERE the average amateur makes a mistake when he undertakes to step a trotter along the road," said an old reinsman, "is in getting the idea in his head that the driver must do the most of the work. When you want your horse to speed let him know what you want and then sit still and watch him carefully but let him do the work. The chances are that you will only confuse and hinder him if you try to help him."

FRANK FRAZIER was down to Portland, Or., from Pendleton this week, and in a conversation with him regarding Chehalis, Mr. Frazier said that you can say "that Chehalis is a better horse to-day than he ever was before in his life. He can pace a two-minute gait over a cow trail hitched to a heavy cart. I intend to take him East this year, and will match him against any horse living, 3 in 5, over a half mile track, if they will give me the pole each heat. Neither Joe Patchen or Star Pointer are barred in this challenge."

A NUMBER of very fine colts and fillies by that grandly formed son of Junio, 2:22, Gilpatrick, 2:19½, are to be seen in Monterey. Every owner claims he has the best trotter in the country and regrets sincerely that this horse was ever sent out of this State. Andy McDowell claimed he was the best-gaited and speediest trotter he ever sat behind for the work he had, and drove him in 2:15½ with only three weeks' work over the Pleasanton track. Gilpatrick's sire is the sire of Athanio, 2:10, the most promising trotter in Europe.

A CORRESPONDENT at Winnebago, Wis., who campaigns a few horses every year, suggests that associations can do horsemen generally a substantial favor by providing consolation purses for non-winners. This matter is one that has been given a great deal of thought by many track managers and was tried quite extensively prior to 1894, since which time it has been allowed to drift into disuse. The suggestion is offered for consideration by the gentleman referred to and secretaries in arranging their programmes may find it convenient to do something for the non-winner. We know of one secretary who tried the plan on an extensive scale and declared afterward that he would never give it another trial as it carried his programme out to an unbearable length and served no good purpose that he could discern. At the same time there may be some merit in it, perhaps a great deal, and it may be worth trying again.—Horse Review.

ONE of the largest and best sporting matches ever made between owners of harness horses was arranged in New York March 25th. The principals are E. R. Bowne and James A. Murphy, and the stakes are $10,000 a side, play or pay, for the best two in three races, between the crack pacers John R. Gentry (2:00½) and Guinette (2:05½). As in the match made Wednesday between Murphy and N. W. Hubinger, the place and dates for the three races are to be agreed on at a future time, or, in case the principals cannot agree, they are to be designated by a referee. The three races will be placed between September 1st and October 15th, the stakes in each race being $2,500 a side, with what is virtually a side wager of $2,500 more on the odd race. That is, Bowne wagers Murphy that Gentry will beat Guinette two races out of three. Although Gentry is owned by the wealthy New York banker, Louis G. Tewksbury, Bowne is putting up his own money with Murphy.

PLEASANTON decided last Saturday evening to have a May Day celebration and over $3,000 was subscribed at a meeting of those interested. The meeting was held in Kose Hotel and attended by all the horsemen of the vicinity, as well as many of the business men. A committee was appointed to take charge of affairs and another meeting will be held Wednesday evening. The general sentiment among the horsemen was that a day of races, even though for small purses, would be of great benefit to them owing to the showing they could make of their horses before taking them East. Thomas Keating stated that he would enter his string of horses, including Searchlight, Ananconda and Dione. Andy McDowell will enter Carlye Carn, Lena N. and Jack Atkins; William Murry, Diablo; Charles Griffith, Flying Jib, Agate and Direction. The Merriwa Stock Farm will have Miss Margaret, imported Ivy and Highland Ball; Dr. Leek, his namesake and others. The races will be mixed and open to the world, to be held during the first week in May.

F. M. WARE, of the American Stock Exchange, New York, has many excellent ideas as to how racing should be conducted and is going to give a meeting on the lines shown below some time in May or June. As the P. C. T. H. B. Association is to hold a meeting on a similar plan the following ideas may be interesting to our readers: "Try thoroughly the two in three heat system, saddle races, dash races at all distances, double team races; enforce proper track discipline, no horse to be allowed on the track but those contesting in the race at hand; that every starter in such race be warmed up and ready to score at 2 o'clock, not 2:01 nor 2:35; that every race begun be finished the same day; that the appearance of a horse's name on the programme insures that he is a bona-fide entry, on the ground and ready to start, bar permitted withdrawal, officially and conspicuously announced at a specified hour, not by the pool-seller, but properly conveyed to every patron at least twenty minutes before post time; that after a certain number of scores the field shall be started, flat-footed, if necessary; that all placings, etc., at least for the first three horses shall be instantly announced after every heat, subject to correction at the final full placing for that heat; that every driver shall be in proper dress, clean and presentable, every "swipe" ditto; that no driver be allowed to "warm up" with a cigar in his mouth; and that no one in his shirt sleeves be allowed on or near the grand stand; that the stand contain comfortable seats, and a section for ladies with proper toilet conveniences; that competent paid officials occupy every position, from judge to programme boy, and that the "leading citizen" who so often officiates (with all his friends) in the judge's box be put in his cage, and kept where, if he must make a monkey of himself, he will have appropriate environment; that every rule in the book be administered as it reads, and that every heat winner gets what is coming to him in the way of a record."

Veterinarians Know its Use.

POMONA, CAL., June 7, 1897.

Since I have practiced my profession (Veterinary Surgeon) in this place I have had occasion to prescribe your "Gom-bault's Caustic Balsam," contrary to my usual method of practice, which is to avoid the use or recommendation of any proprietary medicine, but experience has shown me its value. When I came here in '93 the remedy was unknown. I think if I can make some arrangements with you for an exclusive agency for this community I can push the sale of the same in a way that will be highly satisfactory to you and profitable to myself. If you will come to some understanding with me, please advise me of the terms you are willing to give.

WALTER P. KELTY, V. S.

The Home of Bourbon Wilkes.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Oct. 14, 1895.

J. W. HUGHES—Dear Sir:—I have enough experience with the Speed Sustaining Elixir to say that it is a safe cure for thumps. I used it on a horse that had one of the most severe attacks of thumps I ever saw, and, strange to say, it relieved him almost instantly. Yours,

J. MILLER WARD.

CURBS, SPLINTS, SPRAVINS, WINDPUFFS, and all enlargements, absolutely removed by—

QUINN'S OINTMENT.

It has the unqualified endorsement of our leading horse men and veterinarians.

Mr. C. E. DINEHART, Cashier State Bank, Lexington, Ky., says: "One bottle cured a very bad case of blood spavin on a mare for which I have since been offered $50. I would not be without it if it cost $5.00 a bottle. We have hundreds of such testimonials."

Price $1.50 per Package. Ask your Druggist for it. If he does not keep it we will send prepaid on receipt of price. Address W. B. EDDY &amp; CO., Whitehall, N.Y.

THE READERS of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will probably agree with me that my "fond expectations" were not without a solid foundation when they got the paper of last Saturday. And I have not the least hesitation to predict that succeeding numbers will show an improvement steadily progressing until the promises made in the salutatory, republished in the last issue, will be carried out.

A good deal of hurry incidental to getting out an enlarged paper,—fifty per cent increase in the number of pages, pictorial additions, and topics introduced which, heretofore, have only had passing attention, some of them entirely new. It is the intention of the proprietor that all the departments shall be as comprehensive as they can be made, and if still more "space" is required to give them due prominence, that will cheerfully be awarded.

Not one of these departments are antagonistical. Many farmers are interested in breeding the highest type of harness horses, few, indeed, who are not interested in some of the branches of the equine race. While there is scarcely a question that of all the domestic animals the horse occupies the most prominent position, not a single one of the many kinds that have been brought under the dominion of mankind that has not devoted admirers.

From the Shetland pony to the mammoth draft horse; from the pet Jersey to Herefords and Durhams; all the varieties of sheep and swine, goats and rabbits highly appreciated by those who have a fondness for the most fascinating of all pursuits connected with rural life, the breeding and rearing animals or birds. And not confined to the residents of farms, suburban people are largely represented in the ranks of live stock breeders, and even quite a number of dwellers within city limits find pleasure in reproducing animals or birds they have a fancy for. It may be that the boy who takes delight in a hutch of rabbits or a cote of pigeons takes as much pleasure in witnessing the growth of his pets, as the breeder of a prospective Derby winner, or one who endeavors to breed and rear an animal which will "lower the record" and win big events; more so, perhaps, as the enthusiasm of youth, "when his heart is in its spring," will more than compensate for the comparative smallness of his venture. There may be abundant room in the back yard of a city lot for the production of dogs, and many varieties of the canine family do not require much space to flourish. Dogs which secure the approval of Dame Fashion are sure to bring a profit to the breeder; and there are some kinds that will never be ignored, their beauty and docility finding hosts of admirers whatever the craze may be.

Stock breeding, in all its branches, will, necessarily, occupy the most prominent place in The Farm department of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Not that other important subjects will be denied attention, but breeding live stock, and questions arising in connection therewith are of momentous value, and, however well informed a breeder may be, there are constant accessions, results of experiments, in all parts of the world, which will add to that knowledge.

While many farmers are in a position to secure whatever there is to be learned from periodicals and books, a newspaper has still an advantage. Owing to the prominence which English speaking people in all parts of the world, give to horses and the pursuits in which they conspicuously figure, a paper that gives the "noble animal" what may be termed the foremost place in its columns is not troubled for exchanges.

Not a single country in which English is the prevailing language that does not pay a great deal of attention to stock-breeding, and other agricultural pursuits, and, consequently, the people demand that their papers especially those which are based on these interests, present all the latest intelligence connected with rural affairs.

The United States, Great Britain and her Colonies have done more to perfect domestic animals than all other countries in the world. So far in the lead that there is no adequate comparison to signify the situation. That has resulted from a blending of materials, an intelligent handling of a variety of parent stems, a combination of qualities that gave a decided superiority over any of the component parts. An apt illustration, the thoroughbred horse. From Turkey, Barbary, Persia, Arabia and Spain horses were brought and their blood mingled with that of the nations.

There was a direct incentive, speed and endurance, and the test to prove the quality reliable, viz: the race-course. A certain distance to be run, equal weights to be carried by the contestants, and the one which gained the victory and repeated the feat until his superiority was well established, wore the garland. The blood of the victor was mixed with that of other champions, and the improvement continued so that the horses of the last century, in size, speed, endurance, conformation, every desirable quality, in fact, so far superior to their early ancestry as to appear like a distinct race.

Cattle, sheep, swine, dogs, poultry, of modern days so much better than their ancestors, not very far back, infinitely better than their progenitors, when scientific breeding was first inaugurated on British soil, that that it may be claimed there is no further room for improvement.

Improvement or retrogression. With the same care, intelligent research, and the thorough knowledge that have brought domestic animals to such a high state of perfection, improvement will follow. Without that there is certain to be retrogression.

WRONG QUOTATION, OUTDOOR SPORTS.—Harassed with the thought that the couplet quoted from "The Rime of the Ancient Mariner," was not correct, as it, in a measure, conveyed the meaning of the author, and no opportunity for verification until after the paper went to press, it was allowed to stand. Far from presuming to replace the words of Coleridge with others however appropriate, it is a safe conclusion that those he wrote could not be bettered. Endowed above all of his contemporaries with "strange powers of speech," he expresses in a few words sermons, a verse or two embodying "truths that will live forever."

"Farewell, farewell! but this I tell
To thee, thou wedding guest:
He prayeth well who loveth well
Both man and bird and beast.

He prayeth best who loveth best
All things both great and small,
For the dear God who loveth us,
He made and loveth all."

While fairly appropriate to illustrate a kindly nature, the lines quoted last week, the two verses given, are far more forcible and complete.

Thos. Jefferson wrote: "He did not question the religion of a man who was good in his family, a good neighbor and a good citizen," and he might have added, and is imbued with loving kindness to "man and bird and beast."

A genuine love for, and participation in outdoor sports will incline the devotee towards a better appreciation of life; a healthier body, and, consequently, stronger mentality, and a happier disposition. In all the wide range of what are called outdoor sports—"Stonhenge" classes them as British Rural Sports, though at the present day they can be called American as well—every taste can be gratified.

In the work of Mr. Walsh, under the title quoted, Book I, shooting, includes ten chapters, in which the subject is fully treated. Book II, Hunting, seven chapters, Book III, Coursing, nine chapters, Book IV, Falconry, one chapter, Book V, Angling, six chapters, after which Part II, "Racing in all its branches," fourteen chapters; Hurdle racing and steeplechasing has two chapters, Riding to Hounds two, while "Match Trotting" is treated in one, though it is a long one. "Pedestrianism and General Training of Men," "Aquatics, or racing in Yachts and Boats," are thoroughly handled, and "Rural Games and Outdoor Amusements" bring in cricket, minor games with ball, which includes foot-ball, archery, quoits and skittles, and curling.

Not one of the diversions included in the work of stonhenge that will not add to the happiness of those who share in the sport, either as active participants or onlookers, when indulged to a reasonable extent. It may appear strange to readers of to-day that golf was not included, but British Rural sports was published in 1856 when that game was practically unknown outside of Scotland. Polo, too, and tennis would be serious omissions in a work that was written in the last five years of the nineteenth century. As long ago as A. D. 1457 the golf was so popular in Scotland that in March of that year the Scottish Parliament, in order that the more important recreation of Archery should not be interfered with, decreed and ordained that wapinshaws (archery or rather shooting festivals) be held by the lords and barons, spiritual and temporal, four times in the year, and that foot-ball and golf be utterly cried down, and not used; and that bowe-merkis and a pair of butts be made at each parish kirk and "shut in be usit ilk Sunday."

That was before the days of John Knox, or the Sunday festival would have been "roasted" by that vigorous and bigoted reformer. "Decreted" did not answer the purpose, and fourteen years thereafter, 1471, there was another edict, couched in harsher words and imposing a fine if the decree was not obeyed. That was in the reign of James IV. and it is somewhat curious that that Monarch was a violator of his own behest, shown by the accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland, 1503 to 1506. The statute is also a curiosity in the original spelling, opening thus "Futeball and Golfe forbidden. Item, it is status and ordained that in na place of the realme there be usit futeball, golfe, or other sik unprofitable sportis, but for the common good of the realme, and defence thereof, that bowis and schuttin be hanted, etc." An entertaining history that of golf, and the "Royal and ancient game of Golf," another illustration that harmless pastimes are difficult to eradicate, when once established and crystallized in the affections of the people, by centuries of practice, by legislative enactments.

"POOL ROOMS."—That the greatest danger to the interests connected with horse racing in the future is the opportunity offered to keep pool rooms running in cities and towns is so plainly apparent that it seems singular, indeed, that anyone outside of those who have a pecuniary interest will sanction them. Not a single argument in favor, whole chapters of sound reasons could be advanced for their suppression.

Not a single city or town in which the pernicious excitement on racing has secured a foothold that has not entered fervent protests against the evil and gives the opponents of the "grand recreation" a chance to wage successful wars in many States to the extent of securing prohibitory laws.

It is also incomprehensible that Jockey Clubs and Racing Associations are not the most active of all the opponents of pool rooms, as they are the most deeply interested in their suppression of any other people, excepting the breeders of horses, which participate in races. Within bounds to place the cost of the two race courses in this vicinity at one million of dollars, and the amount invested in breeding farms, thoroughbred horses, trotters and pacers on these farms in the State of California, so large that I will not venture on an estimate. All of this aggregation of capital to be jeopardized in order that a few may make a little dirty money, without an effort to avert the danger, can only be ascribed to underrating the evil.

Whenever there is particularly active warfare commenced against racing the pool rooms are placed in the van of the charges brought. There is not a redeeming feature, not a word which any sane person who has the least conception of his utterances, can say in their favor. Not inaptly called dens, for though the more pretentious present boards with the names of starters and jockeys, the odds which will be laid or received, emblazoned upon them, the telegraph reports loudly proclaimed of the varying phases of the race, when opposition is inaugurated and ordinances passed to limit their powers, then they are on a par with "holes in the wall," "striped pigs" and other devices to evade the law.

Contrast the best of them with the racecourse. The room occupied, however large and well supplied with all the conveniences for the comfort of the patrons, it would be ridiculous to compare with the adjuncts of a modern race course. Dense clouds of tobacco smoke and that a combination of vapors from a fragrant Havana with the emanations from the vilest tobacco and the still viler cigarette. The blue sky and caller air, or even clouds and rainfall, how far superior to the poisoned atmosphere of the pool rooms! The stirring scenes, the array of "silks and satins," and silken-coated horses, the animated pictures everywhere presented; the quieter beauties of green lawns, brilliant flowers; views at Ingleside and Oakland well worthy of a long journey to anyone who is an admirer of beauty, everything, in fact, to charm the eye and delight the heart of people who have a fondness for the bright side of life.

Pshaw! I will not so far underrate the intelligence of readers of this paper to make further comparisons of that kind. And it is safe to say that there is equally as great a disparity in the features that have brought discredit on the legitimate branch of the business. That is the speculations connected with racing. Whatever outcries may be raised by the "unco gude," the wagering on races by those who attend is no worse than similar investments on the Stock Board, the Grain Exchange or any other of these marts where Fortune plays so important a part. Not nearly so bad if the whole truth were known, and hundreds have been ruined on these adjuncts to business to one that has been crippled on the track.

Again, I will not presume that any person at all conversant with the subject requires arguments, either long or short, to show the difference in this respect. Great stress has been laid on the point that betting is legalized at one place, a violation of the law in other locations, but all in the same city or county.

It is well established that there must be different ordinances for different localities, though governed by the same lawmakers. For instance, a license can be granted to carry on a line of business in one place that would be refused in another. Then it is obligatory to comply with the enactments that prevent the erection of certain buildings within prescribed limits, that can be built outside of the designated boundaries. Carrying out that principle and speculating on races within the enclosure in which the races take place, is so widely different from that when conducted in alleys and other obscure places that one is comparatively free from objectionable features, the other so weighted with odium that it cannot meet the approval of a person, however lax in his views of morality.

And it may be that if the view should prevail that a general law must be passed to govern all parts of the bailiwick, then license will cover the points at issue. Applicants as well as locality could then be considered, and permission or refusal based on either ground.

THE publication of the programme of light harness races, as suggested by Messrs. Covey, Kirkpatrick and Layng, of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association, has aroused an interest among the lovers of light harness horses which was not anticipated. The very fact that the idea of giving these races is to benefit horse owners as well as to attract the public is one which meets with the endorsement of everyone, and if all who are interested will live up to their promises of making entries there will be no fear of failure on the part of the Association. Suggestions are continually being presented, and it is believed that during the first two weeks of the meeting many of these will be adopted for the rest of the time. Horses are being trained at nearly all the leading race tracks in California, and if the California associations offer purses and good programmes in time there will be a number of horsemen from Montana, Oregon, Washington and Nevada to swell the list of those making entries. Thos. Keating says if any kind of good racing is offered here he will not go East this year. Andy McDowell may also remain, and with the good horses owned at Palo Alto, Rancho del Paso, Oakwood Park Stock Farm, Sulphur Spring Stock Farm, Vendome Stock Farm, Vioget Stock Farm, Walnut Grove Stock Farm, and the scores of individuals who have horses in training, everyone will be ready when the bell rings.

The large sales in the East this winter have demonstrated to the satisfaction of every observant horseman that horses which have records, are good-looking and have all the other requirements sought for by men of wealth, will bring better prices than those undeveloped, no matter how royally they may be bred. New York, Boston, Chicago and Cleveland are the markets for horses of this class, while for broodmares, Lexington seems to be the banner city.

It is earnestly hoped that all owners of promising trotters and pacers will have them placed in some good trainer's hands at once to be prepared for the circuit this season. Although the P. C. T. H. B. Association is going to give two meetings, the State Agricultural Society, the Stockton, San Jose, Santa Ana and Los Angeles Associations have already announced they will give meetings, it is not improbable that Santa Rosa, Napa, Salinas and Colusa will also give meetings. It all depends upon the showing to be made by the horsemen. Everything rests with them.

NO EVENT in turf circles has caused more comment than the Clinton Ordinance, introduced in the Board of Supervisors of this city, by Dr. Clinton. Ever since its presentation there seems to have been a determination on the part of some people to force the members of the Board to make this proposed ordinance a law. The arguments they use are of the weakest kind, with one exception, and that is, the prevalence of down-town pool-rooms, which seem to exist only when winter racing takes place at Ingleside and Oakland. The directors of both associations agree that pool-rooms are a menace to public morals and as far as they are concerned, should be suppressed, and they have always been willing to aid the authorities to do this, and yesterday, following the advice of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN in its single-handed battle against these sink holes, the Ingleside management ordered the Western Union Telegraph Company to either stop sending information regarding the races outside the track or take their instruments away, never to return them.

In regard to the growth of the gambling evil the opponents of racing overlook the stock and grain boards, at which ten men are ruined for every one that loses a little at the race tracks.

The arguments of President Androus and Vice-President Crocker were incontrovertible. They furnished facts and figures regarding the amount of money expended at the tracks which surprised the Special Committee of the Board last Wednesday. It was also shown, that previous to the establishment of the two tracks, the largest sum received, any year, by the breeders for thoroughbreds was $30,000, but since then this amount has increased until over $1,000,000 was paid to our California breeders, for this class of horses, since the tracks opened; and the industry is in its infancy. Many farmers, and men formerly engaged in other pursuits, have made large purchases at the sales and have bought farms and engaged in the business of breeding these horses. They have done so, believing that California will lead the world in this industry, as it has in all others, and that buyers from other parts of the United States, as well as from Central America, Mexico, South America, Europe, Asia, the Hawaiian Islands and Australasia, will patronize them.

This is only one of the many arguments, but it is a strong one and affects the financial welfare of everyone in this great State.

The improvements at Ingleside have caused a village to grow around them, the most of the inhabitants finding steady employment at the track. School houses have been erected, new roads made, and where once a wilderness of uneven, chaparral-covered hills and valleys were, one of the prettiest race tracks with valuable improvements now greets the eye. A place where visitors are cordially welcomed and racing is carried on in a measure that compares most favorably with any other race course in America.

There is not a branch of industry that is not—directly or indirectly—benefitted by this race course, and this action of the Board of Supervisors in trying to close Ingleside in order to force pool-room proprietors out of business is incomprehensible.

If there is a limit of the racing season to forty-eight days for the thoroughbreds, what is to be done for the light harness horsemen? Are they to be crowded aside? Every man who breeds or owns a horse, every carriage maker, blacksmith, harness dealer, hay and grain man and every farmer who supplies the latter, is deeply interested in this question. Surely the Special Committee on Racing appointed by the Board of Supervisors cannot afford to injure this vast number of taxpayers. It is an issue that no argument outsiders can offer can controvert. It is of greater importance and affects more people in California than any heretofore introduced. No Board of Supervisors can afford to pass a law which would be denounced by nineteen-twentieths of the population, for such action would hold the City fathers up for ridicule in every city of the United States, hence they should consider this subject carefully, and if they do, we believe the ordinance will be tabled forever.

WE take great pleasure in presenting the appended circular to the readers of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

The object alone would be well worthy of extended publicity, and when to that is added a spectacle so unique as to challenge comparison, those who attend will have the solace of assisting as worthy an institution as that of the "Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home" and participating in a festival that has never been even foreshadowed in previous fetes.

The circular fully explains the objects and plan, and that there will be a large attendance is beyond question. A large gathering of "Ancient and Accepted Free Masons" from all parts of the Coast is assured, and that the "general public" will respond to the call is as nearly guaranteed as future events can be foretold.

A GLITTERING FESTIVAL.

The Masonic Fraternity to Provide a Most Entertaining Week

IN AID OF A GREAT CHARITY.

The Affair Promises to be of Unusual Brilliance, as well as Being Quite Unique.

The entire Masonic Fraternity has decided in joining in giving during the week of May 9th to 14th (both dates inclusive) the most interesting festival which has been held in San Francisco for years. The Mechanics Pavilion has been engaged for the purpose and all the committees are now actively at work, leaving no stone unturned to make the affair, not only eminently successful, but one that will leave the most pleasant memories behind.

The fete is to be for the benefit of the Masonic Widows' and Orphans' Home, an institution which is most admirably conducted and one that does an immense amount of good. The Chairman of the Executive Committee is Charles L. Patton, the prominent attorney, whose unselfish interest in good works of this sort is very notable. At the head of the Committee on Booths is Mrs. Frank Pierce, Past Matron of Oak Leaf (Oakland) Chapter, Order of the Eastern Star. Mrs. Pierce has been quite distinguished in the order and has shown a large amount of executive ability as well as enthusiasm in the prosperity of the Home. Under her direction, and with her indefatigable energy, the attractions in the booths are certain to be not only novel, but fascinating to a degree.

There will be some very novel sights at the festival and some that this generation is not likely to have the privilege of seeing again. For instance, the jewels of the lodges and the whole regalia will be open for inspection. Those who have not reached the higher orders of Masonry can scarcely have an appreciation of the magnificence of some of the insignia of the Order. It is proposed, too, that sights never seen in the Pavilion before shall be arranged for. For example there will be live camels on which children will have an opportunity to ride around and see the sights of the fair, and it is planned to give a week of the most genuine entertaining novelties that can be imagined by those who have made a name for producing pleasing spectacles.

It is expected that there will be quite a large gathering of Masons from the country and, of course, they will make certain of that generous hospitality for which the Order is so noted. At this early date arrangements are being rapidly pushed, and all the members of the committees are vying with each other to see what can be done to insure visitors a happy time, as well as giving them a sight of a pageant that will be impressive as well as most thoroughly enjoyable. This is the first time within fifty years that such a festival as this has been made possible, and it will be many a day before it will be equalled.

The fair members of the Order of the Eastern Star are as deeply interested in the movement as are the Masons. And by their bright presence in the Pavilion during the week they will add much pleasure to the affair. A number of special features not yet fully decided on will be left to their special care, and it is certain that this part of the programme alone will be well worth coming many miles to see. We have seen all the various kinds of expositions and fairs in the Pavilion, but it may be asserted, with all confidence, that the Masonic Festival will surpass anything of the sort that has been attempted in San Francisco.

THE programme of the race meeting to be given at Overland Park, Denver, Colorado, June 11th to 25th inclusive, appears in this issue, and as entries will close May 15th, owners of trotters and pacers should not overlook this fact and make arrangements to have their horses ready for this meeting. Purses are offered amounting from $500 to $1,000, and as the track at Denver is one of the best in the United States there will be many records broken. The hospitality of the people of Denver is recognized everywhere, and the membership of the Overland Trotting and Running Association includes many of the leading citizens of this progressive city. Running races will be given each day. The seven-eighths track has been specially prepared for the thoroughbreds and these races will be conducted on plans strictly up-to-date.

It has been customary for California farmers who were endowed with an overwhelming spirit of laziness to burn all the straw which came from their threshing machinery. This year these farmers are trying to borrow money to buy straw for their stock. They have learned a lesson about the value of this material which will not be forgotten. On Rancho del Paso the straw is as carefully gathered as if it were hay, and by alternating layers of it and alfalfa, large stacks are made which furnish more sustenance for the horses and cattle than there would be if the stacks were composed of wheat hay exclusively.

THE United States government has decided to suspend the restrictive law regarding the shipment of California cattle into Nevada for grazing purposes. There never was such a prospect for poor pasturage and crops as is noted at present in many counties of California.

THE annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association will be held Tuesday evening, April 26th. The meeting is called for the purpose of abrogating the present Constitution and By-laws and taking the necessary steps to carry out the resolution adopted at the last annual meeting to incorporate under the State law governing corporations without stock and to adopt new By-laws. Other matters of vital importance to the interests of harness-horse racing on this Coast will come before the meeting. Every member of this Association should try and be present.

THE California Jockey Club will devote the proceeds of the last day's racing at Oakland to Fabiola Hospital. The day will be known as "The Fabiola Hospital Day." President Thomas H. Williams notified the Board of Directors of this Association, Monday, and arrangements were made accordingly. The decorations are all to be ribbons and it is expected that the attendance will be even greater than a year ago. No association stands higher in the esteem of the best people of Oakland than the California Jockey Club.

THERE is considerable talk of another horse show being held in San Francisco this winter. Judging by the number of new carriages, coupes, drags and other equipments received here since the last exhibition, besides the growth of equestrianism, there is no doubt the show would be a decided success.

THOS. H. WILLIAMS, President of the California Jockey Club, has informed the Merchants' Exchange, of Oakland, which is to make a strong effort to secure funds to build the Contra Costa tunnel, that the Jockey Club would set apart one day in May when the gate receipts would be donated to the tunnel fund.

WITH a new Governor who will not veto appropriations for District fairs next year, there will be a decided boom in the livestock interests of California. It is of vital importance to every voter to insist upon candidates pledging themselves to uphold this measure.

THE Board of Health of San Francisco has commenced a crusade against milk dealers; it promises to be a more vigorous and effective one than the crusade which was abolished some time ago.

Special Department

MONTANA RACING. Mr. E. A. Tipton, Manager of the racing at Butte and Anaconda, and well known over the whole of the United States as one of the most successful of the best "promoters" of harness-racing, has been in the city this week, actively engaged in making arrangements for the meetings at the above named places, 31 days, July 2d to Aug. 6th at Butte; 27 days at Anaconda, Aug. 11th to Sept. 10th. The importance of these meetings to racing folk can be estimated by the stakes, which will close on April 16th, twenty of them, aggregating $23,000, and not the least risk in saying that the whole programme will be based on the same liberal grounds.

At previous meetings at these places big purses were "hung up" for trotters and pacers, and the resolution of the Butte Horsemen's Association, and the Anaconda Racing Association, which eliminated the classes, formerly given for harness horses, awakened a good deal of curiosity and many guesses as to the motives which governed the associations.

Simply this: That notwithstanding large purses were given, $2,000.00, and others of goodly proportions, entries could not be obtained in numbers and class sufficient to make interesting contests. Three entries were all required to fill, so that there was small return from that source of revenue, and still worse one-sided affairs that afforded little pleasure to spectators, and no incitement to speculation.

Mr. Tipton is well satisfied with the responses from the horse owners he has met during the week, and there is little question that there will be racehorses enough to make every day of the two meetings interesting. Complete assurance that whatever Mr. Tipton promises will be fulfilled to the letter, and there is a further guarantee that there will be fair fields to all, no favors to one that is not conceded to every participant.

Thanks to Mr. Silva, the above is a capital representation of the main street of Pleasanton. While several views would be required to present the street throughout its length, this will show the part which is nearest the railway station. A pleasant town that is aptly named Pleasanton, and apart from the celebrity gained by the horses which have been bred, reared, or trained on adjoining farms and track, is near the western extremity of Livermore valley, celebrated for richness of soil and adaptability for fruit culture. And within the past two years it has been proved that the culture of sugar beets will return a good profit, and from the first trial it is thoroughly demonstrated that all the necessary conditions are presented for the fullest success. So much land that can be utilized for that purpose, since the drainage canal was constructed, as to warrant the building of a sugar factory there, and when that is supplied, and, consequently, transportation charges overcome, thousands of acres are available for the purpose.

What with the interests connected with the breeding and development of fast horses, the culture of hops and all kinds of fruit, there is little hazard in stating that Pleasanton is sure to prosper when anything like a fair yearly rainfall prevails.

BELMONT—It may appear somewhat singular that a portrait of a horse which died July 4, 1865, is selected for the frontispiece of this number of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. But inasmuch as he was one of the first thoroughbreds brought to California, was unquestionably entitled to the first place among the notable horses of California of the early days, and that his blood is found in two of the most renowned of the world's champions, it is not out of place. Directum, the king of trotting stallions, has two crosses of Belmont, his dam being by Venture, a son of the patriarch, and his third dam by Langford, another son. Lucrezia Borgia, with a record of 7:11 for four miles which gives her a lead of four and three-quarters seconds, and she has two strains of Belmont. Then Thad Stevens, a grandson, has the fastest second heat of four miles to his credit, and also was a winner of a race of five heats, of a mile each, Thad winning the third, fourth and fifth heats, the average of the five being the best to date. Runners, trotters and pacers are not the only horses which have made the blood of Belmont famous. In the old days roadsters, carriage horses, even work horses, were more highly valued when they could trace to the son of American Boy and imported Prunella, and "royal breeding" in more than one respect it could be called, as Prunella was bred by his Majesty, William IV., at the royal paddocks, Hampton Court.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

ACCORDING to a daily paper, F. M. Ware of the American Horse Exchange, intends to revolutionize trotting horse meetings if he can get a suitable track in or near New York. He believes the sport can be made popular in New York if conducted on up-to-date lines, and will make a test by giving a trial meeting in May or June. He says the reason why trotting races are not as popular as running races is because of the antiquated ideas that the trotting people cling to in conducting a meeting. "People are tired of long-beat races that have to be continued from one day to another, and open the door to unlimited sharp practices," says Ware. "They want quick action, and they want to have the trotting sport conducted with the same snap of the running turf." Mr. Ware proposes to give a short meeting of three or four days of about five dash races and one two-in-three heat race each day. The races to be at distances ranging from six furlongs to two miles and a half. Few, if any, of the events will be at a mile. This will be done to obviate the obtaining of mile records, and is in accordance with the recent rule. There will also be races on the foreign handicap system, saddle races, double team races and selling races.

FOLLOWING are the weights in the Inaugural Handicap, acceptances due Saturday, April 9th, to be run at St. Louis, Saturday, May 14, one mile: Satsuma, 120; Meadowthorpe, 119; Boanerges, 117; Dr. Sheppard, 115; Timemaker, 115; Macy, 114; Dunois, 113; Algol, 113; Dr. Walsley, 112; Ulysses, 108; Harry Duke, 107; Buckvidere, 107; Presbyterian, 107; Skate, 106; Greyhurst, 106; The Elector, 106; Counter Tenor, 106; Count of Flanders, 106; Laureate, 105; Dare II, 101; Command, 100; Fervor, 100; Eva Rice, 100; Flora Louise, 99; What'er-Lou, 99; Gibraltar, 97; Fireside, 97; Truxillo, 97; Forbush, 97; Etholin, 96; The Professor, 95; Judge Steadman, 95; Basquil, 94; Belle of Memphis, 94; Walkenshaw, 94; Ed. Farrell, 94; Our Chance, 92; Lady Hamilton, 92; Lizzie Cavalier, 90; Whirlaway, 90; Zarina, 88; Albert C., 85.

BURNS & WATERHOUSE have such a poor lot of runners that they may not send a string to the far East, as usual, this season, but race around the California tracks. Recreation and Napamax are the only good ones in the big bunch. They have sixty-eight in training—the largest string of gallopers in the United States—and recently sold off seventeen head. Just think of having eighty-five race horses belonging to one firm! They have fifty-six men and boys on the pay-roll which runs away over $7,000 per month. To break even on a season, then, these horses must win over $90,000 in twelve months, for railroad fares will make expenses run up to this figure.

JOHN T. WALSH, Lexington, Ky., has sold for Col. S. D. Bunce, New York City, the chestnut horse Day-break, foaled in 1891, by imp. Rossington, dam Early Light, by Longfellow, out of Fannie Wells, by imp. Sovereign, her dam Reel by imp. Glencoe. He goes to Virginia, where he will do stud duty, and on the score of breeding he should be a great success as a sire, for his pedigree is a combination of the most fashionable thoroughbred strains.

HARRY E. WISE declares he will not rest under the imputation of being ruled off the turf. He states in most positive terms that he knew absolutely nothing about the substituting of the mare Mary Nance for Los Rosas and that he was as much a victim of Goodie as the poorest swine at the race track. Wise wishes a rehearing of the case, as he contends that he can vindicate himself of any implication in the ringing case.

THE Overland Trotting and Running Association has decided upon George J. Common as the official pool-seller for the spring meeting. He had charge of this important department during the Overland Park race meeting two years ago. There will be a number of running races given at this meeting, which will prove good drawing cards.

LUCREZIA BORGIA, who gained fame last year by lowering all existing records at four miles, is suffering from a wrenched ankle and will probably never be raced again. Mr. Boots is seriously thinking of breeding the record-breaker to Galen Brown's Libertine, who holds the mile record—1:38½—on a circular track.

MR. CHAMBLETT of New York has the best stable of jumpers in America. No less than four are California-bred. They are Kilkeny, by Darebin; Caracas, by Emperor of Norfolk; Walizer, by Darebin, and Bonaparte, by Sir Modred.

PERIODICAL, a four-year-old sister to Semicolon (by Exile—Period) won a four and a half furlong race at Elkton, Md., March 26th. Cendelabra, by imp. Kyrle Daly—Abra, once a good race horse, ran second to Earn the same day.

MONTANA's Racing Carnival for 1898 will be the greatest summer meeting to be held in the United States. There will be fifty-eight days of continuous thoroughbred racing. Thirty-one days at Butte, July 2d to August 6th, and twenty-seven days at Anaconda, August 11th to September 10th. Besides the regular overnight events there will be twenty thoroughbred stakes with a guaranteed value $23,000. This will bring the racing up to the time of the California State Fair, and as the programme appears in this issue the attention of all horsemen is called to it. Entry blanks may be obtained at this office. It is believed special rates for transportation from this Coast will be made with the railroad officials. Secretary Ed. A. Tipton has been here all week.

NOTICE TO ANGLERS.

Every angler is invited to drop us a line occasionally, telling us of the condition of the streams they have visited and the killing lure of the number and size of the fish caught, or any other item of interest to anglers.

Coming Events.

April 16-17—San Francisco Fly-Casting Club. Fourth series of Saturday and Sunday contests. Stow Lake, Golden Gate Park.
June 5-6—West Michigan Fly-Casting Association. First Angling Tournament. Grand Rapids, Mich.

Trout Fishing.

Yesterday the close season for trout ended and many a jovial angler throughout the State has ere this time tested some favorite spot he has marked for the opening days of the angling season. A writer in Turf, Field and Farm aptly sings the song of the stream in rhythmic prose that would make I. Walton, Esq., sorry he died.

"How do fishes live in the sea? Long ago Shakespeare answered: 'Why, as men do on land: the great ones eat up the little ones.' There is some truth as well as sarcasm in this. Through fish culture we have made streams that were heretofore fairly throb with fins and added immensely to the food supply of man. An acre of water, it is stated, properly cultivated, will yield a larger income than an acre of land. The restocking of streams and ponds has furnished to thousands a means of recreation. The boy begins to talk fishing with the swelling of buds and memories of exploits with rod and line linger with him long after time has touched his head with silver. We pity the youngster who has never had an opportunity, even by playing truant, to land a fish and carry it home in triumph. He has been deprived of a sensation that brings the brightest glow to a youthful face. The angle worm may be good enough bait for the boy, but when man's estate has been reached greater skill is demanded of him, and the artificial fly must be used in the capture of trout. Robert B. Roosevelt grows eloquent over trout fishing: 'How splendid is the sport, to deftly throw the long line and small fly with the pliant single-handed rod, and with eye and nerve on the strain, to watch the loveliest darling of the wave, the spotted naiad, dart from her mossy bed, leap high into the air, carrying the strange deception in her mouth, and turning in her flight, plunge back to her crystal home, with the cruel hook driven into her lips by a skillful turn of the anglers wrist; to meet and foil her in her fierce and cunning efforts to escape, paying out the line as she makes away resistless, meeting her in emergencies firmly and steadily till the tip crosses the butt, when she insists upon reaching the old stump or weedy bottom; to slack the line when she leaps into air, trying to strike it with her tail; and above all, to watch the right moment and keeping the lead well up, to bring the beautiful prize quickly and steadily to the net!' Mr. Roosevelt shows by the way he writes that he thoroughly enjoys trout fishing, albeit he confesses that there are many who can cast a longer line and lighter fly than himself. The sport makes drafts upon patience, and in this way it schools man in the control of himself. When voices of Spring are heard it is health-promoting to linger in the open air and dream of buds bursting into blossom."

Bay fishing is improving.

Smelt are commencing to run in the bay.

The rumor that the Spring Valley lakes would be closed to anglers this season is not founded on fact.

Salmon are plentiful in Monterey bay. Several well known anglers have gone down to Santa Cruz during the week.

The Carmel and its tributary streams are reported to have an abundance of trout in them at present. The outlook is good for the season.

At El Campo, bay fishermen will find a number of good boats at their disposal. The fishing in that vicinity is excellent. The grounds open early in April.

The Sacramento river near Sims is as low at present as is usual in July; Sonoma creek is at the June stage of water. The Paper Mill is also reported to be lacking in water.

The San Joaquin in the vicinity of Merced is reported to offer good fishing at the present time. The river now abounds with more and larger fish than ever known before.

During the past week the Lagunitas has been fished by men, women and children. The fish taken were all very small. The poaching will no doubt have its future effects.

A very large number of salmon trout of good size are being caught at the mouth of the Sequel creek at Capitola. Fishermen line the banks and catch them from off the bridge. — Santa Cruz Sun.

Russian river bids fair to claim much attention from anglers this season, the river is low but the water is finer now than has been noticed for many years. Land locked steel-heads should afford quite a deal of sport.

Al Wilson, W. R. McFarland, Al Neuman, "Doc" Cox, Billy Bolan and others tried the tide water canal at High Street, Alameda, on Sunday, fish were in evidence but they would not take any kind of bait. The steelhead in the canal are making unavailing efforts to get up the branch towards Fruitvale to spawn as they are accustomed to do when the water is high enough. Numbers of fish are in San Leandro bay, kept back by low water, and they are so ripe that the eggs are running from them in the salt water.

Recent advises from Los Gatos do not give great promise of much fishing in that vicinity this season, owing to the fact that what water has gone down Los Gatos Creek has been taken out of the stream at Campbell for irrigating purposes, thus stopping it from going to Alviso. It is not generally known, but it is true nevertheless, that the majority of the fish caught in this creek come from Alviso; they are steel-heads, and are very similar to the brook trout. Last year it is said that thousands of these fish were found in the irrigating ditches near Campbell after the water had gone into the ground. Screens should be put in at the head of all irrigating ditches and fish ladders at all dams.

flat and wide in a bitch; slightly arched in a dog, great depth of flanks. Hindquarters: broad, wide and muscular, stifles straight; hocks bent, wide apart and squarely set, no dew claws. Stern: put on high, reaching to hocks, wide at the root, tapering, hanging straight in repose, but forming a curve with the end pointing upwards, but not over the back, when the dog is excited.

Coat—Short and close-lying, but not too fine over the shoulders, neck and back.

Color—Apricot or silver fawn, or dark fawn brindle, muzzle, ears and nose should be black, with black round the orbits and extending upwards between them.

Color disqualifications—Fawns and brindles without dark points; reds without black muzzle and pie.

Weight should be about 120 pounds.

General appearance—Large, massive, powerful symmetrical and well-knit frame; combination of grandeur, good nature, courage and docility.

San Jose Show.

The second annual bench show under direction of the Santa Clara Valley Poultry and Kennel Club in combination with the California Collie Club opened in Turn Verein Hall on Wednesday morning under the best auspices and with every indication of being a great success.

The number of entries as listed in the first edition of the catalogue is 161, as follows:

Mastiff .....	4	Cocker Spaniels .....	10
Great Danes .....	8	Collies .....	61
St. Bernards .....	20	Bull Terriers .....	4

The most extensive entry is that of Scotch collies, there being sixty-one entries in the collie classes, representing the leading kennels of the State. This exceeds the Westminster Kennel Club's collie entries at their late bench show by ten. The collies benched this week at San Jose would be hard to beat anywhere. Among them will be found some dogs of international reputation, the Verona Kennels exhibit being a very fine one. The most noted collie in the United States to-day is Old Hall Admiral, who was recently purchased in England for $2,000. He won first premiums at all the great Eastern shows. Heathermint, also a noted prize winner, is

Standards.

ST. BERNARDS—The head of this dog is large and massive, the circumference of skull being twice the length of the head from nose to occiput. Lips: deep but not too pendulous. Stop: abrupt, well defined and straight to end of nose. Skull: broad, round at top, not domed, brows prominent. Ears: medium size, close to cheek, strong at base, not too heavily feathered. Eyes: rather small and deep set, dark, not too close together, lower eye-lid drooping showing fair amount of haw. Nose: large and black, well developed nostrils. Teeth: level. Expression: should betoken dignity, benevolence and intelligence.

Neck: lengthy, muscular, slightly arched, dewlap developed. Shoulders: broad and sloping, well up at the withers. Chest: wide and deep. Back: broad, level to haunches, slightly arched over loins, gentle slope from haunch to stern, merging imperceptibly into root of stern. Ribs: well rounded, carried well back. Loins: wide and muscular. Stern: set in rather high, long and bushy, carried low in repose, slightly above the line of back when in motion.

Forearms: powerful and very muscular. Forelegs: perfectly straight, strong in bone and of good length. Hindlegs: heavy in bone, bent in the hocks. Thighs: muscular. Feet: compact and large, toes moderately well arched.

Height—Dogs: at least 30 inches at shoulder. Bitches: 27 inches.

Coat—In the long-coated variety should be dense and flat, rather full about neck, thighs bushy. In the smooth coats the coat should be thick, hard, flat and short, slightly feathered in thighs and stern.

Color—Red, orange, various shades of brindle, or white with patches of these colors. Markings—White muzzle and blaze in face, white collar around neck, white chest, forelegs and end of tail, black shadings on face and ears. If blaze be wide, running through collar, a spot of body color should be on top of head.

Color Disqualifications—Dudley, liver colored nose, fawn if white colored or with black shadings only; black, black and tan, black and white, black, tan and white, and all white, though all white has taken high honors under one of the leading judges in the East.

General appearance—Large and powerful, with great muscular development, suggesting endurance.

MASTIFF—The head is square when viewed from any point, with breadth greatly to be desired. Skull: broad between the ears; forehead flat, wrinkled, arch across the skull of a rounded, flattened curve, with a depression up to center of forehead: brows slightly raised. Muscles of temples and cheeks well developed. Face or muzzle: short, broad under the eyes and keeping nearly parallel in width to the end of the nose; blunt and cut off square, forming a right angle with the upper part of the face, of great depth from the point of the nose to under jaw. Under jaw, broad to the end. Teeth: powerful, wide apart, incisors level. Length of muzzle to whole head and face, as 1 to 3; circumference of muzzle to that of head (before the ears) as 3 to 5. Ears: small, thin, wide apart, set in high at the highest point of the sides of the skull and lying flat and close to the cheeks when in repose. Eyes: small, wide apart; color hazel brown—the darker the better, and showing no haw. Stop: well marked but not too abrupt. Nose: broad, with wide, spread nostrils; flat. Lips: slightly pendulous.

Body.—Massive, broad, deep, long, powerfully built on legs wide apart and squarely set; muscles sharply defined size a great desideratum. Neck: slightly arched, moderately long and very muscular. Chest: wide, deep and well let down between the forelegs. Ribs: arched and well rounded. False ribs deep and well set back to the hips. Shoulder and arm: slightly sloping, heavy and muscular. Forelegs and feet: straight, strong, set wide apart, bones very large, elbows square; pasterns upright. Feet, large and round, toes well arched, nails black. Back and loins wide and muscular;

In a second fifteen-bird match Nauman again took first money on 14. Feudner and Webb with 13 each divided second money. The score was: Nauman 14, Haight 10, Grant 12, Feudner 13, Sears 12, Haight 10, Webb 13, Franzen 11. A match at ten pairs resulted as follows: Webb 16, Feudner 16, Sears 13, Kleversahl 10, Shields 1.

The Eastern Championship at Live Birds.

The Grand American Handicap, probably the greatest pigeon shooting event on record, was practically concluded in a drizzling rain at Elkwood Park, Long Branch, Thursday afternoon, March 24, 1898. Of one hundred and ninety seven contestants nine killed their twenty-five birds straight tying for first place. They decided to divide the money prizes, securing $112.60 each.

The names of the lucky ones are J. A. R. Elliott, Kansas City, Mo. (31 yards); Rolla O. Heikes, Dayton, Ohio (30 yards); E. D. Fulford, Utica, N. Y. (29 yards); G. W. Loomis, Omaha, Neb., (28 yards); T. P. Laffin, Rock Island, Ill. (28 yards); "Walters," Long Branch, N. J. (27 yards); N. F. Bender, N. Y. (27 yards); "Jim" Jones, Philadelphia 27 yards), and W. Wagner, Washington, D. C. (27 yards).

Twenty-two tied, with twenty-four birds, each securing $61.85. Their names are E. M. Cooper, A. Doty, E. A. Leach, A. W. Money, George C. Roll, J. B. Savaga, F. Schwartz, J. S. Fanning, who unluckily missed his first bird, Jay Snell, S. Glover, F. J. Laughry, "Roberts," Dr. D. B. Mosher, William Adolph, "Donley," Captain Bunk, A. Willy, S. M. Thompson, E. C. Burkhardt, E. S. Rice, W. P. Shattuck and Lee Huckins.

Both the scratch men, Captain J. L. Brewer and Fred Gilbert, of Iowa (32), could do no better than twenty-three birds each, and are out of the money. This can also be said of "Tom" Marshall, of Illinois, last year's champion at this event, who also secured twenty-three.

The conditions governing the match called for twenty-five birds each, $25 entrance, birds extra, handicaps from 25 to 33 yards rise, $1,500 guaranteed by the Association and all surplus added. In addition to the money prize, the winner received a sterling silver loving cup, presented by the Interstate Association.

The cash prizes amounting respectively to $632.50, $582.50, $482.50, $440, $385, $330, $288.75, $275, $247.50, $233.75, $137.50, $137.50, $110, $82.50, $82.50, and nine additional prizes of $55 each in all amounting to $5,075, were to be divided among the twenty-five high guns, but was divided as above stated instead of the ties being shot off. The tournament was under the management of Elmer Shaner. The handicapping committee were Jacob Pentz, Will K. Park and Elmer Shaner.

When the race was fairly started it was learned that ten of the original entries had forfeited, and there were six post entries, making a total of 197 that faced the traps, the largest shooting match ever held in this or any other country. Out of this aggregation, at the end of the third round there were 136 straight scores. At the close of the sixth ninety clean scores were recorded, and at the end of the ninth sixty-one had not failed to stop every bird they had drawn.

Thirty-one men showed an unbroken record of kills at the end of the fifteenth round. This number, however, was reduced to twenty-one when the eighteenth round was finished.

Elmer Shaner, manager of the tournament, announced that after the eighteenth round contestants who had three or more misses would be retired, as it was plain they had no chance for the money. The only exception to this rule was Mrs. Shattuck, who was permitted to continue in the race.

The strain on the leaders began to tell as the match progressed. At the eighteenth round the straight scores were by Dr. Williamson, Elliott, "Richey," "Walters," Fulford, Bender, Loomis, "Jim" Jones, Schwartz, Wagner, F. Dunell, Laughry, "Hood," Heikes, "Donley," "Captain Bunk," Alikine, Rice, Laffin, Shattuck and Huckins. There were a host of contestants that had missed only one bird. Mrs. Shattuck continued to shoot, although her chances for any of the money were gone after her three misses on Wednesday's work. Her work during the last day was excellent. The following shooters had straight scores up to the end of the twenty-fourth round: Elliott, Walters, Fulford, Bender, Loomis, Jones, Wagner, Heikes, Laffin and Shattuck. These shooters were on their last round at No. 1 trap.

The excitement was at fever heat during the last round. Of the ten leaders, Shattuck lost his nerve on the last bird, leaving nine straight scores—an unprecedented record in the history of the event.

Fulford Won.

The Grand American Handicap was brought to a successful conclusion at Elkwood Park last Friday, March 25. The nine high guns who had tied for first place with clean scores of twenty-five birds each were scheduled to settle the ownership of the trophy in a miss and out event. The contestants were Elliott, "Walters," Fulford, Bender, Loomis, "Jim Jones," Wagner, Heikes and Laffin. When the nine men were called to the score there was almost as large a gathering of devotees of the sport as was seen during the two previous days. After the fourteenth round Fulford and Loomis were left alone in the race, and the excitement became intense as each steadily killed his bird in turn until the end of the twenty-second round.

It was a duel between East and West, and the quiet man from Utica won out, killing his twenty-fourth bird in grand style with his first barrel, using his second for safety. Loomis drew a twisting driver with the speed of a locomotive, which he filled full of shot with the first barrel. It faltered an instant, but no vital spot was touched, and it quickly started again, at top speed. Although the marksman's second shot killed it in the air, it had sufficient momentum to be carried over the boundary, and the largest tournament ever held in the world ended in a victory for the Eastern man amid buzzes and hand clapping. The victor was hoisted up on the shoulders of his admirers and borne in triumph around the grounds.

Shortly afterward the President of the Interstate Association, Mr. J. Dressel, presented the winner with a silver trophy, valued at $250, in a few well-chosen words, to which Fulford responded.

THE SUMMARY.

The Farm.

A comprehensive heading and under these two words will appear articles bearing on every phase of rural life. Ever since the Garden of Eden was cultivated few of the descendants of our first parents who have never felt a "hankering" after a life on the farm. If unable to acquire enough of Mother Earth to be dignified with the name of farm then a garden or some sort or a patch of land in addition to the hut or cottage that affords shelter. Failing in that a pot of flowers on the window sill, even Falstaff gross in his tastes, without higher aspiration than those differing slightly from brutish desires, "babbled of green fields" on his deathbed.

All was not lost when the flaming sword guarded the portals of Eden, Banished from Paradise Adam and Eve were endowed with qualities, knowledge, hope, desire, that made it possible to create homes that resembled, in some respects, the one they could no longer inhabit.

As generations succeeded generations the original endowment became a great inheritance. Knowledge increased until with the lapse of centuries came an augmentation of mental development, an increase of brain force, the power to control antagonistic elements; adaptability to make the most of the gifts of a bountiful Providence.

In this wonderful march toward the summit of the hill of Science, "The Farm" has not fallen out of the procession.

Those who have witnessed the changes wrought in the last sixty years in rural life, especially if familiar with the life that is typical of the early settlement of the Eastern States, do not require pictures or books to draw a comparison. And full of toil and hardships, as the life of these pioneers of the woods entailed, there were compensations and the hope that "springs eternal in the human breast," pictured the change from forest gloom to all the comforts of The Farm and inspired courage and resolution to bring about the transformation. Privations passed would add to the enjoyment of the future. The cares which would beset him were lightly regarded by the young farmer as he selected the place for his future home. Miles in the woods, perhaps, from the nearest settlement, when the choice was fixed, but well he knew that soil and surroundings were of more value than contiguity to neighbors, and he was also aware that when the logs were cut there would be no lack of help to place them in position to form his first house.

The early spring time gave the opportunity to provide adequate shelter and "chinking and daubing" could be done before the frosts of autumn and the sharp winter winds necessitated more ample protection.

When the leaves on beech and maple, hickory and chestnut were well formed, and the few hemlocks in full foliage, then the sound of the axe came sharp and furious from "sun-up to sundown." The thick underwood had just been cut, and as the trees were felled the branches were lopped, and the trunk cut in suitable lengths to be rolled into heaps. Astonishing the results from the labor of one man during these months when the trees were in leaf, and yet leave time enough to dry for the burning. Acres ready for the torch, and on a calm autumnal day when the sun's beams came hot, and the flames leaped and roared, what a glorious spectacle!

In place of devastating, clearing the ground of incumbrance, laying the corner stone of The Farm. "A grand burn," blackened logs and stumps, heaps of white ashes scarcely a branch left to impede the work. Again the neighbors from far and near assemble, to aid the "new settler." A "logging bee" for a certain date, and the news travelled with the speed of the "fiery cross," and there was a hearty response. Many "yokes" of cattle and groups of men scattered over the field, and an emulation on the part of each gang to excel in the amount of work done. An exciting play to those who participate. No lack of training in men or animals.

The driver with chain in hand directs his team. A word, ha or gee, sufficient to guide their course and they wheel in close proximity to the log to be "snaked."

Look out for your fingers you manipulator of the chains! Heads are turned and bright eyes watching, and when the hook grasps the link they start like quarter-horses. No guidance required to bring the log in the proper place. Seldom a "skid" knocked out, or the variation of a foot in the exact distance. A backward step to slacken the chain so that the hook can be unclashed and then straight forward to a log on the opposite side.

Big logs in plenty but it would be a huge timber that the two rollers could not put in place, and by noon time the work in that black field is fully half done.

"The neighbors have done their part in furnishing the banquet, and a feast it is, if there is no resemblance to a "French dinner." Vegetables, cakes and pies, and in some cases old "settlers" send casks of cider, the product of orchards planted years before. The neighboring "women folk" come to assist, and when the "horn blows" to summons the workers, the improvised table is covered with good cheer. The rifle which hangs on the hooks over the rude fireplace has done its share in furnishing the repast. Venison, pheasants, rabbits, roasted before the fire and stewed in the old time "bake kettle," and the stream that runs at the foot of the hill is full of trout, and a neighbor's boy has caught a big "string" while the others were laboring. A jovial, kindly company. No difference in raiment. Tow shirts and trowsers of the same material, supported by suspenders knitted from wool, cowhide boots or buckskin moccasins completed their attire. Shirt sleeves rolled up above the elbows, displaying brawny arms, and shirt-collar unbuttoned disclosing necks resembling that of the Farnese Hercules. Blackened, of course, from handling the burnt logs, and little care taken as they stooped over the spring run to do more than wash face and hands. Black outside, but brave hearts inside of the rough garments, and eyes which told that there was no simulation of kindly feelings. The opportunity to assist a neighbor being gladly accepted, and ample reward the consciousness of having lent their aid to one who was benefited, and who needed their assistance.

And in this connection it may be proper to state, that the writer has seen many different phases of life, thrown in company with many classes of people, and for genuine friendship, a disposition to do all in their power to advance the interests of others, never knew their superiors, in that respect, of these acquaintances of nearly sixty years ago. The work he has so briefly described he has taken part in, and from being "raised" in their country can claim to be a "qualified judge."

The logging bee and kindred functions were gala days, days to be marked with a white stone, in the life of the new settler.

The heaps of logs so speedily erected had to be reduced to ashes, and the few unburned portions left of the original pile, the less the labor. Few hours of sleep, as night as well as day the fire had to be kept up. After the clearing was perfected then a part of it put in winter wheat—and, by-the-way, in that country the "first crop" of that cereal was the only one that could be depended upon—the rest of it left to be put into corn, potatoes, and other vegetables in the spring.

A drag (harrow) formed of the fork of a tree, a borrowed yoke of oxen to haul it, and when that had accomplished all that it could, then "hoe around the stumps" to cover the grain that could not be touched with the drag. When the harvest came the only implement that could be used was a sickle, as the stumps were too close together for a "cradle" and these were rare when the nineteenth century was still young. Thrashed with a flail, winnowed on a fan, and not unfrequently the new settler carried the "grist" to the mill on his shoulders.

Even this mere outline will show the difference of the far away past with the present in securing a farm, and yet the men who were forced to endure the attendant hardships were happy and contented, especially those who had a fondness for a life in which they were their own masters, and still better a natural aesthetic bent that led to steps that increased the comfort. The log cabin with stone chimney on the outside of it, embowered in creepers, a strip of flowers, and then shrubbery, and a portion of the first clearing planted with fruit trees. In the hardwood lands the stumps quickly rotted, and the swales where hemlock and birch prevailed, though the hardpan was not far below, was great grass land. Children, grand-children and great-grand-children of the men who chopped and logged and struggled are now surrounded with plenty, beautiful homes have taken the place of cabins of logs notched together at the ends, flocks, herds and bands of horses in verdant pastures, the creek sparkling in the sunlight that was shaded by hemlocks and laurel when the hill land was brought under cultivation.

No necessity nowadays for undergoing the privations of these early times to secure a farm. It may be that more is required than a stout heart, health and an axe to make the commencement in acquiring the "ranch," though a comparatively small capital may answer. Read Mr. Flynn's article on "Rural life in Southern California," published in this paper of last week, and note the difference between that and hewing a farm out of the eastern woods.

Not over drawn or given a roseate hue, but justified by the country described, and when properly appreciated, large as the immigration has been in the last few years, there will be thousands more, anxious to secure a farm in California.

The whole of California, excepting the mountainous districts, admirably adapted to the wants of the small farmer, in acreage, such as the men cleared in the days gone by, always bearing in mind that ten acres of California land is equivalent to many times ten in the eastern country.

Irrigation.

The following paragraphs, copied from the California Advocate, being the opening of a long and able article on irrigation, is peculiarly applicable to these sections of California where the control of water, the power to overcome the want of a natural supply, is an absolute necessity. All parts of the State have an interest, for though in the most favored localities where "dry years" rarely occur, it might seem that no benefits would result from the adoption of the schemes advocated, close attention will disclose good reasons for every citizen of this commonwealth being a warm supporter of the proposed measure. In the first place the largely increased value of regions, now practically worthless, will swell the assessors' list to a proportion that will decrease the taxes, so that the amount invested by the State in irrigation work will be more than replaced by the appreciation in values. Then while the "arid lands" absolutely demand irrigation to give them any value, there are parts of the country that cannot be classed in the desert list that will be benefited nearly as much.

The time will come when—with the exception of mountains and places where artificial moisture is out of the question—the calamity of drouths will be practically overcome, and the sooner that era arrives the better.

There is another point for consideration; With huge reservoirs and irrigating ditches rapid evaporation will be arrested, and it is a well known fact that rainfalls will be of more frequent occurrence and more copious, when there are guards against that waste. Countries which were well supplied with water have been rendered sterile by cutting down forests that gave protection, and the retention of large bodies of water will have the same effect, if not greater, than that which nature provided.

California seems now to be standing at the portals of an unusually dry season. This situation forces consideration of the need for irrigation development over large areas of the State. Great as is this need, we are confronted with the fact that unless a general public interest in the solution of the great problem is aroused, no solution will be found and no progress made.

Irrigation development by private capital has practically reached its limit. There are very few localities where new propositions can be found warranting its investment. The only solution of the problem is through State and National action. California is big enough to bring about either or both if her people could be aroused to their importance, and to a full realization of the fact that the irrigation district system is a delusion and a disastrous and hopeless failure, and that its continuance merely makes certain the stagnation of irrigation development.

FEDERAL STORAGE RESERVOIRS.

Enough water never can be had for the irrigation of the Sacramento and San Joaquin valleys except through the construction of storage reservoirs in the Sierra Nevada mountains. Yet San Francisco must look to the settlement of these great valleys for her future growth, and it behooves her to give attention to their development.

If Congress would act upon the recommendations of Captain Hiram M. Chittenden, of the United States corps of engineers, in his report submitted as the result of his labors and investigations under the congressional appropriation made for the location and survey of reservoir sites in Colorado and Wyoming, a policy would be adopted by the Federal Government which would bring about the construction of storage reservoirs in the Sierra Nevada mountains necessary to furnish enough water for the irrigation of the great interior valleys of this State.

FEDERAL IRRIGATION WORKS.

Beyond and separate from the project of federal storage reservoirs solely to conserve flood waters, is the movement looking to the reclamation of the arid public lands through the construction by the federal government itself of the irrigation works necessary for their reclamation. The Irrigation Congress has declared in favor of this. Gov. Myron B. McCord of Arizona strongly urges it in his last annual report, and the movement is fast gaining strength. California has an enormous interest in it. There are millions of acres of arid public lands in this State, which never can and never will be reclaimed in any other way. The arid public domain in San Diego, Riverside, San Bernardino and Los Angeles is a vast empire in itself, a desolate desert now, but capable, if irrigated, of sustaining a teeming population."

Cattle Breeding in California.

FIRST PAPER.

An Eastern stock breeder, on a trip to this coast, will find many things here which will trouble him to understand, and incongruities that will bother him to reconcile.

If a general breeder, as many of the Eastern farmers are—horses, cattle, sheep, swine, poultry, products of his farm at home—he will be possessed of the knowledge that in one department, a State which has yet to celebrate its semi-centennial, has taken a decided lead. A much-mooted question, whether California is not entitled to the first place in the production of fast horses, and when taken into consideration that States which are closest in the race had a commanding place before this territory was acquired, years of experience being a part of the calculation, then the most ardent advocate of Eastern horses must concede that the diploma cannot be withheld from the Occidental horse breeders.

When the Easterner has made a tour of the State, when he has visited all the ranches, or seen those which are the best equipped, he will be still more likely to acknowledge supremacy. But in obtaining this information he will also learn that in other departments of stock-breeding there are anomalies that require explanation. He will obtain the information that there are large importations of farm products. That beef, mutton, pork, butter, poultry, eggs from other States are brought here in large quantities, and while he will understand that the large cattle ranges, in Nevada, Arizona, Wyoming and Idaho, may be able to furnish beef and mutton at lower rates than California breeders can afford to duplicate, when he looks up the market prices he is again befogged. He finds on the 30th of March, 1898, that slaughterers' prices for whole carcasses were:

But—Steer, first quality, 65¢ @ 68¢ per lb; second quality, 55¢; Cows, first quality, 55¢ @ 58¢; second quality, 50¢.
Veal—Medium, 1st lb; small, 66¢.
Mutton—Wethers, 85¢ @ 90¢ per lb; Ewes, 75¢ @ 80¢.
Lamb—Yearlings, 85¢ @ 90¢ per lb; this Spring Lamb, 10¢ @ 12½¢.
Hogs—Dressed, 65¢ @ 70¢ per lb.

A profit surely at these figures if the business is conducted as it is by successful farmers in his section, and that in a country where the climate compels indoor feeding for many months of the year. From March or April to June, planting; July, August, September and October, pitching into the mow or stack, and filling granaries and cribs, to be pitched out again during the other months. If the visit has been made in a year, there has been an average rainfall, and February, March and April occupied in making his tour he will come to the conclusion that he can produce beef and mutton at one-half the cost he can at home. Were this year chosen when, with one exception, there is the worst outlook for the past thirty years, in place of bemoaning the prospect, guards erected and care taken to provide for such a contingency. If there is a chance for one "dry year" in ten, a few extra stacks of hay, a portion of the grain put aside to meet the deficiency, and even should there be rainfall in April, such as oftentimes comes, provisions made well worth the extra outlay. For home use loose hay is preferable to that which has been baled, and if barns cannot contain the needed supply, and the rains of two winters demand additional protection, the methods pursued in other countries can be followed. In as wet a country as England hay is safely kept in stacks for several years, the "ricks" being thatched, the job so thoroughly done that there is small loss, and in that country old hay is greatly preferred, for many uses, to that which is not thoroughly seasoned.

If the trip of our hypothetical breeder includes all of the counties in California he will learn that in no other State such decided contrasts. Rich valleys, fertile rolling lands, hills, which would be called mountains in Eastern States, rich in verdure to the summits, arid deserts and snow-clad Sierras. Plain to the duldest comprehension that breeds of cattle must be selected that are best adapted for the district in which they are to be reared, and in the course of his travels our Eastern friend is surprised to find that nearly all the celebrated branches of the bovine race are represented. And of a quality that will compare favorably with the best in his home country.

The high price of beef has led him to believe that there was a lack of the kind which will be ready to slaughter at an early age, the sort that will return the largest amount of beef for the feed given. Durhams—short and long-horned—Herefords, polled Galowsays, and the hornless Angus, Holsteins, all of them grand specimens of the big breeds, the beef-breeds par excellence, that is, when bulk of carcass and quality of flesh are sought after.

It may be that in some nook, among the mountains, something akin to the highly-prized black cattle of the north of Scotland may be found. Not very likely, however, and should this favorite of English picures become one of the California breeds it will probably be in the far-away future. A full supply of the heavy breeds, and in the alfalfa fields in the valleys and irrigated plains the Eastern breeder will see more opportunities.

On these, and with a fair allowance of grain in the later stages of feeding, grade two-year-olds that will scale over a thousand pounds, and readily bring a shade over the top of the market, and at prevailing prices, "year in and year-out," will leave a round profit. Still, puzzled to find the cause, that is sufficient cause, for the heavy importations of cattle, when everything seems so favorable that a surplus should be the natural sequence, and he comes to the conclusion that something is lacking in the management of the business. Perhaps our visitor is right, and after careful study he may offer suggestions that will prove valuable. After making all allowances for difference of soil and climate it may be that some of the eastern practices can be advantageously adopted, and no one of fair understanding can deny that comparison between Eastern and California methods in place of being odious, as the old adage represents, will lead to improvement.

Agricultural Notes

The action of the Board of Supervisors of San Bernardino County authorizing the President of the Board to sign a petition to President McKinley, asking the opening of the reservation to cattle and sheep for grazing has awakened violent opposition. Opponents argue that such a course would seriously interfere with the water supply of the valley, cattle and sheep consuming the vegetation which shades the soil, and, incidentally, destroy the growth of young trees. While in such a year as this the opening of public reservations would be of material aid in overcoming the disastrous effects of a dry year, future results might prove that the relief had been dearly purchased.

The Southern papers appear to be determinedly opposed to pasturing forest reservation, claiming that fires will be more prevalent, while one old settler claims, that from 1875 to 1881 he kept his sheep on the mountains and during that period fires were unknown.

Flax Culture.—According to The Guard, published at Eugene City, Oregon, it has been proved that flax culture can be successfully pursued, so far as soil and climate can promote the industry. But the trouble is that there is no market for the fibre after it is prepared, and until mills are erected that difficulty cannot be overcome.

In the days when farms had to be literally hewed out of the forests, and ground was available for the cultivation of flax, the whole process of manufacture was carried on. The flax rotted, broke, scutched, hatched, and prepared for the wheel. The "little wheel" which worked with a treddle to distinguish it from the big wheel on which wool was spun, and then woven into fabrics that would meet the requirements of the household.

But when once demonstrated that the raw material can be furnished at reasonable cost, it does seem that capital would play its part by erecting mills near the centre of the flax growing district. Linen goods are nearly all imported from foreign countries, and then at prices which would well repay home industry. California, unless the northern part is an exception, is not well adapted to the growing of flax, though there is little question that the sister state has everything requisite.

Horticultural Interests.—Any measure whether state or National that will be to the prejudice of California fruit growers should be stubbornly contested. While altogether unlikely that at this time any treaty with Spain, excepting one which will cover affairs of greater moment, enough is known to warrant the action of the Packers and Shippers' Association as shown by the following copied from the Union of late date.

Great as the business of fruit-growing is now in California if awarded the protection so freely granted to other interests for every acre now occupied by fruit trees many will be planted.

The Packers and Shippers' association of this city has been aroused to the necessity of immediate action over the report of a probable commercial treaty being promulgated between the United States and Spain. The treaty would, in its present form, work serious injury to the fruit industry of this State and especially to Southern California. The packers and shippers will meet with the chamber of commerce to-day and decide what action to take regarding the matter. Telegrams will be sent to the various senators and representatives at Washington urging them to vote against the treaty in its present form. A letter was received from the Los Angeles chamber of commerce yesterday, calling attention to the necessity for immediate action on the part of the people in this section.

The latter states that Spain hopes to secure concessions for its fruit trade in return for concessions on petroleum, flour and lumber, and it seems to be the disposition of the administration to sacrifice the California fruit-growers, especially the citrus fruits. The letter goes on to say that while little or no progress has been made in the consideration of the treaty, now is the time for the California fruit-growers to act, for if they waited until the terms of the treaty had been practically agreed upon, it would then be too late.

A large lemon shipper was seen yesterday and had the following to say: "Our association is preparing to act vigorously in the matter. We will send telegrams to our senators and representatives protesting against the treaty. We intend to head off the action of the administration, who, it is reported, will try to push the treaty through very quietly, so that the California fruit-growers would not realize in time how great an injury had been done them."

"Should the treaty go through it would be the death-blow to the fruit interests in California, especially lemons and oranges. The growers here seem to have more than their share of a heavy burden. To inflict them with a commercial treaty like the one reported, on top of a railroad pool, is more than they can stand. There is practically no profit in oranges and lemons now with the present high freight rates, and it would be necessary for the growers to abandon their grooves in order to make a living. The railroads charge 90 cents to carry a box of oranges or lemons East while the freight across the Atlantic is only 17 cents per box. The present tariff gives our growers an equal show with the foreign growers, but should the tariff be done away with we could not survive."

Crop Prospects.

The crop report sent out by Section Director W. H. Hammon of the Weather Bureau's crop service department is not of the most hopeful character, for during the week the rainfall was less than it really ought to be at Eureka, Red Bluff, Sacramento, San Francisco, Fresno, Los Angeles and San Diego—considerable less in Northern California than the normal, and Mr. Hammon says:

"The rain of Friday and Friday night improved feed in Southern California and upper San Joaquin valley and in the coast region south of San Francisco. Grain prospects were also improved, especially in the upper San Joaquin valley, but in many portions it was already beyond recovery. In many portions of the Sacramento valley the grain was injured by the north winds and frosts, the ground becoming very dry. Generally speaking, the outlook for grain is poor."

He goes on to say: "The week was very unfavorable despite the rain of the 26th. Injurious frosts and low temperature did further harm to orchards already badly damaged. Throughout the State the average temperature was from five to nine degrees lower than the normal for this period. On the 23d, 26th and 27th the minimum temperatures were near or below freezing over almost all of the State, excepting the extreme south and the immediate coast." He summarizes the situation as to the horticultural interests thus: "Throughout almost the entire State frost is reported to have caused great injury to deciduous fruit. Apricots and almonds have been killed in many sections and early blossoming peaches seriously injured. Prunes were probably not far enough advanced to receive much injury. Walnuts and blossoming oranges were hurt to some extent in portions of Southern California."

The Sacramento valley outlook in detail by counties is: Sacramento—Unfavorable reports, and asparagus half a crop. Butte—Grain holding its own, but fruit outlook poor. Yuba—Almonds and apricots gone, peaches hurt in lower branches, but no permanent injury to grain. Glenn—Growing grain failing fast and some farmers have stopped plowing, owing to dryness of ground. Yolo—Uplands better than lowlands, and in latter, almonds, apricots and peaches badly damaged. Colusa—Growth of grass retarded, but with rain there will be a good crop of grain in the foothills. Solano—Fruit damaged, cherries badly hurt, ground drying fast. Placer—Ground too dry to plow, fruit nearly all killed, grain needs rain.

San Joaquin Valley: San Joaquin—Rain has helped grain, fruit badly damaged. Merced—Friday's rain will keep grain growing for some time. Stanislaus—Crops and feed looking better, but fruit badly burned and outlook is for half a crop or more of grain inside the canal district. Kern—Crops look well. Fresno—Fruit damaged, but rain of Friday helped wheat. Kings—Fruit damaged, showers helped grain. Tulare—Grain products more encouraging, apricots and peaches killed, prunes not badly damaged.

Coast and Bay Districts: Sonoma—Peaches, apricots and cherries total failure, but prunes safe. Napa—Good grain and hay crop, apricots and peaches nearly all gone, cherries and pears on low lands badly damaged, prunes much injured, wine grapes slightly damaged. Alameda—Two-thirds of a crop of vegetables, apricots and almonds nearly destroyed by frost. Lake—Grain suffering, almonds, apricots and nearly all peaches damaged. Santa Cruz—Grain and grass doing well, old prune trees not hurt, but young prunes nipped by frost, all apricots destroyed and peaches almost so. San Benito—Rain of Friday was of great benefit to grain not already dead. Monterey—A good crop of hay insured and probably grain. San Luis Obispo—Feed chances improved, light hay crop assured, some damage by frost to fruit. Eureka—Little damage reported from frosts, but confined to cherry and peach trees, grain and pasture conditions uniformly favorable, although retarded somewhat by frosts and north winds.

Southern California: Los Angeles—Frequent heavy frosts injured fruit blossoms; almonds, apricots, peaches and nectarines killed in localities, other districts report buds badly damaged but extent not yet known; rain temporarily beneficial. Ventura—Unirrigated lands and stock ranges suffering. Orange—Crops need rain. San Bernardino county—Light rain helped grain, but more is needed or not even hay will be made; fruit damaged. Riverside county—Frost damaged deciduous fruit and touched orange blossoms in exposed places, but Friday's rain made prospects for hay better; grain crop will be light. San Diego—Grain and feed growing slowly; fruit apparently uninjured.

Dairy Notes.

The law of the state of Oregon prescribes in the following manner how dairy herds shall be stabled and cared for. It appears wise and reasonable in its provisions. Certainly it prescribes nothing but what all will admit will promote the health and vigor of dairy herds if carried out. Section 4 reads:

When cows are kept by any person for dairy purposes either for butter or cheese, or for the production of milk or cream for sale, and are confined in stables, such cows so confined shall be allowed at least 800 cubic feet of air, such cows so stabled shall not be confined facing each other when closer together than six feet, unless there shall be an air tight partition between such cows at least four feet in height, and all stables where such cows are kept, shall be well ventilated and kept in good, healthful condition, and if any suspected diseased cow or other animal belonging to or kept in or about any dairy, the state dairy and food commissioner shall notify the state veterinarian, or if any dairy where cows are kept for the purpose above stated is found to be in a filthy and unhealthy condition, the commissioner may notify the proprietor that said dairy must be put in a healthful condition within three days, and should said proprietor neglect or refuse to comply with such order, then the commissioner may employ other persons to perform such duty, and said proprietor shall pay all expenses of such labor.

France takes the lead in the stringency of her laws regulating the sale of oleomargarine. The new French law now coming into operation prohibits all coloring of margarine, requires makers of margarine to register, subjects their factories to inspection, and requires them to specify the ingredients of their products. No margarine may be sold which contains more than ten per cent of butter, whether obtained from churning with milk or cream or directly added as butter. No commodity not exclusively composed of the constituents of milk or cream, with or without salt or coloring matter, is to be sold, imported or exported under the name of butter. A maker of butter must not keep margarine or oleomargarine on his premises, and these two commodities can be sold in only the special portions of markets set apart for them.

The Santa Clara County Medical Society have petitioned the Supervisors to resume the sanitary inspection of dairy cattle, as heretofore conducted, employing an inspector with an adequate salary. Leaving the inspector of dairy cattle to the owners is equivalent to stopping inspection so they say.

When milk is strained fresh drawn into cans and then the top of the can screwed tight down, foul, putrefying gases are generated which soon ruin the milk. Aerate and cool all milk before putting it into closed cans or crocks.

In warming milk for the little calves do not trust to a finger test when good thermometers are so cheap. There should be one in every dairy. Warm the milk to ninety degrees and if the calf scours have the milk as warm as it can drink for a few days.

A calf designed for the dairy should not be allowed to suck its mother, or at least not more than a day or two. The first milk is laxative and is believed by some to be beneficial, as it moves the young calf's bowels, whereas ordinary milk will not do so. But the best dairy men never allow the calf to suck. It is fed a small quantity of new milk, warm from the cow, for about a week; then gradually skim-milk is substituted, and when it is about two weeks old it is made to depend entirely on skim-milk. At this age, or soon after, it will begin to nibble a little hay, dry bran or corn meal. A very small quantity of meal at first, if spread thinly over a flat-bottom trough, will induce the calf to lick it up slowly and insalivate its food, thereby preventing any tendency to move the bowels too freely.

Creamery Notes.

Cream that is being ripened for churning, whether from the separator or by old methods, should be frequently stirred or mixed that the whole churning will ripen alike. When the mass thickens and runs off a wooden paddle smoothly, it can be counted on as being ready for churning. Churn at a low temperature and salt, work and prepare for market without allowing it to stand until next day.

A great many of the operators of small separators do not stop to think of many things in connection therewith in handling the cream as to best results in preference to keeping qualities or ripening for churning. Fresh cream should never be mixed with cream that is already cooled. Cool the new cream as soon as separated, then mix together by pouring from one vessel to another. This is the only sure way to obtain the best results.

Creamery men and butter dealers testify universally that the person the hardest to convince of the absolute necessity of cleanliness in regard to milk is the farmer. The butter maker and packer may do their work perfectly, the railroad may ship the product with the utmost care and in palace refrigerator cars, but if the farmer furnished dirty milk and cans to begin the case is hopeless.

The Danish butter gets its mild flavor, so much prized in Europe, from the use of starters which ripen the cream quickly. In Denmark there is sold to creameries and butter makers a pure pasteurized sour milk starter which hurries the cream on. It is regularly prepared in chemical laboratories and is of course free from any hurtful germs. It is called a pure culture starter.

Frank W. Luther, secretary of the Alton Creamery Co., has just completed his annual report of the operations of the company's creamery at Alton which shows a profitable season for the stockholders and furnishes some figures that will no doubt be of interest to dairymen generally. The company has thirty-seven patrons and from them received during the year 1,903.687 pounds of milk which gave an average test of 3.78 and contained 72,063.50 pounds of butter fat or the equivalent of one pound of butter to each 23.01 pounds of milk. There were shipped from the creamery during the year which ended Dec. 31st, 720 boxes and 6 tubs of butter, besides 12,259 pounds were sold at the creamery, making a total of 82,711 pounds disposed of. There were also sold 107 hogs fattened on skim milk. The cost of shipping the butter and the commissions amounted to 2.104 cents per pound and the average price received in San Francisco was 22.24 cents per pound.—Eureka Standard.

A Pig on Farm.

Nearly every boy in Sonoma county has kept pigeons at one time or another, but it remained for a Sonoma man to find out that money could be made raising young pigeons, or squabs for the market. W. G. Benton, who lives just west of Sonoma, keeps 1,000 old birds and ships to San Francisco every month from ten to twenty-five dozen squabs, for which he receives as high as $2.50 a dozen. All the birds are kept in an inclosure 30x60 feet. The walls and roof, save a narrow shed for nesting purposes, are of wire netting stretched on up-rights and cross pieces of lumber. This space seems small but the birds appear to have plenty of room and fly and wheel in air the same as though at full liberty.

The birds are fed twice a day two bucketsful of wheat peas or corn or a mixture of all three. For desert they get salt and charcoal and fine gravel. Once in awhile they are allowed a brick or two of salt codfish, but this treat, like Thanksgiving dinners, does not come every day. The pigeons are all colors and of no particular breed.

Each pair of birds has two nests. For about ten months out of the year there are eggs in one nest and young birds in the other. The pigeon comes near evolving the perpetual motion problem. The nests are crude affairs, and are used over and over till they are far from being sweet as new mown hay. Pigeons know nothing about cleanliness being next to godliness. The outside appearance of the nest is like the inside appearance of a tier of post office boxes. Ashed, boarded on the north and roofed, shelters the nests.

Squabs are shipped when two weeks old. When first born they are the size of a Japanese orange and are clothed only with their modesty. In a day or two they are twice as big and are feathered. At two weeks they are two-thirds the size of old birds but still depend on the mother bird for food. While very young the squabs are fed "pigeon milk," which is the half-digested food resurrected by the parent bird much as a cow recovers her cud. An old bird will fill up the young ones in short order. Many squabs are hatched on the ground, a thing to be deplored by the raiser, for the young birds soon run around and lose their fat. Then they are shut up and stuffed by hand for a few days till plumpness is regained.

The birds sell readily and yield a good return. The percentage of loss is small and but little time is required in caring for them. An old pigeon is worth little more than half what the two weeks old squabs bring.—Ed. C. Soule in Santa Rosa Republican.

Swine Notes

There is hardly a farm so diminutive in size that pigs cannot be made of use, with profit, in consuming products that would otherwise be wasted. With the young pig the tendency is to grow, and the exercise he takes tends to keep down an excessively fat condition. It is possible to overdo the matter of feeding, but the danger lies in underdoing. If fed with regularity, there is but little danger of feeding them too much, on the part of wise owners.

Select your breeding animals, both boars and sows, early, and get them in proper condition for breeding. To secure good-sized litters of strong, healthy pigs it is necessary to have both sire and dam in perfect health at time of mating. Enough boars should be used to get the breeding quickly done and not overtask a sire's capacity. A young boar should not serve but once a day, and an old one but twice. You will get stronger, more vigorous pigs and the better litters if you follow this practice. Never turn the boar loose into the lot with the sows, but return him to his own lot immediately after use. Have all your pigs come as nearly at the same time as possible. You can take care of them better and get an even growth. Early pigs are most profitable when suitable quarters are provided to save the pigs. A litter of four good March pigs will make you more money than a litter of six in the end of May.

By allowing a sow that is to bring her first litter to farrow a little late in the spring she can secure a good growth with her pigs and have time to recuperate so that she can be bred in good season in the fall and farrow her next litter in the latter part of winter or very early in the spring; and then she can be depended upon to bring two litters a year, provided, of course, that she has shown herself to be a good mother.

If the owner of a drove of hogs will put them into an alfalfa field divided into three parts he will get good results. Let the herd feed in one of these lots for a week and then transfer them to another of the partitions and at the end of the second week transfer them again. At the end of two weeks the field in which the hogs were first will be in good condition. Of course there are ways by which this plan will fail. If the owner drives in more hogs than the patch of land can support or if the field is old and played out, the hogs will not thrive and then the owner will advertise to the world that hogs cannot be fattened in this State.

When a man has six to ten or more brood sows, it is not best to breed them so as to farrow at the same time although it would give a bunch to feed at the same age. The weaker ones are apt to become more or less runty, and when they are ready for market one has to sell whether the market is up or down. It has been found more satisfactory to breed so that two or three sows will pig at the same time. Let the first farrow as early as February, and two or three more at intervals of two or three months, until October. This plan will give a bunch of from fifteen to twenty pigs to market between October and July, and taking the past as a standard the early fall and late spring markets are the highest.

Cattle Shifting.

Iowa is credited by the recent government report with having some 35,000 more cattle than in 1897, but 117,000 less than two years ago and 345,000 less than in 1895. Kansas has 260,000 more than last year and the largest number since 1892. Nebraska has 231,000 more than in 1897 and the largest number since 1894. The Dakotas have 20,000 more than last year and the largest number on record. Colorado has 13,000 more than last year and the most since 1894. Oklahoma has 40,000 more than in 1897 and the most on record. Texas shows a decrease of 454,000 from last year and about 2,400,000 decrease from 1890. These figures indicate a big shifting of supplies. In the aggregate there has been a loss of 8,760,000 from 1891.

Gapes.

This is one of the most destructive diseases that falls on the feathered tribe.

I will adopt the report of Dr. A. H. Halstead, of Rye, New York:

"A number of years ago in examining some young chicks just taken from the nest, I noticed on the heads some large insects. They were not lice, and after examining them closely I concluded they belonged to the tick family. I found the head of the insect was imbedded in the skin of the chick's head and so deeply that when I pulled them off the chick would cry out in pain. I have found from two to a dozen on a single chicken. I took the pains to pick all these insects off the heads of that brood, and examined them every few days until they were six weeks or more old, removing what few ticks made their appearance after the first operation. I did not follow it up in other broods, removing these more as an experiment to see what would follow. As the season advanced our chickens commenced to die off with the gapes. Some entire broods died, others in parts; but of this brood I did not lose one chick. The next season I resolved to try it on a larger scale, but found the picking of insects a tedious operation. I tried the application of cold grease to the head, but it would not answer. Then I tried mercurial ointment and killed a good many of the little chicks. Then tried kerosene oil with a like result. Next, meal and lard, and was partially successful with that; still, I had a few cases among those anointed. Finally I compounded an ointment as follows:

Mercurial ointment, 1 ounce; pure lard, 1 ounce; flour sulphur,  $\frac{1}{2}$  ounce; crude petroleum,  $\frac{1}{2}$  ounce.

This is applied to the head of the chick in a melted or semi-fluid state, and now for six years I have not lost a chick when the ointment has been applied at the time of taking the chicken from the nest.

It is well known that on all animals that don't perspire the parasites that infest the body make their way to the nostrils to drink, and in some cases (sheep for one) it is stated the parasites either penetrate the nostril and there deposit its egg or deposits it at the opening of the nostril, and it is conveyed by natural causes. This egg in time becomes a larva or worm and causes disease. In the chick the worm follows the nostril back until it reaches the opening of the trachea and there makes a lodgment. As they grow they gradually fill the opening and thus produce the gasping for breath consequent upon partial suffocation, which is called the gapes.

Gapes scarcely ever trouble a clean and dry yard, and the free use of carbolic disinfectant powders is an almost certain preventive, and on this, as on every other account, very desirable where chickens are reared in large numbers. When the disease, however, has entered a yard it may be checked in its progress by adding fluid carbolate, camphor, or even lime, to the drinking water. The sufferers themselves should be forced to inhale the vapor of carbolic acid. Some of the clear transparent quality may be placed in a spoon or metal saucer and held over a candle or lamp, when dense white fumes of the acid will arise, in these the chicken's head is immersed till the bird is nearly suffocated, or if a large number have to be treated the whole may be confined in a box and fumigated at once, being carefully watched through an aperture covered with a piece of glass, else the chickens will be killed as well as the worms.

This treatment is absolutely unailing. The vapor from sulphur burnt is also tolerably effective, but far from equal to that of the carbolic acid. Trusting I have not taken too much space in our valuable journal, I remain,

Yours respectfully,

Charlotte, Mich.

Hen Dyspepsia.

Charcoal is a simple medicine. It ought not to be needed in a poultry yard, but it is often required, because the fowls have been over-fed or not supplied with grit. The result is indigestion and sour stomach, which the charcoal will correct. It is a good plan to char a little corn on the cob once in a while and give them charcoal in this agreeable form; take an old dry corn and bake it in a hot oven until it is black to the cob; feed it fresh.—Massachusetts Ploughman.

ZOMBRO, 2:11

The Greatest Trotter in America.

Has trotted 40 heats as a three-year old better than 2:27 1-2, 31 in 2:20 or better and 12 in 2:15 or better. Won 13 races out of 17 starts as a three-year-old, and a total of $5,400 in his three-year-old form.

ZOMBRO, 2:11 (Registered No. 28,029), brown stallion, foaled in 1892, stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds, and is one of the most perfect formed horses in America. His career on the turf in 1895 stamps him as one of the greatest three-year-olds the world has ever seen.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, sired by McKinney, 2:11 1/4, son of Alcyone, by George Wilkes.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, first dam Whisper, by Almont Lightening, son of Almont 83, dam by Mambrino Pilot 29.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, second dam May Berry, by Kentucky Clay 194, whose dam is also the dam of Mambrino Patchen and Lady Thorne, 2:11 1/4.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, third dam by Edwin Forest 49.

Whisper, the dam of Zombro, was bred and raised by Gen. W. T. Withers, of Lexington, Ky., and is a handsome brown mare, 16 hands high, weighing 1,150 pounds. She has never been beaten in the show ring, always carrying off first prize.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, won the first prize over all three-year-old stallions at the Horse Show in San Francisco in 1895.

This grand stallion will make the SEASON of 1898 at SACRAMENTO RACE TRACK, from FEBRUARY 1st to JUNE 1st, 1898. Terms, $30 cash at the time of service.

Address,

SEYMOUR WILKES, 2:08 1/2

(REGISTERED 0232)

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

J. H. White's Stock Farm, Lakeville, Cal.

TERMS—$25 FOR THE SEASON

SEYMOUR WILKES was sired by the King of the Wilkes family, Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, dam Early Bird, by Playmail (brother to Barney, 2:25 1/4); second dam Lucy, by Odd Fellow (son of Chloroform); third dam by a son of Williamson's Belmont; fourth dam by Blackhawk 767. Playmail was by Mike 3408 (he by Vermont 322, out of the Peniger mare), out of Kate McDonough (dam of Ella Lewis 2:27, and granddam of Saladin, 2:05 1/4).

SEYMOUR WILKES stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds. He is a seal brown in color, and in conformation is one of the most symmetrical of any in California. His qualities as a level-headed, game and speedy race horse are known to all horsemen. He is the fastest son of the mighty Guy Wilkes, and on his maternal side traces to the very best of sires and dams. He has an iron constitution, and all owners of good mares that want horses that will have breeding, size, bone, quality, good disposition and extreme speed should not overlook this horse. His service fee is placed at a very low figure considering his merits. He never was bred but to a few mares, and his progeny are models of perfection.

Mares can be shipped direct to the ranch via steamer "Gold." The best of care taken of them on the farm, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Pasturage $3 per month. For further particulars apply to

TORSO

Will Make the SEASON of 1898 at the Parkview Stock Farm
(HALF MILE EAST OF SACRAMENTO.)

Chestnut horse, foaled 1886. Bred by HON. W. L. SCOTT, Algeria Stud, Pa.

TORSO	Algerine	Abd-el-Kader	Imp. Australian	West Australian
		Nina	Rescue	Imp. Emilia
	Lord Lyon	Lord Lyon	Boston	Berthune
		Imp. Santa Lucia	Imp. Frolicsome Fanny	Alice Carneal
TORSO	Lady Margarette	Lady Margarette	Stockwell	Timoleon
			Paradigm	Sister to Tuckahoe
	Retreat	Retreat	Honiton	Lottery
			Flax	Sister to Catterick
TORSO	Retreat	Retreat	Orlando	The Baron
			Flight	Pocahontas
	Retreat	Retreat	Orlando	Paragon
			Flight	Ellen Horne

Torso sired the following winners: Torsina, Joe Roger, Torello, True Love II, Tortosa, Una Que Amo, Torsion, Torsolene, Myrtle H., Tortenson, Sister Ella, Solution, Hearso, Torsida, Sculptor, Torchdance, The Shrew, Vana, Odds On, Cosina, Caricia, Restless, Our Johnny, Sweet Liberty, Tessa, Finanza (dead) and Merry Lass (dead).

During his two years of turf career, Torso won nearly $45,000. His full sister, Aurelia, was one of the best mares of her day, winning $20,385, and her first foal was last season's capital two-year-old performer, Aurelian. Their dam, imp. Santa Lucia, also threw the winners, Tasso and Aureole. She is a daughter of the triple event winner, Lord Lyon, and through him obtains the potent blood of Paradigm, who produced Achievement, and two of whose granddaughters are the dams of Ladas and Glare, two of the best two-year-olds in England in 1892.

Algerine, the sire of Torso, was a superior race horse, winner of the Belmont Stakes, etc., and is by Abd-el-Kader, out of Nina, by Boston. Abd-el-Kader (a full brother to the good four-miler, Abd-el-Koree), although badly hiped, was a fine race horse at all distances. He won a dash of four miles at Saratoga, in 1869, in 7:31½, a very creditable performance. Nina, the dam of Algerine, was one of the best race mares of her day. She was a winner at all distances, from one to four-mile heats, in good time, and produced Planet, one of the best horses in the country at all distances, and a successful sire, also Echequer, Ninette, Eclipse, etc.

Torso was a brilliant two-year-old. He won the first of the Double Events from a field of nine and also the second Double Event with a five-pound penalty, making his weight 123 pounds. In the Surf Stakes he beat Cayuga, St. James and four others, and in the Flatbush he defeated Reclaire, Onaway, Burlington and three others.

At three years of age he won the Lorillard Stakes, 1½ miles in 2:36½, from Tournament, Banquet, Badisha, Devotee, St. John, Burlington and Protection, a high-class field; was second to Burlington for the Brooklyn Derby, in front of Tournament, Padisha, Lisimony, Kenwood and four others; was second for the Equinoctial Stakes to Reclaire, beating Tournament and others, and carrying nine pounds more than he winner, and was third for the Omnibus Stakes, 1½ miles, carrying a penalty of five pounds.

TERMS $50 THE SEASON.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898. All bills payable not later than that date. Good pasturage at $5 per month.

Sire and Grandsire of ALL the 2:10 Performers ever Produced in Oregon and Washington.

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

Alameda, at $100 the Season.

(WITH USUAL RETURN PRIVILEGES.)

LIMITED TO TWENTY-FIVE MARES.

ALTAMONT shares championship honors with Baron Wilkes, a horse of great opportunities, in having six 2:10 performers to his credit. He has taken a leading position among the foremost trotting sires of the country under such conditions that phenomenal ability alone has saved him from oblivion. A very small proportion of his progeny has been trained, and an extremely small number of these by competent men. As a partial illustration of his meagre advantages, it may be stated that he has never produced a colt from a pacing-bred mare or from one with a fast record. Nor until 1897 had he ever been crossed with a descendant of George Wilkes, Electioneer, Dictator, Sidney or Dexter Prince. Oregon and Washington have produced seven 2:10 performers, and EVERY ONE of these are ALTAMONT'S.

ALTAMONT is a horse of iron constitution, and at twenty-three years of age is in the full vigor of his prime, a sure foal-getter, and, except for his blindness—the result of an accident—is without blemish. He has never sired a sorrel, all of his colts having been solid colors—bays, browns or blacks.

NOTE—Bessie Rankin, by Altamont, sold November, 1897, brought the highest price obtained for a harness horse at public auction in California during the year. Address

THE THOROUGHBRED STALLION

ZOBAIR

—SIRED BY—

ST. SAVIOUR, out of NIGHTHAWK, by HADDINGTON; second dam by NORFOLK, etc., to the thirteenth dam.

ZOBAIR is a bay stallion, foaled in 1890, and is one of the finest-looking thoroughbreds in America. His career on the turf compares favorably with any thoroughbred in America. He started 38 times, won 11, was second 9 times and third 7 times, and won almost $6,000 in purses.

ZOBAIR will make the SEASON OF 1898, ending JULY 1st, at the PETALUMA RACE TRACK. TERMS $25 THE SEASON.

Mares kept in any manner owners may desire. Facilities for doing so are first-class. Mares can be shipped per steamer "Gold." For pasturage, etc., apply to

MONTEREY, 2:13 3-4,

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT ALAMEDA

MONTEREY, 2:13¾	Hattie	Dam of	Cora Bell	Maud S	2:08½
			Iago	and six others.	2:11
	Monterey, 2:13¾	Dam of	Barous	Woodford Mambrino, 2:21	Sire of
			Hattie	Abbottsford	2:21½

If MONTEREY begets colts like himself he will prove to be the poor man's friend, for it will cost but little to bring them to the races.

MONTEREY had but five months' training before making his record of 2:13¾, last half in 1:03½. Last season I had no idea of getting him beaten, but his foot was injured in the blacksmith shop, consequently he had to be let up in his training. Previous to this unfortunate accident, I drove him a mile in 2:11¼, last half in 1:02½, last quarter in 30 seconds. This was done in the presence of 3,000 people about July 10th. I could have driven him better than 2:10, as he seems to be all right. I look for him to get the harness record this year, which ought to make his produce very salable.

MONTEREY is a thorough race horse, as he is level-headed and game as a pebble. He has a fine, resolute way of going a gait so much admired by all. A glance at his pedigree will convince any horseman that he is bred in the purple and is justly entitled to his extra speed. Every one of his family are producers of early and extreme speed.

MONTEREY is one of the gamest horses I ever drove, and, like his full brother, Montana, 2:16¾, the races are never too long for him. Montana won the Occident stake in seven heats and many a hard-fought race since.

Hattie, dam of Montana and Monterey, is a grand-looking bay mare, and I consider her one of the very strongest, as well as one of the best-bred mares in America. Her sire is strongly bred, and sires speed. To his credit may be mentioned Meteor, 2:17¼; Carrie Bell, 2:23½; the dams of Iago, 2:11; Fell-fare, 2:10¾; Galette, 2:12½, and thirteen others in the list.

I have every reason to expect that Monterey will be the "King of all Trotters." In color he is a rich chestnut, and in conformation he has strong loins and back, good shoulders, fine head and neck, and the best of feet and legs. He weighs 1,200 pounds and stands 15 3 hands.

I will have Monterey at my ranch at Milpitas any time mares are sent there.

TERMS, $50, With Usual Return Privileges.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898, as Monterey will then be prepared for the races. All bills payable not later than that date. Address all letters to

THE FLYERS OF THE TENNESSEE METROPOLIS.

MEMPHIS, Tenn., April 3, 1898.—[Special to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN].—Less than a week intervenes before the opening of the greatest race meeting ever held in the South. The New Memphis Jockey Club will throw open the gates of Montgomery Park next Saturday, April 9th, and very shortly after 2:30 o'clock Starter "Kit" Chinn's red flag will sweep through the air, and the racing season of 1898 will be on in earnest. Between now and the 9th there may be considerable shifting as to the possible starters in the Montgomery Handicap. Mr. Schorr will not start Meadowthorpe, as was first intended. The son of imp. Kantaka does not show up well in his work to give his owner encouragement enough to start him against such horses as Ornament, Boanerges, Salvable, Ulysses, Buckvidere, Marquise, Good Times, Forbush, Sidonian and that ilk, and unless Presbyterian does particularly well between now and next Saturday, J. W. Schorr & Son will be conspicuous by the absence of their colors in the Montgomery Handicap. Performance looked overtrained when she arrived from Mobile. She, too, may be absent from the list. However, as extraordinarily large fields do not usually result in true-run races, it will give better satisfaction if a field of not more than eight or nine go to the post. Ornament continues to be the center of attraction. The good son of imp. Order has worked another mile in 1:44, while his stable companion, May Hempstead, negotiated a half in 0:50. She has the two Nashville stakes at her mercy. Buckvidere has again worked a mile in 1:47½, and Abe Cahn thinks he has a right royal chance for the Montgomery Handicap. Good Times, too, is thought to be a dangerous factor. All of the candidates are in the best possible condition and are ready to race.

Pat Dunne's stable, which will be at Montgomery Park by April 5th, includes the following list of horses:

Flying Dutchman, 6, ch h, by imp. Wagner—Glen Mercy.
Salvable, 5, b h, by Salvator—Lydia.
Estaca, 4, b h, by Emperor of Norfolk—Clenega.
Rey Salazar, 3, b g, by Emperor of Norfolk—Cleopatra.
Swango, 3, b c, by Onondaga—Nirvana.
Rathmore, 3, ch c, by Stratmore—Zella.
Friar John, 3, b c, by Vagabond—Acra.
Declan, 3, ch c, by Hindoo—Miss Moore.
Cambrian, 2, ch c, by Hindoo—Cambria.
Peless, 2, br c, by Hindoo—Peru.
Alyar, 2, b c, by Himyar—Aileen Aroon.

Survivor, 2, b c, by Strathmore—Ella F.
Approval, 2, br c, by Pessara—Rupert.
Prince Harry, 2, br c, by Harry O'Fallon—Nyleptha.

Joseph Tighe is under trainer, and Willie Martin sports the green, white cap, for Mr. Dunne.

Capt. S.S. Brown's stable are already at the track in charge of Trainer H. Bondy. Jockey Charlie Kuhn will ride for the "Coal King." The stable consists of:

Performance, b m, 4, Troubadour—Matinee.
Esonite, b f, 3, Stuyvesant—Garnet.
Wace, br 6, 3, Troubadour—Daylight.
Voyager, br 6, 3, Troubadour—Eukonia.
Sam Sturge, blk g, 2, Troubadour—Tenorita.
Euko, blk g, 2, Troubadour—Eukonia.
Fizzle, br g, 2, Troubadour—Eoline.
John Mannion, br g, 2, Troubadour—Eva Rogers.
Troubeam, br f, 2, Troubadour—Sunbeam.
Good Morning, b f, 2, Troubadour—Daylight.
Drop Curtain, ch f, 2, Troubadour—Matinee.
Diser, blk f, 2, Troubadour—Katie A.
Soldier, br f, 2, Troubadour—Sunlight.
Nunkey Mo, blk g, 2, Stuyvesant—Garnet.
Viol, b f, 2, Blue Wing—Viola.

The two-year-olds are a strong, healthy-looking lot and will give a good account of themselves.

The Tennessee Derby promises a most interesting race. The probable starters and jockeys are: Lieber Karl, 122 (T. Burns); Bannockburn, 122 (Morrison); Isabay, 122 (Knapp); Swango, 122 (W. Martin); Goodrich, 112 (R. Williams); Libation, 119 (Simme); Gallivant, 122 (——); Etholin, 122 (Garner).

The talent have begun to come in and the hotels and streets present a "horsey" appearance. The bookmakers who will draw in here, that have already sent word they would be on hand, are Col. W. E. Applegate, Riley Grannan, Geo. C. Bennett, Marcus Cartwright, "Kid" Weller, Geo. Walbaum, "Kid" Rogers, Marsh Redon, R. W. Chambers, G. A. Tilles, Leo Mayer, Bud White, Hoffman Bros., Hugh Jones, "Virginia" Carrol, Ben Falk, W. H. Laudeman, John Fay and others. It is estimated that at least twenty-five (25) will be on hand for the opening day. The officers for the meeting are: President, S. R. Montgomery; Secretary, M. N. MacFarlan; Judges, Col. M. Lewis Clark, M. N. MacFarlan, F. G. Jones; Starter, Christopher Chinn; Patrol Judge, H. E. Keough; Executive Committee, S. R. Montgomery, (ex-officio), C. C. Cowan, Kennedy Jones, A. S. Caldwell, George Arnold.

TRAVELER.

TRAVESER'S CALIFORNIA DERBY WIN.

The California Derby was a surprising disappointment. It was surprising to most persons that Traverser should last out to win after stopping at a mile in his last race at Oakland. It was disappointing that the California Derby should be captured by a Kentucky-bred galloper. But when the smoke of the battle had cleared away and one looked back at the field that lined up to the barrier the thought naturally arose: "What horse had speed enough to carry Traverser even a quarter of a mile?" and the answer was: "Not one." Thus it was that Traverser went quickly to the fore, leading his stable companion, Recreation, by one and one-half lengths passing the stand, Linstock by three lengths at the quarter and by two and one-half lengths at the half-mile ground, where the brown Kentucky colt was as straight as a string, driven for dear life by "Toddy" Sloan. Recreation's head bobbed close by the side of hooded Linstock, and at their heels thundered Morello, head and head with Borgia, who had been cut off at the quarter pole. Traverser entered the homestretch two lengths to the good, with Recreation second, a head before Borgia, who had been bumped by the Morello filly on the final turn. Traverser was against the inner rail, running as true as steel, Clayton taking no chances. Recreation cut across to the inside fouling both Morello and Linstock. Once straightened away in the home stretch Borgia gained at a great rate, but the distance was too short, and Traverser, who could not have gone a quarter of a second faster, dashed in a winner by a length, the unfortunate Borgia (about the cleverest maiden seen in half a dozen years) second, four lengths before Recreation, who beat the tiring Linstock two. Napamox had been caught in the webbing, and was out of the race. The time was 2:08½, a good performance with 122 pounds up. The victory was quite a popular one, even if a Kentuckian did finish first, and as the riders of the first and second horses were "gemmen of color," there was great jubilation among the "coons," especially. The fractional time was: ½, :26, ½, :50½, ¾, 1:16; mile, 1:41½ 1½m. 2:08½.

The winner is bred as follows:

TRAVERSE, ch c, foaled 1895.	Imp. Rossington	{	Doncaster .....	{ Stockwell .....	{ The Baron Pocahontas
			{	Marigold .....	{ Teddington Dau. of Ratan
		Betsy Broeck		{	Lily Agnes .....	{ Macaroni .....
			{		Polly Agnes .....	{ The Cure Miss Agnes
	{			Ten Broeck .....	Imp. Phaeton .....	{ King Tom Merry Sunshine
			Fanny Holton .....		{ Lexington Nantura
		{	Mary Owsley .....	Longfellow .....	{ Imp. Leamington Nantura
				Sally Shelby .....	{ Cracker Phoebe Neal (by Bob Letcher)

And on to the 8th dam, by Top Gallant.

Traverser's breeding is quite fashionable as far as it goes, but the pedigree does not extend far on the dam's side of the house. Billy Cheatham, one of the good early-day racers of California, comes from the same family on the mother's side, as did Sir Reel, a fair performer of later days. The Ten Broeck, Longfellow and Boston blood in Traverser doubtless helps him to go a long journey. He is a big, well-turned, handsome chestnut colt, and it is to be regretted that he has to be sent back to his owner, R. ("Virginia") Bradley, by May 1, 1898.

BURNS HANDICAP WEIGHTS.

The Burns Handicap, value $10,000 is the richest stake race run on any track in the winter season, and it is the largest stake to be decided west of New York this year. Last year's race was won by Porter Ashe's Ruinart. Handicapper Brooks announces the following weights and conditions for the season's race, which is to be decided next Saturday at the Oakland track:

The Burns Handicap, purse $10,000—A handicap for all ages; entrance, $20; $30 additional for horses not declared by 4 P. M. day after weights are announced; $100 additional for starters; the California Jockey Club to guarantee the value of the stakes to be $10,000 of which $2,000 to second and $1,000 to third horse. Weights to be announced five days before the race. Horses not declared before 1 P. M. the day preceding the race to be liable for full starting fee. Winners of any race other than a selling purse after weights are announced to carry five pounds extra; if handicapped at less than weight per age, seven pounds extra; one mile and a quarter.

The following horses have been declared: Tim Toolan, Caspar, Mt. McGregor, Eain, Lucky Dog, Grandan, Loki, Schiller, Don Carillo, Grayhurst, Aquinas, Marquise, Imp. Trance, Rey del Santa Anita; dead, Catawba, Posey.

Several turf critics have decried the action of Handicapper Brooks in putting 128 pounds on the top-notchers, but we say it is none too high, and the day will come when California owners will not think 130 pounds too much weight. The time "fad" is dying away, and race-goers are now looking for close contests more than the making of fast time. Handicappers cannot bring the good and the bad together if the top-weighter is in at 120 or 122 pounds, and the "dog" at 80 or 85 pounds, for at the latter weight an owner generally has to trust his horse to a "pin head" of a rider, and the animal would probably run a better race at 100 or 105 pounds than at 80 or 85. The above handicap is not at all bad, and about the only real flaw we find in it is putting 128 pounds on The Roman, a four-year-old, and rather on the small side. The writer knows the trouble experienced by handicappers in getting acceptances, knows of the growls and senseless kicking of owners that often scratch out when they have the best of matters, and probably Mr. Brooks has become hardened to all the kicks aimed at him a long time ago.

HORSEMANSHIP IN WAR.

In a treatise published in 1865 Ker B. Hamilton remarked that action was the great quality in a saddle horse. Safety and comfort demanded in the saddle a shorter and more active stroke than that of the pacer. While climate does something for the horse, judicious culture does more. This is made clear by the rapid way in which the horse deteriorates when he escapes from the intelligent dominion of man. When the Ark rested on Ararat and the horse stepped out in primeval strength and beauty, evidences of generations of culture were stamped upon him. Noah had selected for preservation the best type, the one which had been bred up and thoroughly domesticated. Rollin says in his ancient history of the Egyptians: The Scripture in several places speaks advantageously of their cavalry horses, and chariot races were performed in Egypt with wonderful agility and the world could not show better horsemen than the Egyptians. The horses of Egypt were superior to those of Arabia. Theocritus compared Helen, the finest woman in the universe, to a horse in a Thessalian chariot. This is proof of the high form to which the horse had then attained by cultivation. The Crusaders were the means of introducing many Eastern horses into England. Cromwell was quick to see how the prosperity of the country was connected with the improvement of horses, and he established a breeding stud. He was owner of White Turk and the Coffin mare and he appreciated in his cavalry the value of shape, action and power of endurance in the horse. One of the horses introduced by William III was the Byerly Turk, and he established a riding school. The Darley Arabian was introduced in the reign of Queen Anne, and twenty years later came the Godolphin Arabian. He was 15 hands high and of strength and symmetry, excepting his chest. Mr. Coke, who brought him to England, presented him to Mr. Williams, proprietor of the St. James Coffee House, who presented him to Lord Godolphin. He was not considered as worthy of trial as a sire until after he had been accidentally mated with Roxana and produced Lath. Mr. Hamilton believes that the Godolphin was a Barb, who found his way through Spain into France. "The suggestion is that he may have crossed the French frontier as the horse of a Captain of contrabandistas, and so got into the hands of Frenchmen as a stray horse or as one sold cheap, after his rider had fallen in a fight or been taken prisoner or died. This is consistent with the fact that the horse was taken out of a cart in Paris and that his value was never known in France." If Spain had been as progressive as some other nations she would now boast of the best cavalry horse in the world, because her foundation blood was of the right quality. But her system was such that the horse retrograded instead of advanced, and her mounts are inferior to those of England, France and the United States. The horse which is exposed to cold, starvation and neglect, who is bred without regard to selection and the laws of heredity, diminishes in size and loses the symmetry, the balance which makes him serve the higher purposes of man. Much depends upon food and culture. The seat of the cavalryman, founded on the principles of equitation, is the firmest and best seat. "Horsemanship," says Hamilton, "should form part of the education of every cultured person. The order of knighthood is equestrian, and, in strictness, attorneys general and solicitors general, before being invested with knighthood, should give evidence that they know how to use the bridle and the spur. In a riding school the correct principles of riding may be quickly learnt, and in after life you can practice on these principles." When the martial spirit comes over us thoughts about riding and the best kind of horse to ride in war will not down. They are with us even when the government is spending millions on cruisers and battle ships.—Turf, Field and Farm.

THE VALUE OF SEX.

The mare has a warmer place in the heart of the Oriental than the stallion. It is claimed that she is pleasanter to ride, supports heat and thirst better and does not betray her master's camp or ambush by neighing. In discussing the agricultural horse of England, Pease says: "Granted that the average gelding is larger and stronger than the average mare, I would respectfully maintain that he has not as a rule the stamina, courage and wear-and-tear qualities to an equal extent with the mare which has not undergone, as he has that mutilating process which must emasculate him as it does every animal upon which it is performed. Not only will the average mare wear longer than the average gelding, but she will earn her keep equally well and present her owner, if is carefully attended to at the right time, with a foal almost every year." In slow farm work a mare can be used almost up to the day of foaling, but it is better to allow her more latitude than this. If you buy a gelding for the road or track and he falls lame, he is dead material on your hands. A mare that is lamed by accident will throw just as good foals as one that has met with no injury to feet or legs. The presumption is that the free use of the knife places only the best individuals in reproductive channels and thus improves the breed, but the presumption is not always correct. Too many weedy looking horses are kept entire, while now and then one of great individual excellence is reduced to gelding ranks. Just at this time the American breeder of thoroughbreds would rather have a male than a female foal. The colt can be kept in better condition to race than the filly, and fortune or something has favored him in getting to the front in big events. Domino, Dobbins, Henry of Navarre, Handspring, Don de Oro, Ogden, Ben Brush, The Friar, Hastings, Octagon, Ornament, Hamburg, Voter and Typhoon II. are stake-winning examples which cannot be overlooked. The trotting horse breeder, as rule, would say, if given a choice, fill my paddocks with fillies. There are so many stallions that the knife would have to be used on colts, and the mare is regarded as more useful and valuable than the gelding. If we had a law by which sex could be produced at will, a feeling of content would be general. But no theory has yet been presented for producing sex at will which will stand a cold, practical test.

It seems a pity that the turf should lose such a rider as Arthur Hinrichs. He is away above the average horse pilot in point of intelligence and bearing, and the boy had few superiors in the pigskin out this way, it will be remembered. He started in the business of riding races at the East St. Louis merry-go-round, if memory serves us right, and drifted to San Francisco, nearly 2,000 miles away from his home. Here the lad met a "fly" crowd and was illy advised, getting mixed up in the "Little Pete" scandal, which resulted in his being warned off the track by the C. J. C. officials. Afterward he could not get a Turf Congress or a Jockey Club license to ride, and, being married, had to look to the outlaw tracks for a livelihood. It should be borne in mind that Hinrichs was not "ruled off" by the C. J. C., but "warned off." All the way through his troubles President Williams has shown a kindly feeling for Hinrichs, but for whom the "Little Pete" affair might never have been made public. The young man, like many another wrong-doer on the turf, has been deserted by those that pretended to be his friends, and now finds himself on the dark side of Financial street. As there were circumstances tending to Hinrichs' disgrace leading those with pity in their souls to feel for the little fellow that possessed such rare riding ability, we make the suggestion that the erstwhile idol of the San Francisco race-going public be allowed to ride "on probation" for some reputable turfman for the balance of this year, and if at the end of that time he has acquitted himself well and honorably, he should be granted a license to ride; if, on the contrary, he fails to do right after being given an opportunity to reinstate himself in the good graces of the public, he should be kept forever on the other side of race track fences, where races could not be observed and from the sight and company of honest men and women. Many will contend that Hinrichs is "a bad one," and should never be allowed to ride, but they should take into consideration all the circumstances of his case before declaring against the young man, who has undoubted ability as a jockey, one who has a wife to support and a most dismal life prospect before him if the hand of mercy is not extended instead of a club.

FLASHLIGHT, winner of the Alameda Handicap on Monday last, has run a mile in 1:40 or thereabouts oftener than any horse that ever raced in California, and still he is not considered a top-notch, by any means. If memory serves us right, the son of Surinam and Laura Winston has run miles in 1:40 or close to it over the old Oakland track, over the new one and over old Bay District course, and was also the first horse to beat 1:41 on the new Oakland track. The big bay horse also ran a mile and a sixteenth at Oakland in 1:46½, seven furlongs in Montana in 1:28 and a mile in 1:41½, both considered very fast runs. As a two-year-old Flashlight ran seven furlongs with 122 lbs. up in 1:27½ at Bay District, and seemed to take to timber-topping like a duck to water, proving one of the best "leppers" ever seen in California, with the ability to pack heavy weights and go long routes over the sticks. He appears to be as sound as the proverbial dollar, and a handsomer individual would be hard to find as well as a more staunchly built racing craft. Flashlight was one of the first of the Surinams to race, and we believe cost T. W. Moore $900 as a yearling, Billy Murry, he of the emaciated body, training him afterward for the Santa Barbara turfman. Mr. Moore was so much in love with Surinam that he purchased the horse and a few broodmares, and now has them on a ranch in Southern California. It's too bad that Surinam has not had a better chance. He sired the crack colt, Armitage, that was sent to England after he had defeated many good ones in this country; he also sired Palomacita, Don Clarencio, Little Bob, Big Strive and Flashlight.

A COUPLE of totalizators similar to the ones used in Australia and New Zealand are on their way to this country, consigned to an Australian at present sojourning in this city. That they will eventually take the place of the bookmaker in America is our honest belief, and we base it on the fact that most persons would much rather make their own odds than have some sharp pencil put down the prices for them. Besides, the machines cannot talk to dishonest jockeys or their agents, and if a job is put up where the "tote" is in use the winner has to be picked, that's certain, and it's not so easy to do that, for some "outsider" might spoil the racing broth. There will be no "dividing the sheet" where the machines are at work, and the chances for the practice of fraud are materially cut down. It strikes us that keeping the door to fraudulent practices as tightly closed as possible is the correct thing, and the man that introduces into this country the machine which is so popular in the Colonies will be looked upon as a public benefactor ere many years have passed away, for the practice of fraud will be reduced to a minimum through their workings and racing clubs using "totes" will profit financially through them, for we have repeatedly shown that with a charge of 5 per cent. commission the clubs would make considerably more money than they do at present, which is saying a great deal.

THE Clinton restricting ordinance has been laid over again by our Supervisors, and when the smoke has cleared away it will probably be found that the City Fathers haven't a leg to stand upon, not an argument that cannot be knocked into smithereens in two minutes. Either racing is or is not beneficial to a city. If it isn't beneficial, then forty-eight days per year is dead wrong, even. If it does benefit the butcher, the baker, the candlestick maker, the restaurant and hotel-keeper, give employment to hundreds of men and boys and keep up to a high standard the grand industry of raising thoroughbred horses, then it's a good thing, and we cannot get too much of it. Stocks are sold six days per week the year around in San Francisco, and if there is a worse "cinch" game on earth we have never heard of it. Why don't the City Fathers legislate against the stock exchange?

THE Minnesota State Agricultural Society will give a great "mixed" in August, good purses being offered for trotters, pacers and gallopers. The contests will take place over the far-famed Hamline track, and over $20,000 will be hung up for owners of light harness horses and festive flyers. Secretary E. W. Randall has already prepared a programme which is calculated to make happy the owners of race horses of all kinds.

A PHOENIX man has lately created quite a stir on the turf at San Francisco, but he won't do it any more unless he changes his name and conceals his identity. He has been ruled off. That calamity occurred last Thursday. He is Al Goodin, a brother of Doc Goodin and the other Goodin boys, and is a horse trainer by profession. The charge against him is that of introducing a "ringer" under an assumed name upon the track to take part in races far below his ability so that the honest horses in the race had no chance at all. The "ringer" was not discovered until after the showing he made set other horsemen to investigating his record. Goodin left here with a lot of horses for California about two weeks ago. Local horsemen say that he took no "ringer" with him, but his wide acquaintance in southern California would enable him to acquire one or more on his way to Frisco.—Phoenix (Ariz.) Republican.

RACING then and now. When the racehorses first congregated on Smithfield Bottom to run for the bell there was a huge amount of interest taken in the events, if even the money consideration was small when compared with those of later days. That was before horses from the Orient were imported into Merry England, at least none of the progenitors of the "three leading lines" had made their appearance. The native breeds were not devoid of speed, however, and, notwithstanding experts like to dwell on the Barbs, Turks and Arabians, there is still a chance for argument that a part of the good qualities of the present day racehorse were inherited from those to the manor born. The Isle of Man, when the Stanleys held sway, had great sport in the way of racing, and with a far stronger resemblance to modern racing than Homer described. The entablatures of the temples, built 5,000 or more years before the Christian era, show fair specimens of the race horse, and it may be that some earlier pictures will be brought to light carrying race horses even so far back in the dim and misty past.

ACE, winner of the Ullman Stakes, is a brown six-year-old gelding by Fabulous out of Punnie. Fabulous is by Long-fellow out of Felicia (half sister to Falsetto), by imp. Phœton; second dam Farfaletta, by imp. Australian; third dam Elkhorna, by Lexington; fourth dam Glencona, by imp. Glencona, and tracing through the famous Miss Obstinate, by Sumpter, to the Layton Barb mare. Punnie, dam of Ace, is by imp. Kyrle Daly; second dam Flotsam, by Waverly; third dam Ida May, by Planet; fourth dam Charlotte Buford by Lexington; fifth dam Kitty Clark, by imp. Glencon, &c. No wonder Ace is a stayer!

PEIXOTTO, who won the first race yesterday in such easy fashion, cannot run at Ingleside, under the Turf Congress rules, because he is not registered with the Jockey Club and cannot be until the breeding of Veto is established to the satisfaction of Jockey Club Registrar Wheeler. This particular Veto (which stood in Missouri in the late '40's) is the sire of the dam of Tyree's Veto. Peixotto is by imp. Brutus, dam by imp. Kelpie, second dam by Tyree's Veto. We have been trying hard for months to establish the Missouri Veto's pedigree.

BILLY TIMMONS, who is making matters warm for race-horse owners in this vicinity, is a New Jersey man who, as we understand it, forsook a tailoring establishment several years ago to enter the ranks of trainers. At the business of conditioning racers he was quite successful and at playing the gallopers he was equally good. He is a fine judge of conformation and values, and is not to be confounded with the Timmons of Timmons & Marks, owners of Marquise et al. That Timmons is a Kansas City business man.

Saddle Notes.

THE fast horse Damocles is reported to have become a roarer.

JAMES F. CALDWELL has been engaged to do the starting at Oakley this year.

ALGOL has been well backed to win the Metropolitan Handicap at Morris Park.

CHARLIE BOOTS may take in the Montana circuit this summer with a small string.

JOCKEY N. HILL, ruled off at New Orleans three years ago, has been reinstated. He is at Little Rock and will ride there.

J. NAGLEE BURKE had three youngsters this season by Crescendo, and, strange to say, all are bays, while the sire is rich chestnut.

NEWPORT will get its full share of horses, bookmakers and other material. Ed Austin has done strong missionary work in its interests.

FAIRY ROSE, dam of Racine, Fairy, Rosomonde and other well-known racehorses, is barren this year and has been stunted to St. Carlo.

THE Turf Congress License Committee has concluded to give Jockey Bloss a chance, and has given him a license to ride at Little Rock.

WILLIAM BOOTS, father of C. T. Boots, and proprietor of the Elmwood Stock Farm, was at Ingleside Saturday to see Borgia run in the Derby.

BACKWATER from the swollen Ohio river now covers the Newport race track several inches deep. The stables are yet high and dry, however.

THE difficulty between Jockey C. Combs and his employers, Tomlinson & Co., has been smoothed over and the boy will rejoin the stable at Memphis.

EX-JOCKEYS GARNER and Slaughter have dissolved partnership as horse owners, and Garner will resume riding, probably for his former employer, G. C. Bennett.

TRAINER JIMMY McCORMICK sold two of the Burns & Waterhouse horses Tuesday. Dan Honig secured Elmore for $400, while W. P. Magrane got Parthemax for $800.

JOCKEY JOE PIGGOTT rode for his new employer, H. L. Frank, for the first time March 31st, and piloted the winner, imp. Bitter Root, in fine style. Piggott is a dead square boy and is in the front rank as a rider.

THE License Committee of the American Turf Congress has refused to grant licenses to Jockeys Morse and W. H. Blake for various reasons. Morse is well known to racegoers and Blake is a well-known Canadian rider.

J. T. FOGG, the former owner of Benamela, took Gotobed away from Atkins & Lottridge by bidding $1000 on the three-year-old. He was entered to be sold for $700 yesterday, although he has been in at $200 on several occasions.

CLIMACUS, winner of the first race at Little Rock last Friday, is by Riley from Ada Rees, dam of the well-known steeplechase horse, Captain Rees. Sire and dam are owned by Mr. Corrigan, who was delighted to hear of the colt's success.

THE first race at Little Rock, for two-year-olds, was won by Sir Blaze, a black colt by Blazes—Sarah. He belongs to F. Leigh. Gay Parisienne, a bay filly by the California-bred horse, Tournament, out of Princess Iskra, won the two-year-old filly race, half a mile.

LILY WRIGHT (by California), dam of Olinthus, Sutton and Diggs, is again in foal to Red Iron. She will be sent to Milpitas shortly and this season will be bred to imp. Brutus. Mr. Diggs has a yearling colt, brother to Diggs, Sutton and Olinthus, on his farm near Woodland.

ED TIPTON says that everyone who went to Montana last season will go there this year, and many others have promised to go. New Orleans will send one and possibly two carloads. Montana has more horses in training than ever before, all of which indicates a grand meeting this summer.

"LONGSHOT" CONLEY's departure for Louisville, Ky., Monday morning created quite a vacancy in the jockey ranks. He goes to ride for W. F. Schulte, President of the New Louisville Jockey Club. Raleigh Colston, well-known here, trains Mr. Schulte's gallopers, and has been a good friend to Conley.

SID REGAN returned Hohenzollern to Mr. Boots and brought Hermoso back at Ingleside. It transpired, however, that Mr. Gray had collected the $1,075 purchase money, and as the gentleman failed to return it, the horse was turned over again to Regan, who expressed his willingness to take him at the price.

GEORGE E. SMITH raced six horses last year, and they earned for him the sum of $22,475. Of this Howard Mann won $10,715, Rubicon, $4,295, The Winner, $3,185, Belmar, $2,955 and Beldemere, $1,325. His horses started forty-eight times, were first in nineteen races, second in twelve and third in seven.

A YOUNG MAN stood looking at Barney Schreiber's book last Saturday. A tout came along, and spotting the newcomer, said: "Say, did you see who that big fellow is who bet that great wad of money on Linstock?" "Oh, yes," was the quiet reply, "that was Riley Grannan!" The tout sneaked off to recover his breath.

ON account of the suspicious and unsatisfactory performances of Albert S. Laird & Hand were prohibited from running horses at the present meeting, either as a firm or individuals. Jockey L. Smith was suspended from riding for the remainder of the meeting, one day.—New Orleans dispatch, March 29th.

ENGLAND possesses the only woman trainer of race horses. She is an English woman, Mrs. Chaloner, widow of a once prominent jockey and trainer in the British Isles. She took up his life work where he left off and has made an enviable reputation in horse circles, would-be-purchasers of horses often seeking her opinion.

CHARLES PATTERSON will take but four horses East to race—Ornament, May Hemstead, Burlesque (4) and Heber Jones (2). He also has a yearling by Order—Happy Sallie II, a half brother to The Winner and Content. The other ten which were in his string he has given to his brother George Patterson and Hiram Pierce.

WRITING from New Orleans, Sunday, a correspondent says: "The exodus of horses and horsemen set in to-day. The route of most of them is by way of Nashville and Memphis. As the Chicago season does not open as early as usual this year, many who would otherwise go direct to Lakeside will take in the Tennessee meetings.

ED TIPTON has returned from his visit to Rancho del Paso, and is very enthusiastic about the California breeding place. He declares that he has not seen any finer sucklings or yearlings on any breeding farm, and says if the crop on the great ranch does not create a sensation in turf circles they might as well not try to raise thoroughbreds in California.

STEEPLECHASE Rider Welch was ruled off the Ingleside track Saturday. He rode a foul race on Foremost, carrying Tortoni wide, and further aggravated matters by striking Kinney, who was up on Tortoni, with his whip during the race. When called into the stand he was badly intoxicated, so the judges thought racing would get along just as well without him.

CHARLES PATTERSON, owner of Ornament, says: "I will match Ornament at a mile and a quarter against The Friar at any time during the Memphis spring meeting, for any purse the Memphis Jockey Club may choose to hang up, and I will bet $5,000 besides that Ornament will win. This is open not only to The Friar, but to any horse in the world, weight for age."

MR. HORATIO BOTTOMLEY, who recently purchased the Derby candidate Hawfinch for $25,000, won his first race two weeks ago in a selling steeplechase at Plumpton, England, with the four-year-old Rigo. Rigo is an American-bred colt, by Longfellow—Rena B. Twelve horses started, and Rigo won in a canter. Entered to be sold at $250, the colt was bought in at $1,150.

H. O. TROWBRIDGE, W. V. Witcher and Charles D. Bates have been invited to handle the arrangements for Fabiola Derby Day at the California Jockey Club track at Emeryville. The proceeds will be turned over to the Fabiola Hospital. President T. H. Williams Jr. of the Jockey Club will announce the date very soon. Efforts will be made to have a large turnout of private equipages.

THERE is little question now that all adverse ordinances, whether municipal or state, will not, at least, receive the sanction of a large majority of the people of California. Fairly established, that whatever the opponents of racing may claim, that the recreation has many and warm friends, and if there were a poll of the State at large, an "overwhelming vote" in favor of sustaining the "royal sport."

STEEPLECHASE JOCKEY "Squeak" Allmark departed for the East Tuesday evening in the same car which carried Champion Lightweight Jockey James Tod Sloan. On February 28th, with a $20 piece as his bank roll to begin operations with, "Squeak" bet the "works" on Primevera, a 15 to 1 chance, and drew down $320. Since that time he met with a phenomenal streak of luck, taking away with him over $8,000 in hard cash.

ALL the horses belonging to the firm of Respass & Sharpe will be sold at public auction on the opening day of the Newport meeting. The sale was ordered by the Kenton County Circuit Court, and is for the purpose of settling up the estate of the late Sol Sharpe. The horses that will be offered are Goose Liver, Elusive, Covington Ky, Fred Broens, Esther R., Thorpe and four two-year-olds.

THERE is trouble ahead for the bookmakers who persist in running pool-rooms in St. Louis in violation of the breeders' law. Hereafter they will be dealt with by the grand jury, and not by officials. The February grand jury, now in session, sprung a surprise by indicting Samuel H. Stephens, George Lowe and Michael P. Finan, who have defied the police by running a poolroom. The penalty is quite severe and will be enforced.

It looks now as if there will be fifteen starters for the Burns Handicap on Saturday. The sure starters are Ostler Joe, Satsuma, Buck Massie, Traverser, Candelaria, Linstock, Morellito, Fleur del Lis, Marplot, Scarborough, Vincter and Fonsovannah. There is also a possibility of several more starters from among Senator Bland, Judge Denny, Won't Dance, Wheel of Fortune, Bitter Root, Buckwa, Scarfin, Newgatherer and Salvation.

W. B. VOSBURGH, official handicapper of the Jockey Club, has been appointed a representative of Messrs. Wetherby, London, England, to receive, cable and confirm entries to English events made by American turfmen. The necessity of such a representative has arisen with the increased interest and participation in English racing by Americans. It will insure accuracy, and at the same time will be much more convenient for American owners.

PLEASANTON. There are two running races in the programme to be decided on the Pleasanton track, Saturday, April 30th. The Pleasanton Hop Company's Stake, three-quarters of a mile, and the Merriwa Stake, one mile, the first-named free-for-all, weight for age, the second a handicap, purses being alike, $200 each. The entries close Friday, April 15th. It should certainly result in capital sport these trotting and pacing races in addition to the racing stakes.

H. EUGENE LEIGH has sold to Gen. W. H. Jackson, Belle Meade Stud, Tenn., the following brood mares. Ma Belle, foaled in 1888, by imp. Charaxus, dam Ada Belle, by Eolus, Clotho, foaled in 1889, by imp. Kantaka, dam Clio, by imp. Rayon d'Or; Micmac Queen, foaled 1891, by imp. Midlothian, dam Patty, by Longfellow, and Fanny Essler, foaled 1892, by imp. Sir Modred, dam La Scala, (dam Sir Walter) by Joe Hooker. Ma Belle is in foal to Tenny and Fanny Essler to Kingston.

JAMES DUPEE the jockey who has been very successful in the saddle at New Orleans, weighs less than eighty pounds but he is a smart boy for his age, so much so that several owners have tried to nail him for the season. "Charley" Patterson was the lucky individual to secure the boy. He will come east with Patterson's horses this spring and ride on the eastern tracks. It is claimed that he has perfect hands and sits a horse as comfortably as the late Isaac Murphy used to do. Dupee is a colored boy.

STARTER FITZGERALD will leave Wednesday night for London, Ont., where his family has spent the winter, and will arrive in New York a few days before the season opens on April 25th at Aqueduct. Judge Clarence McDowell goes at once to Washington. Colonel R. W. Simmons will remain here until the opening of Morris Park. Secretary Clark will remain here to superintend the rearranging of the track and the erection of new buildings, which work will commence at once when the present meeting comes to an end.

THE Pleasanton race meet and horse show which has been arranged for April 30th has assumed definite shape, $1,000 having already been contributed. The committee in charge is composed of John Hortenstine, George Detzens, C. L. Crellin, William Napier, William de Lopez, N. Hansen and Lee Wells, including the prominent horsemen of Pleasanton. The race programme includes two running, a trotting, pacing and a harness road race for purses. Some famous horses will be speeded, including Directum, Searchlight, Lady Hurst and others.

ASSISTANT SECRETARY HANLON of the Jockey Club says the new issue of the Stud Book, the first since the copyright was bought from S. D. Bruce, will be ready in June. Racing men and breeders are anxiously awaiting it, for it is three years since the last volume was issued, reports of 1894 being the last made under the mares' names. T. B. Sidebotham, Brooklyn, who is doing the work, has promised to furnish proof sheets early in May, and then Registrar James E. Wheeler will put on a special staff of readers to revise them. The work is exceptionally difficult this year, and the volume will be very large. It will comprise more than 1,500 pages.

BORGIA. No one of sane mind will question the claim that the brother of the champion four-miler is a worthy member of the clan. Great horses among those which have been classed as maidens, but seldom, indeed, when one with so little experience as Borgia, which made as good a showing as he did in the Derby, run last Saturday. "Practice makes perfect," and certainly a little experience helps greatly in the racing game. From barriers to finish there are a constant succession of changes. New conditions at nearly every point of the race, and it is safe to say, that so far as can be told from one performance the namesake of the great cardinal will make a name for himself in the racing world.

"BUCK" FRANKLIN, who trains for Baker & Gentry, thinks their four-year-old colt Fleischmann, by Harry O'Fallon—Lady Royster, has a royal chance of winning the Suburban, for which he will be especially pointed. He claims the colt is fully able to do a mile in 1:39. Fleischmann, it will be recalled, took Ornament's measure at Oakley last year in the Buckeye Stakes. The brother of Lehman and Simon W. ran a great race on that occasion, but unfortunately he pulled up lame. Fleischmann's other start last year was in the Oakley Derby, when he ran third to Ornament and Tillo. His race in this event was such a sparkling one that it was predicted he would beat Ornament in the Buckeye Stakes, which prediction was verified.

In speaking of the Crescent City Derby Secretary Macfarlan, of Memphis, said: "While I think the best horse won, yet there was great dissatisfaction expressed by Bob Tucker as to the manner Knapp rode Isabey. Both Dinsmore and Nabob bumped into every other horse. Dinsmore was out in front until the stretch, and had the inside when the horses were straightened for the run for the wire. Presbyterian and Isabey were close up to the leader, and seeing both gaining on him, Barrett, on Dinsmore, began crowding Presbyterian and Isabey, and carried them to the outside. Burns, seeing what was being attempted, struck Presbyterian with his whip, and he shot out in front; Knapp, however, failed to do likewise, and Dinsmore continued to carry him wide and at the same time gave an opening to Joe Shelby and Nabob to get through close to the rail. Presbyterian came on under the vigorous riding of Burns, and won by a length from Joe Shelby, who had clear sailing all down the stretch. Isabey came strong at the finish, but it was too late, Knapp failing to act as quickly as did Burns on Presbyterian." This will give readers an idea of the level head Tommy Burns possesses.

TOD SLOAN, America's champion lightweight race horse rider, left last Tuesday for Washington, where he is to report to the Fleischmann stable, to which he is under engagement. His retaining fee for 1898 from the Fleischmanns is $16,000. Sloan, if anything, enhanced his reputation as a jockey during his short stay in this city, riding no less than forty-two per cent of winning mounts, which is certainly a phenomenal record. He also succeeded in beating all American records by riding eighteen winners in one week. His record with the Corrigan stable is perhaps without a parallel in this or any other country. He rode forty-five races, in which he piloted no less than twenty-three winners. He was second thirteen and third three times, and was therefore unplaced but six times, and only once on a horse three years or older. Tod Sloan made a fair sum of money here, as he had up $50 on himself every time he rode. Sloan will return to California in November, and will ride here until February, 1899, when he leaves for England, where he will ride throughout the season. He will doubtless have a mount in the famous English Derby and other classic races of the British turf. Last night Tod presented Stable Manager Tommie Magee with a valuable gold watch in appreciation of his services in attending to his mounts.

The Draft Horse Industry.

Teamsters and owners of draft horses in San Francisco as well as in all other large cities of California and Nevada, are complaining of the scarcity of draft horses, those that will weigh from 1,400 to 1,950 pounds. Horses that would tip the scales at these figures three years ago were sold for from $100 to $175, but to-day they would bring in open market from $250 to $300, and if the scarcity continues they will sell for far higher figures. This is not only true of the cities on the Pacific Coast, but it also concerns nearly all others in the Eastern States.

California has been so far from the homes of the heavy draft breeds that, with few exceptions, the breeders here have had no opportunities to send their mares to the horses which were typical representatives of any of the heavy breeds. Then again, there were very few registered mares brought here, consequently the number of native-bred "thoroughbreds" was limited. Nearly all the heavy truck horses which are in use to-day have descended from the few large American mares that slowly plodded across the plains hitched to prairie schooners. Some of the owners brought large stallions with them; stallions that had size and bone and yet had no resemblance to any of the recognized heavy draft families known as Normans, Percherons, Clydes, Suffolk Punches or Shires. They were large American horses of all work.

The pioneers noticed that after a few years in this equable climate, the progeny of their heaviest stallions and mares deteriorated in size, and a few of the most enterprising lovers of heavy horses seeing a market for the right class of heavy stock in the rapid-growing cities, started for England, Scotland and France, and purchased horses they knew would improve the classes here. Wm. Bihler, of Solano county brought one horse called English Glory to his farm near Lakeville. Theo. Skillman of Petaluma, visited France and Scotland and brought at least fifty head of Percheron, Normans, Shires, Suffolk Punches and Clyde stallions and mares. A number of heavy horses were also brought from Australia; several shipments arriving here in the early sixties. This stock sold for fabulous prices and were scattered from Washington to San Diego, and from Eastern Nevada to the Pacific. At every county fair a number of choice descendants of these imported horses as well as their sires and dams competed for the premiums awarded by the State of California to encourage importers, farmers and breeders to persevere in the meritorious work of improving this class of useful horses.

At the county fair at Petaluma, in 1893, there were one hundred and thirty-eight entries for the draft classes; all of them worthy of winning prizes. At the State Fair that year the exhibit was much larger, and at all the fairs throughout California the exhibit of draft stock was one of the most attractive features, for Rosa Bonheur's famous picture "The Horse Fair," was faithfully exemplified by the magnificent large and well groomed horses. Every one who looked at them felt thrilled at the sight and left reluctantly when the last of the big horses pranced along at the end of the halter held by its proud attendant toward the big box stalls.

To day there is not one hundred suitable draft stallions in California, and the cause is easily shown, for every one who has studied the problem has concluded that a great change has taken place since that unfortunate November day when the politicians in San Francisco gave Jim Budd a small majority of the votes cast and elected him to fill the part of an obstructionist and stumbling block in the path of the farmers and breeders of California? A blight seemed to have fallen upon the industry at that time, and from that day to this there has not been a single heavy horse imported to California. Most of the farmers became disgusted, sold their mares or bred them to Jacks, and sent them to the Islands or to Nevada. The markets of San Francisco were glutted with draft stock, and with the introduction of electricity as a motor and the falling off of business, it was almost impossible to sell them.

But a change is taking place, although the breeding of heavy horses has been almost at a standstill for the past three years, there is a revival noticeable, and if any encouragement is offered by our Legislature and new Governor next winter, we may expect a "boom" in this class of horses which will be lasting; for, judging by experience, farmers and breeders will strive to breed to even better horses than they have in the past.

They will not endeavor to breed large horses from small wasp-shaped mares and short chunky stallions, but will try and breed for a larger type, casting aside for general farm work those which do not come up to the requirements sought for by buyers who have been inquiring for horses of a certain kind for the past three years. They have also learned the value of feeding the foals liberally, forcing them, as it were, to eat all they possibly can of nutritious food, grain, hay and a little alfalfa each day. The first year is the most important of a horse's existence. If he is starved and neglected during those twelve months he is almost worthless for the purpose for which he was bred.

In breeding for draft horses it is absolutely necessary that an ideal be copied, and the following will give our readers all the necessary points required:

The head should be of medium size, in proportion to that of the body; the forehead broad between the eyes, tapering upward in the direction of the ears; the jaw broad but not large or loaded with flesh; the nasal bones, if not straight, slightly arched, but not dish faced; the muscles not too refined or tapering, with the nostrils wide; the eye bright and dark, full and vigorous, yet mild; the ears of good size, tapering to a point, neither hanging, showing sluggishness, not prick eared, but with frequent motion indicative of a good disposition. Such a description of the head rarely finds a vicious temperament, which latter must be detested in a breeding sire.

The neck should be of good length, clean cut at the jaws, well set on at the shoulder, with gradual tapering, but slight occiput to the highest point of the withers. The chest must be broad, full and deep; a hollow chest suggests decided weakness. The shoulder should be closely knit at the withers and oblique, though not necessarily so much so as in the race horse. The humerus should form a very obtuse angle with the scapula or else the animal cannot well advance the limb in motion. He should be well up at the withers. The back should be short and strong, the ribs of great depth and rounded, barrel shaped. He should be full at the heart and girth well, allowing plenty of room for the expansion of healthy lungs. The length or rather depth of body at the last rib should be great, as this is too often a defect in the draft horse, and a serious one, as it suggests a poor feeder and also gives him a leggy appearance, the hind quarters of good length, well muscled and round, the thigh being well developed and strong.

The last in consideration, but by no means the least, are legs and feet. The indications of a good leg are firmness, hardness and smoothness to the touch, showing an entire absence of adipose tissue; large, well defined joints entirely free from any abnormal appendages. The knee joints should be broad and flat; the hock wide from before backward, giving the leg a somewhat crooked appearance rather than straight, the former giving strength; the length of bone short from the knee and hock to the pastern. When standing, the hocks should tend to be close together. The large metacarpals should present a flat side view, rounded anteriorly and tapering posteriorly, and be of good size below the knee, the tendons at this point well defined and strong; the pasterns of medium length and set on rather oblique, so as to give the necessary elasticity to counteract the concussion caused by the firm step. If long, they are weak; if short and upright, they are liable to knuckling.

The feet are, of course, very important. In shape the medium between a flat foot and a mule foot is preferable, of good size, with a large degree of concavity in the bottom. They must also be firm and elastic, without cracks and free from brittleness. The fore and hind legs must be set on straight, as an out or an in-toed horse is decidedly objectionable.

All the preceding points are to be observed in the standing posture, and when fully satisfied in these particulars it is very essential to see that, having four good legs, the horse has the ability to use them properly; that he steps with a firm, elastic tread, and, especially in the draft horse, he must be a good, smart walker; that the legs and feet do not get in the way of each other when he is in motion, but move freely without interfering.

We shall publish from time to time articles relating to the various breeds of horses which are to take a very high place in the draft horse world hereafter.

The Horsemen's Convention.

The convention called "The National Horse Breeders, Dealers and Exhibitors Association" met at the Palmer House, Chicago, Ill., March 30th. It was well attended by representative breeders and horsemen from all the horse-breeding States. Col. F. J. Berry was selected as Chairman of the meeting, and T. Butterworth, temporary Secretary.

Col. Berry opened the meeting with a brief outline of the meeting and called upon Col. J. S. Cooper, President of the Chicago Horse Commission Union, to deliver the address of welcome, which he did in his most eloquent, able and dignified manner.

Mayor Harrison sent a letter of regrets that he was unable to attend the meeting.

It was decided to make the organization permanent, and the following officers were elected: F. J. Berry, President; J. S. Cooper, Treasurer; T. Butterworth, Secretary, with "three" vice-presidents from each State represented in the Association.

The Executive Committee consisted of F. J. Berry, Chicago; M. W. Dunham, Wayne, Ill.; H. E. Fletcher, Minneapolis, Minn.; W. P. Dickinson, Prairie View, Ill., and S. D. Thompson, Chicago.

The following Committee on Constitution and By-Laws was appointed by the Chair: J. S. Cooper, M. W. Dunham, W. P. Dickinson, S. D. Thompson and T. Butterworth.

The report of the committee occasioned some animated discussion on the name, membership, etc.

The Constitution and By-Laws were adopted giving individual membership at $2 annually, and the membership of kindred associations at $5 annually, with two delegates.

Three vice-presidents from each State are to co-operate with this association to encourage the improvement of horse breeding and the organization of State and Local Horse Breeders Association, and to secure needed legislation.

Following the work of organization, there were a number of able addresses and papers representing all breeds and classes of horses, and all were unanimous upon the timely work of the organization, and the urgent necessity of encouraging the breeding of the better class of horses now suited to the city and export markets, and of uniting the interests of the breeders with the dealers in the production of horses of the best market type, to encourage farmers to breed to suit the markets, if we expect to raise horses to sell.

The following resolutions were adopted unanimously:

Resolved, That the National Horse Breeders, Dealers and Exhibitors Association urge government inspection of stallions for public service, and a State commission to prevent the breeding of inferior and unsound stallions and forward a copy to the Secretary of Agriculture.

The gentlemen present vied with each other in securing membership in the Association, and were enthusiastic in their efforts to advance the interests of the Association.

Col. F. J. Berry spoke on the best market horse for the American and export demand, and defined their classes with the supply and demand.

Monsieur A. Van Schelle, the General Secretary of the National Federation, and agent for the Belgium Government, spoke on the Belgian horse and demand for American horses.

Mr. M. W. Dunham, Wayne, Ill., delivered an able address on breeding horses which will interest all horse breeders.

Mr. Alexander Galbraith, Janesville, Wis., Secretary of the Clydesdale Association, spoke on the British horses in America in his able and characteristic way.

Mr. F. S. Gorton, Wheaton, Ill., spoke on the trotter and light harness horse.

Mr. H. McKinney, Janesville, Wis., read a paper on the light harness horse.

Mr. S. D. Thompson, Chicago, Secretary of the Percheron Association, delivered an address on the Percheron horse for the farmer that attracted marked attention.

Mr. Geo. McKerrow, Sussex, Wis., addressed the convention in his able and convincing manner on Farmers and Horse Breeding.

H. A. Briggs, Elkhorn, Wis., had a paper on the Percheron horse for the farm and city.

Mr. Peter Hopely, Lewis, Iowa, spoke on the Suffolk Horse and Horse Breeding.

Mr. H. E. Sletche, Minneapolis, Minn., gave an entertaining talk on the Range Horse.

Mr. Myron Tichnor, Chicago had a paper on the Show Horse.

Mr. J. B. McLaughlin, Columbus, Ohio, had an interesting paper on the Coach Horse, the most valuable for the farmer and breeder.

Gen. J. B. Castleman, Louisville, Ky., President of the National Saddle Horse Breeders Association, had a paper on the Saddle Horse.

Mr. John A. Logan, Jr. had a paper on the Coach and Carriage Horse.

Rysdyk's Famous Horse.

"Harm" Showers, who was from 1856 until the great horse's death in 1876 groom to Rysdyk's Hambletonian, and was buried at Chester last week, says a writer in New York Sun, related many interesting reminiscences of the eccentric owner of the old horse. His favorite story related to two Kentucky horsemen. "Jim" Howland, the famous horseman and owner of Polonius, was landlord of the Howland House of Chester then, and Rysdyk's favorite pastime of an evening was to visit Howland and talk horse for an hour or so. Rysdyk was ordinarily an uncommunicative man, and had little to say to strangers.

The Kentuckians arrived at Chester about nine o'clock in the evening. They went to the Howland House. A large lithographic copy of Wright's famous painting of Hambletonian, with his owner, cigar in hand, standing at his head, hung behind the bar. Rysdyk happened to be at the hotel that evening, and sat, as was his habit, in a corner of the room, in the shadows. The Kentucky horsemen studied the picture of the horse, and were liberal in their criticisms. They found fault audibly with this and that point about the celebrated sire of trotters, and their general opinion was that he was not so perfect a looking horse as they had been led to expect. They were unaware that his owner was sitting near, hearing every word they said. Soon after the Kentuckians had retired to their rooms, Rysdyk, without referring in any way to what the men had said, went home. The next day the Kentucky horsemen went up to the Rysdyk place, saw Hambletonian's owner, and tried to talk business to him. To the amazement of the horseman Rysdyk refused to listen to them.

"But," said they, "we have traveled all the way from Kentucky, at much expense, entirely to see you."

"Can't help it," replied Rysdyk. "You talked about my horse last night. You ran him down. His points didn't suit you. You can go back to Kentucky and tell 'em out there that you couldn't even see Hambletonian."

The horsemen pleaded, but all in vain. They were finally obliged to leave without transacting their business, just because they had aired their opinions on the good and bad points of a horse in the hearing of a man who took more to heart an insult to that horse than he would one intended for himself.

"Harm" Showers' death has prompted old horsemen in this cradle of the race of trotters to think up interesting incidents about Hambletonian and other famed equine stars to whom the wonderful fliers of the present day are indebted for their good qualities.

"It was by a lucky accident alone that there came to be a Rysdyk's Hambletonian," said Wisner Wood, who remembers the day when the colt that became the famous sire was born three miles from Chester, on the Jonas Seeley farm. "If Seeley Roe hadn't had to go to Newburg to court, and ridden there and back with Daniel Durand, who drove a mare that belonged to a man down around Edenville somewhere, there wouldn't have been any Hambletonian. Jonas Seeley traded a good deal in horses and cattle fifty years and more ago, and he got hold of a mare that was out of old Bellfounder.

"The mare turned out to be a good family horse and quite a pet with the family, but Jonas had a chance to make a profitable deal with Charles Kent, a New York butcher, and he sold him the mare. Kent had the mare some time when Seeley heard that he wasn't using her right. She had proved to be a good one on the road, and came to be known as the Kent mare. I prevailed upon Jonas to go and buy her back again, as she was too good a mare to be treated the way Kent was treating her. He went to New York, and found that the mare had been made permanently lame by bad usage, but he bought her and brought her back to his Sugar Loaf Farm and kept her for breeding purposes.

"About that time Jonas Seeley and some other farmers who were interested in having good horses were instrumental in getting the owner of old Abdallah, the great Long Island sure of good horses, to fetch that horse into Orange county.

"About the last of old Abdallah's offspring was the colt that became Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Abdallah was ugly in the stable, and no one but his groom dared go near him. Ebenezer Seeley had charge of him at Chester. Toward the last of Abdallah's last season here Ebenezer had to go to Elmira, and he left the old stallion to be cared for by some one else. The result was that the horse was not cared for at all, and before Ebenezer Seeley got back old Abdallah was almost starved. All the food he had was rye straw, that a woman who lived near the stable ventured to squeeze through the cracks in the barn so the horse could get it. He was in a wretched condition when Seeley returned, and took him back to Hempstead Plains. His usefulness in the stud being over, Abdallah was sold to a fish peddler. The first time his new owner attempted to hitch him to a wagon he kicked it to binders and scared the man so that he turned the old horse loose, and the sire of the greatest sire of trotting stock that ever lived died an outcast on the plains near Hempstead.

"Jonas Seeley's Kent mare had a colt by old Abdallah. I took a fancy to him as he grew into horse shape, and I bought him. I was a youngster then. I paid $250 for him, and my folks made a tremendous fuss over my paying such a price for a colt. And that $250 was a tolerable stiff price to pay for one, too, in those days. But I had an idea that I hadn't made a bad bargain, and my folks changed their minds, too, by and by, for a couple of years later I bought a farm and wanted to stock it, and Seeley Roe offered me 60 cows for my young stallion, and I took him up. That colt was Abdallah Chief, and afterwards known as Roe's Abdallah.

"Well, in the spring of 1849 Jonas Seeley's Kent mare dropped another colt, of which old Abdallah was the sire. When this colt was two or three months old, Jonas made up his mind that he would sell both it and the mare the first chance he got. He heard that my brother Cornelius here in Chester wanted to buy a mare and colt, and one day he brought his over. Cornelius was walking in a field near the road. Jonas hung over the fence and hailed him.

"I hear you want to buy a mare and colt, Corneel," said he. "What do you think of these?"

"Cornelius thought pretty well of them, 'but,' he said, 'the trouble is, Jonas, I bought a mare and colt only yesterday, and I don't want two.'"

"So that was one narrow escape the colt had from not earning world-wide fame as Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Then Seeley Roe took a look at the Kent mare and the colt, and had fully made up his mind to buy them when he came back from Newburg, but the mare that Daniel Durand rode him behind had a colt about the same time as the Kent's mare's colt, and Seeley Roe liked the action of the mare so well that he thought her colt would turn out better than the one Jonas Seeley's mare had, and he bought her and her colt. This was a lucky thing for the Kent mare colt, for W. M. Rysdyk scraped up the $150 Jonas wanted for it and its dam, and bought them. If Seeley Roe had bought them that colt would never have amounted to any more than Abdallah Chief did in Roe's hands, and Abdallah Chief was a full brother (?) to the Kent mare colt, and had every reason to be as great a sire as Hambletonian became. But Roe had not the faculty of caring for and breeding horses. Hambletonian was naturally a wonderful horse. Rysdyk's care and treatment of him made him still more so. It was the great good fortune for the race of trotting horses at this day that the last son of old Abdallah fell into the hands he did."

The New Registration Laws.

At the meeting of the American Trotting Register Association, to be held in Chicago this month, the subject of changing the standard will be discussed, and as the proposed new rules contain radical changes we reprint them here:

FOR TROTTERS.

1. The progeny of a registered standard horse and a registered standard trotting mare.
2. A stallion sired by a registered standard trotting horse, provided his dam and grandam were sired by registered standard trotting horses, and he himself has a trotting record of 2:20, and is the sire of three trotters with records of 2:30 from different mares.
3. A mare whose sire is a registered standard trotting horse, and whose dam and grandam were sired by registered standard trotting horses, provided she herself has a record of 2:20, or is the dam of one trotter with a record of 2:30.
4. A mare sired by a registered standard trotting horse, provided she is the dam of two trotters with records of 2:30, by different sires.
5. A mare sired by a registered trotting horse, provided her first, second and third dams are each by registered standard trotting horses.

FOR PACERS.

1. The progeny of a registered standard pacing horse and a registered standard pacing mare.
2. A stallion sired by a registered standard pacing horse, and whose dam and grandam were sired by registered standard pacing horses, and he himself has a pacing record of 2:25, and is the sire of three pacers with records of 2:25 from different mares.
3. A mare whose sire is a registered standard pacing horse, and whose dam and grandam were sired by registered standard pacing horses, provided she herself has a pacing record of 2:25, or is the dam of one pacer with a record of 2:25.
4. A mare sired by a registered standard pacing horse, provided her first, second and third dams are each sired by a registered standard pacing horse.
5. The get of a registered standard trotting horse out of a registered standard pacing mare, or of a registered standard pacing horse out of a registered standard trotting mare.

C. H. DOBBEL, Clerk.

GREEN B. MORRIS has a string of six in training, four of which are California-bred youngsters. One is a bay colt by July, the full brother to Sir Modred.

ENTHUSIASM PREVAILS.

The Festival of the Masons in San Francisco in May—A Great Spectacle Promised—The Committees and Business Houses Are Working Hand-in-Hand Toward Success.

Not in a score of years has there been shown such splendid organization and steadfastness of purpose, to say nothing of enthusiasm, as that which marks the preparation for the Masonic Festival which is to be held in this city next month. The Executive Committee has aroused an enthusiasm amongst all classes in the city, which is quite unique. Monied men and merchants alike are taking a keen interest, and the country is not slow in responding to the invitations for co-operation which have been extended. The promise of a week of holiday-making, which will be memorable, now amounts to a certainty.

The Grand Master of California has given his hearty support and approval of the project, and has issued from his office a letter highly commending the fete.

Charles L. Patton, the Chairman of the Executive Committee, has gathered around him a corps of earnest workers, and he himself is devoting the whole of his time to the successful completion of the worthy enterprise. Day and night this gentleman is at headquarters directing and planning.

New features are being designed and placed in process of execution daily. W. Frank Pierce, the Inspector General of the Southern Jurisdiction of the Scottish Rite, is amongst the most prominent workers, and by his devotion to matters which have been placed in his hands several obstacles have been overcome, and the prospects materially brightened.

Charles L. Pierce is at the head of affairs in Oakland, where he is doing grand work, the people of the Athens of the Pacific vieing with those on this side of the bay for honors.

The number of large merchants who will contrite grow very rapidly. W. & J. Sloane & Co., the great furnishers, will fit up a $2,000 bed-room, which they will present to the Festival; Tillman & Bendel will give $3,000 of their specialties; Hale Brothers, the well-known dry goods house, have decided to make a great display from their immense stock; Wellman, Peck & Co. will give some 7,000 cans of Calumet Baking Powder, etc., and in fact, nearly all the prominent firms will be represented in some way. And all this in aid of one of the most worthy charities that California knows of. The Widows' and Orphans' Home will most certainly be helped in a generous way by this Festival, and those who are in San Francisco during the week will find that great hospitality for which the Masonic Fraternity is so notable.

Why You Should Use It.

John C. Boyd, Gentry, Tenn., writes: "I can recommend Quinn's Ointment as being the only remedy I ever tried that would remove a splint. I consider it invaluable." Don't fail to use it. For curbs, splints, Spavins, Windpuffs and all bunches it has no equal. Price $1.50. If you cannot obtain from your druggist, address W. B. Eddy, Whitehall, N. Y. For sale in San Francisco by Messrs. J. A. McKerron and J. O'Kane.

It Never Failed to Cure.

WALCOTT, Ind., January 24, 1896.
"I see you are still handling the Gombault Caustic Balsam. I wish to say, right now and here, that it is far the best licament I ever used, and I have in years past used a good deal. I would rather have one bottle of it than a barrel of any other kind I ever used. It never failed to cure for me."
CHAS. E. ROSS.

STARTER J. B. FERGUSON Thursday received a telegram stating that Encore, the dam of Helter Skelter Applause and other good ones, had a foal by imp. St. George.

STATE FAIR, 1898

The State Agricultural Society has opened the following

COLT STAKES

— FOR TROTTERS AND PACERS —

TO CLOSE MAY 2d, 1898.

FOR TROTTERS.

No. 1—For Two-Year-Olds (2:40 Class); $30 entrance, of which $5 to accompany the nomination; $10 payable July 1st, and the remaining $15 payable August 10, 1898; $200 added by the Society.

No. 2—For Three-Year-Olds and Under (2:25 Class) $50 entrance, of which $10 must accompany nomination; $15 payable July 1st and the remaining $25 payable August 10, 1898; $300 added by the Society.

FOR PACERS.

No. 3—For Two-Year-Olds (2:30 Class). Conditions as to payments and added money same as for No. 1.

No. 4—For Three-Year-Olds and Under (2:30 Class). Conditions as to payments and added money same as for No. 2.

STANFORD STAKES

— 1900 —

For foals of 1897. To be trotted in 1900. Mile heats. 3 in 5. Entrance $50, with $300 added for three or more starters. Entry blanks containing the special conditions relating to all of the above stakes will be forwarded upon application.

Entries to close with Edwin F. Smith, Secretary, at Office in Sacramento, MAY 2, 1898.

A. B. SPRECKELS, Pres.
EDWIN F. SMITH, Sec'y

Sulky Notes.

MCKINNEY, 2:11½, is advertised to stand in Portland, Or., June 3d.

SIDNEY has seven sons that are sires of six trotters and eight pacers.

A. G. GURNETT has a number of good colts and fillies at Pleasanton.

JAMES MACK has Waldo J. at Hueneme. This great pacer is doing well.

THE meeting of the P. C. T. H. B. Association will commence June 25th as originally planned.

MANY reports are received from owners that their broodmares are carrying their foals over a year.

A NUMBER of horses, trotters and pacers are being worked at Santa Ana, the home of Silkwood, 2:07.

WOODBURN FARM has leased Velocidad, the son of Electioneer and Natula, sister of Nutwood, to A. C. Turner, of Ross, O.

LILLIAN M., a thoroughbred by imp. Aintree, owned by Bruce Cornwall of this city, was bred to McKinney, 2:11½, last week.

DO NOT overlook the Denver meeting. The programme of races to take place at the Overland Park there appears in this issue.

RUNNING seems to be practically dead at Lexington. For the first time in over seventy years there will be no spring meeting there.

DR. WISE's mare, Adelaide Simmons, 2:14½, now a brood mare at Hon. F. C. Sayles' farm, Pawtucket, R. I., has a handsome Sable Wilkes foal.

AT least five sons of Electioneer will stand in Ohio this year, viz: Norval 2:14½, Electricity 2:17½, J. C. Simpson 2:18½, Gov. Pacheco, and Velocidad.

CONSIDERABLE hay has been shipped for Nevada to California during the past week. In northern Nevada the agricultural prospects are exceedingly bright.

THE Year Book for 1897 contains 800 pages, or about 50 pages more than the 1896 Year Book. The race summaries fill 305 pages, while the Year Book for 1896 contained 281 pages.

SPEED programmes of the Colusa meeting, which is to take place May 10th to 14th, have been published, and from a letter received from there it appears that a royal good time is expected.

A FOUR weeks' race meeting at Oakland will be a great saving in railroad fees for transportation. This is an item which eats up a large proportion of the profits of our horsemen every year.

It will be noticed that very few changes have been made in the two-weeks programme of the P. C. T. H. B. Association from the one published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN two weeks ago.

UNDER James Madison 2:17½ in the Year Book the name of the pacer Belle Madison is admitted. She is out of Easter—Costello and made a record of 2:25 at the October meeting in Carson, 1897.

GOLDEN GATEWAY, one of Corbett's best bred young horses that was purchased by J. J. Hamlin of East Aurora, N. Y., appears as a sire this year. His representative is Inez, a pacer with a record of 2:17½.

ORRIN A. HICKOK is enjoying excellent health. He is in daily attendance at the races and is as good a judge of "form" there as he was when, with "Counsellor" Crawford, he was getting a "line" on the trotters and pacers.

UNDER the letter A in the Year Book for 1897 are listed ninety-four standard pacers for the year. Of these, fifty-seven have records of 2:20 or better—which will give some idea of how common 2:20 pacers are becoming.

THOS. ROCHE, superintendent of J. H. White's farm, Lakeville, Sonoma, visited San Francisco for the purpose of telling those who were about to send horses to that place for pasture that owing to the dry season he would be unable to take them.

A. B. SPRECKELS has suggested to the Golden Gate Park Commissioners that they plant bushes along the principal driveways and thus keep away the goats which are so annoying to all pedestrians as well those who ride or drive through the park.

COUNT STEFAN GYULAI has purchased from Mr. Lawrence the two American mares, Greenlander Girl 2:14½, by Greenlander—Aurelia, by Electioneer, and Alida 2:28½, by Allerton—Young Bird. They will be trained by Mr. Albert Moser for the Gentlemen's Driving meeting.

THE Sidney horse Percy that got a record of 2:23½ as stated in the year book is said to be out of a mare by Hambletonian 725. He was foaled in 1890. Can it be that he was out of Bessie Howard? Some of our readers may be able to give us the correct information regarding this horse.

THE foals by Seymour Wilkes, 2:08½, at the Lakeville Farm, Sonoma county, and also to be seen on the other farms in that county are pronounced the finest-made youngsters ever foaled in that portion of California. Seymour Wilkes is destined to be one of our best sires, if we are to judge by his progeny.

SAMUEL GAMBLE, San Francisco, Cal., has bought from Allen Farm, Pittsfield, Mass., the bay yearling filly Kutani, by Kremlin, 2:07½—Bravissima, by Robert McGregor, 2:17½. Last December George W. Leavitt selected a yearling Kremlin colt for one of his Maine friends. Thus the recognized expert buyers of the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts have stamped the seal of their approval on the Kremlins.

LANARAT 23,219, a bay horse by the Electioneer stallion, Good Gift, that was sent to Russia, got a record of 2:24½ last year. This horse was out of Lou Whipple, 2:26½, by Hambletonian 725; second dam, Lady Hibbard (grandam of Ellen Mayhew, 2:22), and Ellen Mayhew is the dam of Oro Wilkes, 2:11.

DAN MISNER, the well known Petaluma horseman, has moved to San Francisco and will prepare a string of horses on the speed track. Worth Ober, Pat Farrell and a number of other horsemen may be seen any morning jogging their likely young horses through Golden Gate Park and along the ocean beach.

A. SMITH MCCANN died in Lexington, March 28, in a charity hospital. He once owned Red Wilkes and Fairlawn Stock Farm, the home of the late Gen. Withers. He did not lose his property in the horse business, but by luxurious living that sapped his vital energies and destroyed his mind. He was only 53 years old.

A CORRESPONDENT would like to know the pedigree of Lady Abbottsford, trial 2:25½. She was sired by Abbottsford, 2:19½, out of Fly by Sonoma, son of George M. Patchen, Jr., second dam by imp. Lawyer, thoroughbred. She was bred by C. Hurley of San Francisco, and sold to Thos. Clark of Hueneme some years ago.

THE young hackneys by Green's Rufus that are to be seen at the Bungalow, San Mateo, are worthy of the closest inspection. This horse, mated with trotting-bred mares, is siring typical high-stepping colts and fillies that have all the points which make prize-winners of them in the show ring. Green's Rufus is pronounced one of the best hackneys in the world.

THE rally in the values of horses, as shown by last week's transactions in the sale rings, is very encouraging to those who are breeding horses. Those who have combatted the opinion advanced by the turf papers that horses values would necessarily increase with the gradual depreciation of the visible supply may now see where they were wrong and the papers right.

FRANCHISE, by Electioneer, has a three-weeks-old filly by Baron Wilkes 2:18, that is said to be a most promising animal. She is at Maplehurst Farm, where she is to be bred again to Baron Wilkes. Franchise and Practical 2:19, are both owned by Marcus Daly, of Butte, Mont., and they are likely to remain at Maplehurst for several seasons to be bred to the great son of George Wilkes.

JOHN DICKERSON is nicely settled at Goshen, N. Y., in charge of Senator McCarthy's horses. The latter-named gentleman has purchased a farm adjoining the Goshen track at Goshen, and John will do the preparatory work on his string at this point. He has a barn full of colts, but, about the only ones the public knows of are Fred Kohl, 2:12½, and Fred S. Moody, 2:14. Fred Kohl occupies the same stable that St. Julian 2:14½, the one time champion, occupied here years ago.

SINCE J. C. Kirkpatrick accepted the presidency of the Golden Gate Driving Association its membership has increased and the enthusiasm which seems to attend all who attend the meetings augurs well for the success of this thriving organization. Every Saturday and Sunday afternoon matinee races are held between the members on the speed track in Golden Gate Park, and there is considerable talk of a circular mile track being made somewhere in the vicinity of the park.

It is a singular fact that no pacer has a record of 2:06. Every fraction of time from 2:03½ up has been pre-empted save only 2:06. In 1891 Direct paced a mile against time at Independence in 2:06, which was the world's record at that time. But his record stood at that point but the single year, he reducing it to 2:05½ at Nashville in 1892. No other pacer has ever gone into winter quarters with a 2:06 record, despite the fact that there have been eighteen winning race heats and five exhibitions miles paced in exactly 2:06 since Direct's performance.

TRAINERS of horses should bear in mind that the horse is a nocturnal feeder, hence should have at least double the amount of grain and hay at his night feed that he has at any other time. He has at night twelve hours of leisure to eat, digest and assimilate his food to prepare and strengthen him for the next day's labor. Most trainers give three equal feeds each day. If they will double the night feed and take a proportionate amount from the morning and night feeds, they will find their horses will be better. Don't be afraid of feeding too much, within reasonable bounds.

MR. CHARLES A. WINSHIP, of Los Angeles, has sold the pole team, Ottinger 2:09½ and Lady Grace 2:15½, for $3,000, to Mr. Thomas Henry, Jr., of Philadelphia. Mr. Henry is to be congratulated, as it is doubtful if a better pair of trotters ever hooked together. Both horses drive alike, have two-minute speed, and can scarcely be driven to a break. Only four trotters have more heats in 2:15 and better, in races, than Ottinger, and in all his career as a race horse he made but two or three breaks. He was also a very fast pacer and took a record of 2:11½ at that gait, with one season's work.

MR. HENRY A. FLEISCHMANN, who purchased at the Fasig sale in New York last Tuesday the bay horse Hallington, 2:16½, by Haldane, out of Lily Lexington, to send to Europe, said to us that stamina as well as speed was now required in Germany and elsewhere on the continent. A horse is asked to trot two and three miles, and the performance is accurately timed. The pacer is not popular, but the trotter is steadily rising in favor. The trotting races are very largely attended, and no mercy is shown to the owner and driver whose thoughts run to jobbery. The well-directed efforts of Mr. Fleischmann have furnished American breeders with a profitable outlet, but the drain upon our best blood may result to our disadvantage in the future. "We can get a stronger entry for a 2:10 class in Germany than you can here," said Mr. Fleischmann, "and twenty-five thousand people will assemble to witness the contest." This high appreciation of the fast and game trotter must be gratifying to the American breeder, but it should impress him with the importance of not unduly weakening his stud. If he parts with the best, how can he hope to breed the best to meet home and foreign demand? Stranger is much liked in Europe, but his owner will restrict him principally to his own mares, of which he has twenty. Trevillian is also well liked, and he commands a service fee of $300.—Turf, Field and Farm.

EUROPEAN horsemen have taken away from this country many of the best trotting stallions and mares in sight during the last three years, and now they are trying to buy Stamboul 2:07½, the former champion of trotting stallions, and the present champion of the show ring, says the Sun. His owner, E. H. Harriman, has been asked within a few days to price the horse for export, but the stately style and extreme speed which the foreigners so much admire are also appreciated by the New York horseman, and it will cost to take him across the Atlantic a good deal more money than European buyers have yet paid for any trotter in America. Stamboul has twice been sold for upward of $40,000, and he was the first trotter that ever changed hands for $50,000.

IN an interview with one of our subscribers who recently returned from a visit to the eastern portion of Nevada, he said: Horses are cheap there. The wild horses are so cheap that men are employed to shoot them. The springs where these wild horses get water are about thirty miles apart, and as the stallion with his band of mares have quenched their thirst the hunters who are in hiding shoot the stallion in the stomach and as the animal rears and plunges, squealing with pain, the mares hover around him and are slaughtered, only a few getting away. The hunters cut the hide back of the ears and tear it off, while manes and tails are sold for a good price. The carcass is then salted with strychnine and left for coyote food, and usually yields a good crop.

A COACH horse receives his preliminary education in a paddock where the sand is six or eight inches deep. His harness consists of a bridle and a dumb jockey, and with his head strapped to the latter he is turned loose in the sand, where the ringmaster with his whip does the rest. As a general thing a horse's action can be increased 25 per cent. by "biting" him until his mouth and neck become supple and cause him to yield to every pressure of the bit, and oftentimes a driver who understands how can make "an actor" do twice as much as a novice can. Some of the best show horses we have had in recent years were schooled in the sand in tips, and then shod with heavy-heeled shoes just before entering the ring. Considering the demand for trotting bred carriage horses, it will certainly pay any stock farm in the land to study the art of training and fitting such horses.

SPEED has always been, is now, and always will be the greatest element of value in a horse. Yet anyone who studies horse market values as they rule to-day will be convinced that as uniform profit yielding elements there are qualities which really surpass speed, though we admit that some of them partake smartly of fadism. But if "fadism" can be turned to a profit, and the profit comes off of those who can best afford it, "fadism" is a good thing to have in stock. Good looks and good manners are great money bringing virtues nowadays, and they are more cheaply acquired than developed speed. Fat is a great concealer of homeliness, and "knee action" is as profitable as the "foam" on soda water. Fat and knee action are more cheaply made than speed. Many horses can be learned to step high quite a bit more readily than they can be learned to step fast, and a moderately high stepper, if fat and sleek, will sell for a great deal more than a moderately fast stepper that is lacking in road manners.

THE sale of Alcantara for the meager sum of $600, at public auction last week is one of the many things connected with the light-harness horse industry that are misleading, because surface facts only appear in a sale report. While the horse is but twenty-two years of age, and is known to be strong and vigorous, despite sale ring stories to the contrary, he has practically been buried since his ostensible sale to Stony Ford, a few years ago. That, to use a familiar expression, "cooked his goose." It has been demonstrated beyond further need of controversy, that great stallions, like great stores, must be consistently and persistently advertised if they are to remain valuable and saleable property. The methods which made Fairlawn famous and lifted its great stallion Almont into prominence, before his real merit had been disclosed by the performances of his get, need to be used to day just as much as was necessary a quarter of a century ago. Men do not go rushing about in search of colts sired by a stallion owned by some one who fails to let the world know where the horse is and takes no interest in those who patronize him, beyond collecting service fees. It is said that Alcantara served but sixteen mares in 1897. Think of that. One of the greatest of great sires, with over 100 standard performers to his credit, whose sons and daughters are many of them, breeding on, reduced to a pitiable book of sixteen during a season which marked a distinct revival in the breeding of light harness horse. Yet there are people who pretend to believe that it does not pay to advertise.

LAST week, in mentioning the fact that the compilers of the Year Book had many obstacles to overcome before it could be issued even in the month of March, we drew attention to the fact that some secretaries declined to heed the requests of the compilers that official reports of meetings be forwarded early. A casual glance at the new book disclosed the fact that Chehalis is given no official credit for his two miles in 4:19½, the record made by W. W. P., though slower, being given as the champion mark at that distance. We now learn that the reason Chehalis is not given credit for his wonderful performance is that the secretary of the meeting at which he paced, has steadily refused to forward an official report of the same. By reason of this official's gross neglect of duty, Chehalis and his owner are robbed of the honor that would be conferred by the appearance of the horse's name in the list of champions. At present the claim that Chehalis did actually pace two miles in 4:19½ cannot be substantiated by the Year Book, notwithstanding that a report of the performance does appear therein. This report is duly marked unofficial and hence carries no weight with it. Just why any secretary should steadily refuse to forward official summaries to the compilers of the Year Book is hard to discover, unless they may, perhaps, desire to injure some one or more of the owners or trainers that owned or drove horses winning heats or races at their meetings. Had the secretary owed the owner of Chehalis a grudge he could not have found a much better way in which to pay it off in full; but, of course, there is no reason to believe that anything of the sort was intended. However, be the reason what it may, the fact remains that a gross injustice has been done the horse's owner, and other ditatory secretaries may now see how important it is that their official reports should be forwarded as quickly as possible after the close of their meeting.—Horseman.

DISTEMPER.

Catarrhal Fever, Influenza and Throat Diseases

These ailments have ruined more racing and sale prospects than all other diseases.

The extraordinary conditions of labor of horses at present and for several years past caused most of the throat affections, together with improper treatment and poor recovery from attacks of the above named diseases.

This trouble can be averted by using Spohn's Distemper and Cough Cure, for it DOES CURE; and no matter how you may find your horses exposed to these distempers, this remedy positively will prevent them. It cures by cleansing the blood of poisonous germs, and until these are removed the disease is not cured.

Spohn's Cure is absolutely safe for all ages, even broodmares in foal, at any period of gestation, and for baby colts. Age does not injure the value of this preparation, but, in fact, the sales and demand for it have been such as to make it out of the question to have any old stock left.

Three-fourths of the stock farms, racing stables and buyers and shipping barns in the United States are now using Spohn's Cure.

Have you a horse with chronic cough? Or is he "tied up" from "shipping colds"? Or in poor form and appetite because he was not "cooled out" carefully?

Spohn's Cure will help you out. Try it. Never leaves any bad results. Avoid dangerous "colds" and bad effects of change of stables while campaigning horses by keeping Spohn's Cure in your cases all the while for emergencies.

The dose is 10 drops for baby colts to a full teaspoonful for horses of 1,200 weight and up.

A 32-page booklet on the Treatment of Contagions, Nose and Throat Diseases, and containing a number of excellent formula for horsemen will be sent FREE to any one.

Reference is made to a few California horsemen who know of Spohn's Cure:

FROM the Australian papers just arrived full reports of the autumn meeting of the Victoria Jockey Club are secured. Several of the big stakes had small fields. Ayrshire, by Donlop, with 116 pounds up, beat a field of fourteen for the Australian Cup at two and one-quarter miles in 4:03. Battalion, 135 pounds, finished second, the crack three-year-old Aurum, 129 pounds, third. Amberite, by Carbine, beat virtually a walkover for the Champion Stake at three miles, but still he covered the distance in 5:27. Aurum captured the St. Leger at one and three-quarters miles. Amiable, by the Prince Charlie horse Lochiel, annexed the Newmarket Handicap. With 124 pounds in the saddle she defeated twenty-six and ran the six furlongs in 1:14. Cordite, by the Musket horse Zelinski, captured the Sires' Produce Stake, with Cocos second and Boabdi third. The latter youngster, who is by the St. Simon horse Bill of Portland, distinguished himself by beating an all-aged field with 96 pounds in the saddle in 1:40, which is wonderfully fast performance for an Australian track.

QUINN'S OINTMENT FOR HORSES

stands at the head of all veterinary remedies. Such troubles as Spavins, Curbs, Windpuffs, Splints, Bunches have no terrors for a horse if the master keeps and applies Quinn's Ointment. All well-known horsemen speak of it in the highest terms:

Miller & Sibley, of Franklin, Pa., owners of St. Bel, brother of late Bell Boy, write, "We have used Quinn's Ointment with great success and believe it infallible all claimed for it. We cheerfully recommend it to our friends." For Curbs, Splints, Spavins or Bunches, it has no equal.

"THE JOCKEY."—The old-time jockey—that is if fifty years ago can be thus classed—is thus described by "Nimrod," Chas. Appersley, Esq., one of the noted turf writers of his day, so celebrated in fact, that he can be placed on the very top round of the ladder. A big difference, however, in those "palmy days of the English turf" and the conditions which now prevail, as will be learned from the paragraphs quoted. The whole article would be well worthy of reproduction, long as it is, but even a couple or so of pages will be sufficient to show that from the time of the "elder Chifney" there were people of high importance amongst those knights of the pigskin. Bred and reared for the profession and though occasionally a son of a jockey will be following the same line of work in this country as the father pursued, as a rule the best jockeys here have been picked up by trainers and educated for the business. Dr. Weldon was eminently successful in turning out finished jockeys from the raw material. "Bobby Swim" was picked up in St. Louis, a diminutive street Arab, sharp-eyed and so covered with freckles that the natural color of his skin could not be told from his face and hands. "A gem, sure," was the remark of the doctor when he presented his protegee for examination, and the prediction was thoroughly verified, as his riding capacity was of the highest class and had there been other qualities to back that, never a superior, in this or any other country.

The genial doctor took delight in discovering latent talent and another of his selections was not far behind Bobby, but as he is now in California and got too heavy years ago to ride, it will be as well not to bring him on the stage. Thirty years ago I saw him ride a great race of four miles, and if Doctor W. had not hampered him with instructions he would surely have won it. A son gives promise of being more than a good rider, and in this case it may be that America will emulate England in having families of jockeys. Here is a paragraph from Nimrod.

"As naturally may be imagined, Jockeys are generally the produce of rather diminutive parents; still, there are some very striking exceptions. The Days, for example—John and Samuel—are the sons of a man who rejoiced in the soubriquet of Broad Day, inasmuch as he weighed nearly twenty stone! John Day's sons, however, have taken after the father, who may be called Day Light; but one of them unfortunately lost his life by a fall, whilst following hounds, a year or two back. And such has been the case with all the Edwardses, Newmarket Jockeys of great renown—whose father was so small, as to be known at Newmarket as tiny Edwards, par excellence. George IV. patronized this family, and was once heard to exclaim, on seeing so many of them preparing to ride in one race—"Bless me, what lots of Jockeys Mrs. Edwards breeds!"

It will not do, however, to compare the English jockeys of to-day with those of the era when Holcroft was exercising race horses at Newmarket. Many of them well educated and when amateurs are taken into consideration graduates of Oxford and Cambridge are oftentimes seen in the saddle.

"The great English lexicographer was, perhaps, never more at sea than when called upon to define the word Jockey. The un de rivatur? as the schoolmaster expresses himself, is ridiculously responded to by him after this fashion: "Jockey, n. s. From Jack, the diminutive of John, comes Jackey, or, as the Scotch say, Jockey; used for any boy, and particularly for a boy who rides racehorses." Again, "A fellow that rides horses in the race." Again, "A man that deals in horses." Again "A cheat, a trickish fellow;" and here the Doctor, no doubt, thought he had hit the mark; for it is well known that, when asked why he did not go to see a race, he replied, "It was no pleasure to him to see a rogue in red ride after a rogue in green." However, without further disputing or despising this great authority, let us proceed to develop the character of the British Jockey.

The Jockey is generally the son of a Jockey, or of a trainer of racehorses, who puts him into the saddle as soon as he can stride across one. Should he be a fine child for his age, the hopes of his parents are at once blasted, inasmuch as he can never expect to get beyond riding exercises, and then only till about the fifth year of his teens. But he must not be "a fine child for his age." His growth must be stopped, if he is to ride the winner of the Derby—the pinnacle of ambition in a Jockey's eye—by potatoes of gin mixed with his mother's milk, and the muzzle must be put on him as regards that—i. e. the milk. His sucking propensities, in fact, must be reserved for after-life, to draw forth secrets from those connected with his profession, which, in vulgar language, is called "pumping."

The intellectual education of a jockey is a matter little thought of, even in these enlightened days. Indeed, it was considered so perfectly unnecessary half a century back, that the celebrated dramatic writer, Holcroft, tells us in his Memoir, that, when training for the profession of a jockey, at Newmarket, he was considered on a point of going raving mad, from the simple fact of his being found by his brother stable-boys in the act of reading a book at one time, and casting up some figures on the door of the stable with a rusty nail at another! No; it is discipline, not education, that leads the young jockey to eminence; and to rigid discipline, if not moral, must he be contented to submit ere he can be expected to attain it. In fact, the words of a modern poet may be applied to too many of his caste:—

"Among thy fellow-men a weary lot is thine:
To glory and to suffer—to toil and yet to pine."

The practical education of the Jockey is this:—At about his twelfth year, well breeched and gaitered, he is put on the quietest race-horse in the string (the Newmarket term for lot); and somewhere about the middle of it, he follows those before him. His employer soon finds out whether he is likely to improve in the saddle, by the use he makes of his hands; that of his head being for after consideration, and of no importance at present. A few months, however, develop him. If promising, he is put to ride a short trial. He makes a mistake as may be expected; he does not wait long enough, and according to orders; but it is the first attempt. He handled his horse well, and the task is repeated on the morrow. "Wait till the last hundred yards," says his employer—a difficult task for a young one, always eager to get home. He does wait, and wins his trial. "There now Jack," says his master—"you see, you won this trial by strictly following your orders! If you mean to be a Jockey, you must minutely attend to this point. Had you been riding a race yesterday, you would have lost your employer's money, by not doing as you were bidden." He is next put to a still severer test: another trial is to be run at very light weights, and he is again put up, with orders to make running; in non-racing language, to take the lead. But there are not a dozen old Jockeys, nor have there ever been a dozen, who have been found eminently to succeed in this difficult task. The non-racing world would naturally ask, "Why? What more easy to one who knows how to ride a race-horse in his gallop," they would exclaim, "than to let him go nearly as fast as his legs can carry him, at the same time giving him the necessary support from the hand, so as not to allow him to exhaust himself more than is to be expected from his exertion?" We answer, nothing more easy; the difficulty lies in the rider being able to assure himself as to what rate or degree of speed his horse is going. Neither is that all. He must be so far cool and collected in those exciting moments, as to be able to appreciate the effect the pace at which his horse is running has on the others with which he may be contending in the race; as likewise on the horse he himself is riding. Here is work for the head, all to be done in the space of two or three minutes at most; and whilst every nerve and muscle in the frame (of one only half developed, perhaps) is quivering from the severe exertion of riding a hard-pulling horse, at a rate approaching that of one mile in a minute! Carthage produced but one Hannibal; nor is it to be wondered at that an age does not produce more than half a dozen quite perfect Jockeys.

But to revert, for a moment, to the education of a first-class Jockey, just for the purpose of showing to what good account it may occasionally turn, and what little reason there was for Mr. Holcroft being considered mad because he was able to read "Arnold's Psalmody;" or as was thought still more miraculous, to spell a word of six syllables—A pamphlet of only one hundred and seventy pages now lies before me, entitled, "Genuis Genuine, by Samuel Chifney, of Newmarket." Price five pounds!! John Gibson Lockhart, of "The Quarterly;" Professor Napier, of "The Edinburgh;" Edward Lytton Bulwer; Theodore Hook,—hide your diminished heads. None of you ever wrote one hundred and seventy pages, twenty lines to a page, with a river of margin that sold for five pounds; neither will you ever do so.

A GREAT DRAWBACK.—I feel particularly anxious that the ordinance now under consideration by the Board of Supervisors of San Francisco city and county does not become a law, inasmuch as it would be a serious drawback to the horse-breeding interests of the whole State. The breeders of harness horses as well as thoroughbreds will be affected, and, incidental thereto, so many others that are in many ways connected with the pursuit.

In the last twenty years California has gained the well-deserved reputation of being one of the greatest horse-breeding countries in the world. Racehorses, trotters and pacers, bred and reared in this State, have shown their excellence, on all the main racecourses and trotting tracks in the United States. The largest and most complete breeding farms in both hemispheres are located here. Rancho del Paso so far overshadows every European establishment of the kind, that there is little room for comparison. Nearly five hundred thoroughbred mares, nearly a score of the very best thoroughbred stallions that could be purchased in England and Australasia, hundreds of the best breeds of harness horses on that one rancho. Others not very far behind. Palo Alto, Santa Anita, Elmwood, Oakwood Park and a great number of smaller breeders engaged in the business. The breeding of harness horses is equally as prominent, the numbers of people engaged in that branch being larger than those in racehorse production.

While racing meetings in California were restricted to one or two weeks at each course, there was no inducement for eastern turfmen and eastern horses to compete. From the time winter racing was inaugurated at the Bay District Track there were eastern participants, and from that time on steady augmentation of men and horses.

Grown into such proportions that anything like a true estimate of the money expended by eastern visitors would be regarded as wonderfully extravagant. To meet the wants of home and transient people the Pacific Coast Jockey Club has expended large sums of money to provide course, buildings, etc., that have cost a very large sum of money, an ornament to the city, a credit to the State, a "souvenir" in which every resident can feel just pride.

To secure a moderate return for this large expenditure there must be an opportunity afforded to have meetings that will cover the time now embraced. Alternating with those of the California Jockey Club, each club having two weeks. It cannot be termed a continuous meeting, and any abridgement will work serious injury. While the direct bearing is the hampering of racing, that is, galloping contests, and, it may be an entire abandonment in this city, it will be a severe blow to harness-racing, that is, trotting and pacing events.

The Pacific Coast Jockey Club has given, and will continue to give, the free use of its splendid grounds and track to harness horses, during the period when their regular meetings are not held. This is thoroughly appreciated by everyone connected with harness horses in all sections of the State, and an ordinance which would conflict with its interests would inspire deep feelings of regret. Furthermore, I can state, that after nearly fifty years of experience, about equally divided between Eastern and California racecourses, intimately connected with racing in all its branches, I never knew more careful management than that of the P. C. J. C. Every possible guard to ensure square racing, and every fair-minded observer must acknowledge that success has followed.

Feeling, as I do, the deepest solicitation for the well-doing of a pursuit that I have been identified with for so many years, and with an abiding trust, that after due consideration a measure which cannot be otherwise than disastrous will not prevail.

There is still a dread that under the pressure of bigoted advice, common sense will be overslaughed.

A GOOD IDEA.—Mr. J. H. Wallace in the Trotter and Pacer makes the following suggestions, and it "goes without saying" that they are well worthy of adoption. Again Mr. W. is right in stating that the old time horse pictures were, as a rule, far from being true representation, many of them caricatures. Artists had a horse in their minds which they depicted, the camera reflects a likeness.

The wonderful improvements, of late years, in the art of photography and the various processes by which relief plates are produced all ready for the printing press have made this an age of pictures. The skillful photographer with his "snap shot," to say nothing of the amateur with his pocket Kodak, is now giving us accurate likenesses, and this is something that our ancestors in all the history of the horse never saw. But after we have studied the portrait point by point, as brought out by the camera, and admired the graceful outline, there is one vital fact about which we are still in the dark. We don't know the size of the animal. In the inscription underneath we are sure to find his record of performance, if he has a fast one, and something of his breeding if it is fashionable, but seldom if ever, any intimation as to his size.

Now, if publishers would urge their contributors to furnishing portraits to give the exact height at the withers, under a correct standard, we would have a starting point that the picture itself fails to furnish. This one measurement, if correct, would furnish great relief and great assistance in forming a true estimate of the animal. If to this one measurement the height across the loin could be given, it would add greatly to the public satisfaction. Then, the picture shows nothing but the side view and we want to look at both ends of the animal before we buy him or breed to him, and as this is not practicable in a single picture what are we going to do about it? He may be broad and stocky, or he may be narrow and weedy, and if you will just put him on the scales and weigh him the whole trouble is dispelled. The height on the withers is indispensable, the height on the loin is a trotting indication and the weight on the scales, although it sounds like a bullock, is very important in this age of pictures.

J. H. WALLACE.

NEW YORK, March 28, 1898.

DIRECTOR—RED WILKES.—When these great,—decidedly great, progenitors of fast harness horses only brought $1,275, and $600 at an auction sale in Philadelphia last Wednesday, it might be accepted that the business had gone to the "demonition bow-wows," but as Director is twenty-one years old, and Red Wilkes twenty-four, few there would be to take the risks. A matter of sentiment chiefly and well worthy of the price paid on that account. Director was bought by Robert McAfee, representing the Locust Grove Stock Farm, Newcastle, Pa., and Red Wilkes by William C. Hendrickson, proprietor of the Bellemeade Stock Farm, Bellemeade, N. J. One colt of the class that have shown to the credit of these stallions will amply repay the purchasers, and there is a fair prospect of several years of service to be added to those of the past. Red Wilkes has 139 representatives in the list, with fourteen which have taken fifteen seconds from the standard requirement. Director commenced his victorious career in California and was well named the "iron horse." Quite a number of his descendants here yet, some of them which are sure to keep up the reputation of the clan.

CHAMPIONS.—There is always a huge amount of curiosity regarding the question, which, among the many aspirants, will wear the garland? Will Star Pointer be dethroned? Will Alix lose the pride of place?

One championship is still less in danger of being disturbed and that is Arion. Two minutes: not outside the bounds of possibilities, 2:10½, for a two-year-old to a high wheeled sulky, is a more difficult task.

Harness-Racing Prospects.

As will be learned from the advertisement in this issue the Pacific Coast Trotting-Horse Breeders Association has presented the programme for the first two weeks of its meeting. The only change from that published two weeks ago is the incorporation of one heat races in each afternoon. This is surely an improvement as the dash system is not, as yet, fully proved, and a race of the old-fashioned sort is likely to prove acceptable to a majority of the spectators.

It may be that after due trial this shortening of the races will take so well that heats will become obsolete. In Europe, Australia and New Zealand it certainly has the approval of racegoers, and it is a fair inference that what has proved attractive in these countries will not fail in this. That there are strong prejudices to overcome is beyond reasonable contention. Harness-racing folk can safely be termed ultra-conservative, and the old ruts worn so deeply that a strong "purchase" is required to bring the wheels of the fifty-year-old car out of the depressions. Pits might be a better expression, as some of them are excavated to a depth that sinks the wheels of progress to the hub. Growing smaller every day the ranks of those who are determined not to acquire information and in place of decrying the usages which have proved so effective on the racecourse are now willing to adopt them.

Strange, indeed, if in the onward march, harness racing must follow the old paths. Good as they were, and so well as the interests were subserved, in the infancy of the sport, there are differences which cannot be overlooked. The twentieth century close at hand, even the practices which were well adapted to the wants of seventy-five years ago must be replaced by later day improvements.

The Overland Trotting and Racing Association.

Forty thousand dollars, the amount hung up in purses by this popular Club, and that so well divided that it would appear as if all the classes had a good chance.

Purses ranging from $500 to $1,000, and as the entries do not close until May 15th our people can have a good idea of what can be expected.

Mr. B. H. Dubois being the President and Mr. Charles N. Roberts, Secretary of the Association, no further guarantee is required that every participant will be awarded a "fair field," no one granted favors denied to others.

Rulings of the C. J. O Stewards.

The cases of Eddie Jones, W. Taylor, and Spencer, among others, came up before the California Jockey Club stewards last Thursday night. Spencer was reinstated, nothing having been proven against him. The boy's stay on the ground will probably have the effect of making him so rigorous in the future that the breath of suspicion will never touch his name again. Spencer is a good rider now and he promises to make a grand one, for he is young and has not been at the business very long. In the case of Eddie Jones the stewards not only refused to reinstate him, but hereafter he will be denied the privileges of the C. J. C. track. Jones will doubtless have the sympathy of many persons who began to admire him some four years ago, when he was "not bigger than a minute." At that time and for the whole of the season of 1895 no one for a minute doubted the honesty of the wee lad. The first tinge of suspicion that the boy was not doing just right came in 1896, if memory serves us, and the whisper finally turned into a roar, and he was "set down" several times. In 1897, at St. Louis, he was suspended indefinitely by Judge Murphy, but was allowed to ride again after a few months. Then came the frequent linking of the name of Eddie Jones and a well-known book-maker and alleged crooked riding by the boy in the interest of the pencil, and now the jockey is virtually rulled off the turf and in addition denied the privileges of the course. If Jones is guilty it strikes us that the pencil is equally so, yet we have yet to hear of the book-maker being even summoned to appear before the stewards.

And while we are on the subject we wish to speak of the need of a totalizer to take the place of book-makers, a matter we have urged upon our racing clubs for many years. As time rolls around it becomes more manifest that most of the fraud is traceable to the layers of the odds. It is such an easy matter to rob the public through jockeys "pulling" horses in the interest of some pencil that no wonder the opportunity is embraced so often. The use of the totalizer pretty nearly cuts out fraud, for the "crooked" ones have to pick a winner in a race in order to get the coin, and they cannot always do that.

In the Harry Wise reconsideration Trainer Goodin declared that the young man who employed him was totally in the dark as to the change made in the mares, and it cannot be said just what will be done at this writing.

The case of Wm. Napier and his mare, Lady Hurst, was also taken up, and reinstatement will probably follow. Mr. Napier is certainly blameless in the matter of the mare's erratic running, as she was out of his hands altogether, and the owner's offer to have the mare put in the hands of any trainer the Club designated and see if she ran in an erratic manner without the use of any drug, is certainly a fair one.

Entries for the P. C. T. H. B. B.

In another column will be found the programme of races for the first two weeks of the summer meeting of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association to be held at the California Jockey Club's new track at Oakland commencing June 25th next. Entries for the first two weeks racing will close on June 1st, and it therefore behooves every owner of a trotter or pacer to carefully scan the list of purses and make their entries without loss of time. Many novelties in harness racing will be introduced at this meeting and there is every prospect of greatly increased attendance and interest. Entries will also close on June 1st for the Colt Stakes of 1898 offered by the P. C. T. H. B. A. A list of these with their conditions will also be found in our advertising columns.

ATTENTION is directed to the advertisement of Ruinar Stock Farm on another page. Considerable inquiry is being made at the present time for good pasturage and Mr. Ashe reports he has a superabundance of green feed in all of his fields. There has been no lack of rain in the locality where the farm is situated. The best of care will be given to fine stock entrusted to them.

THE State Agricultural Society has opened four colt stakes for trotters and pacers, and the attention of owners and trainers is called to the advertisement in another column showing what the conditions of entrance are. Entries are also solicited for the Stanford Stakes, for foals of 1897, to be trotted in 1900.

MESSRS. GOODWIN BROTHERS, publishers of the official Turf Guide, have just issued a new publication, which should find a ready sale and should be in the hands of every breeder, owner and racing secretary in the country. It is the Winning Stallions in 1897, and contains all the winning stallions of the United States and Canada, showing the amount won by each of their progeny in first, second or third moneys, with total to each sire. This is the first time the winning stallions have ever been published separately in book form in this country. The book is handsomely bound, printed on heavy paper, and is carefully and accurately compiled. It represents a tremendous amount of labor, and the book may be considered cheap at $5, at which price it may be secured from the publishers, Messrs. Goodwin Brothers, 1440 Broadway, New York City. The following are the stallions whose get won $20,000 and over: Hanover, $116,140; imp. Order, $71,770; imp. Rayon d'Or, $65,247; Bramble, $64,701; Himyar, $58,046; Fonso, $52,813; Kinglike, $46,427; imp. Pirate of Penzance, $44,999; Iroquois, $43,850; imp. Midlothian, $41,688; Friar's Balsam, $40,160; Hindoo, $39,455; imp. Deceiver, $38,764; Leonatus, $37,580; The Bard, $37,260; Salvator, $36,590; Sir Dixon, $35,085; imp. ## Washington Park Will Soon Hold a Meeting.

CHICAGO, April 7.—There will be racing at Washington Park track this summer. That decision was reached to-night at the meeting of the Board of Directors. The matter has been in abeyance for some time. The Board has now declared itself. It unanimously recommended to the Executive Committee that a race meeting be held.

Although nominally the latter body will be called upon to act, the whole affair is practically settled. A revival of the meetings for which the track is justly famed, including the American Derby, is at hand. The intention of the management is that the meet shall be in every way similar to those which have taken place in the past. The Derby will inaugurate the new regime on June 25th. The meeting will last twenty-five days.

Secretary Howard, who has been chafing under the enforced idleness of the past three years, is inspired with new energy. He will devote his whole time and energy to securing the presence of good stables for the stakes and purses. Upon that score, however, he anticipates little difficulty. The prizes will be rich enough to draw the best performers in the country, as has been the case in the past. No opposition is anticipated.

Colonel M. L. Clark will preside in the judges' stand and "Dick" Dwyer will do the starting.

A Model Apartment House.

The "Sausalito," located at 110 Ellis street, is one of the best equipped lodging houses in this city. Under the management of Col. J. E. Slinkey, the well-known hotel boniface of this city, the "Sausalito" offers to the traveling public every comfort of a well-equipped apartment house. A trial will convince the most skeptical that Col. Slinkey is the right man in the right place.

THE Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern line, with its daily service of through Pullman and Tourist Sleeping Cars, to all Eastern points, and all meals served "a la carte" in dining cars, offers "comforts in travel" nowhere reached in a higher degree of perfection. Passengers leaving San Francisco on the 6 P. M. train arrive in Chicago in 3½ days, and avoid the necessity of changing cars en route. For tickets and sleeping car reservations call on or address R. R. Ritchie, General Agent, No. 2 New Montgomery street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco, Cal.

EVERY season some wealthy man joins the turfman's ranks. One of the most valuable additions to the racing game in California was H. L. Frank of Batte, Mont. He has a big stable of horses at the track and is one of the heaviest bettors. He experienced disastrous luck at the first and was probably $20,000 loser at one time, but he has had several big winning days and may get out on the season. He won heavily on the victory of May W. Thursday.

PLEASANT PLEASANTON! I may be charged with undue favoritism when so much attention is given to the little town so pleasantly situated in the western edge of the valley of Livermore. The whole valley worthy of the highest encomiums from almost any point of view. Fertile as the delta of the Nile, beautiful as the vale of Cashmere when beauty is measured by "buds, bloom and flowers." Then the framework. Mountains, grand and imposing, on every side. Mont Diablo, towering to nearly four thousand feet above the sea level, loses its imposing altitude by ranges that measure more than half as much, that rise in gradual gradations, so that the whole valley is encircled by a border of hills and mountains.

The track nestles at the foot of the western range. Cosily situated, guarded against the chill winds of north and west, and ravines, glens and canyons, wooded and picturesque, dividing the summits, or rather making pictures that will delight a lover of natural beauty.

Plenty of horses to give life and animation to the scene. Horses already famous, and those which are so sure to take a high position in the ranks of equine aristocracy that the most rosy predictions are fully justified.

Through the kindness of Mr. Silver at a late visit, several views were secured and pictures of horses. Three of them are presented in this number, Dione, always a favorite of mine, although adverse fortune has kept her 'n the background. Doing so well now, however, that I feel perfectly safe in the prediction that she will be the bright particular star of her family, and that is saying a great deal when her close relationship to Hulda is taken into consideration.

I never saw her looking so well. She has grown some in height and "lengthened out," and if there is a corresponding length of stride, even championship honors are not outside of her probabilities.

Caryle Carne demonstrated his gameness in his race at Oakland, and those who have watched him the closest are decided in their opinion that he will knock off a huge handful of seconds from his record of 2:11½.

son. Growth hardly expresses the difference. It may be that the standard would not show much addition to height, but that he has increased in all other respects is too palpable to be overlooked.

So much to be said about the horses at Pleasanton that anything like a full account would require chapters, and then the tale not half told. For instance, there are several representatives of a family that first gained distinction on this coast by winning racing stakes.

Mr. James B. McDonald of Marysville, California, made a successful investment by supporting Wildidle in a four-mile race on the Bay District course. He resolved to lay out a part of the money in thoroughbred horses and attended the spring sales at Lexington, Kentucky. He bought Lexington Belle, by Lexington, from Eaglesby imported Glencoe. He also bought Brigadier by Happy Medium, and raced world, but also the hero of so many hotly-contested races that a mere championship record is nothing in comparison.

Other celebrities, so many of them, in fact, that people who are not conversant with "horse history" might think there was a tendency to amplify when describing their merits. Merely this. Not another track in the United States that can show the equal of the horses which will be at the Pleasanton track on the 30th of April.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

Winning Sires of the Year in America.

Hanover led all winning sires in America in America in 1897, his progeny securing $116,400, of which amount Hamburg contributed a little over $40,000. Thanks to Or-nament, who won no less than $53,375, imp. Order is second on the list with $71,770 to his credit.

Imported Rayon d'Or is third with $65,247 and leads Bramble but $500. Himyar, $58,046; Fonso, $52,813; Kinglike, $46,427; imported Pirate of Pen-zance, $44,999, and Iroquois, $43,850, are next in order. The prominent position of Kinglike is due to the win of the rich Futuait by L'Alouette.

California does not figure so high up as in past years. Imp. Midlothian leads all California stallions and is tenth on the list. Salvator is next to Midlothian, and then comes imp. Sir Modred, St. Carlo, imp. Brutus, Emperor of Norfolk, imp. Maxim, imp. Martenhurst, imp. Darebin, Fresno, Ben Ali, Morello, El Rio Rey, and Surinam.

The following official record of California sires, as compiled by Goodwin Brothers, will prove of interest:

Imp. Midlothian—Braw Scot $210, California $3,100, Candelaria $1,375, Chic $370, Colonel Wheeler $2,095, Deerslayer $2,785, Don Luis $1,230, Gold Boy $135, Hester $1,025, Horatio $2,125, Iola $225, Jim Brownell $50, Lodestar $425, Lorrana $375, Maid of Honor $235, Midglen $50, Midian $995, Midlight $2,920, Midlo $1,035, Midrica $610, Midstar $50, Mirth $775, Miss Maggie M, $225, Miss Rowena $4,025, Na Pogue $200, Sen Tuzza $790, Scotch Plaid $2,340, Scotch Rose $1,565, Senator Morrill $1,328, Sir Walter $5,750 and Tea Rose $3190; total $41,688.

Salvator—Arbitrator $40, Bliss Rucker $4,375, Colonel Dan $4,375, Elsie Smith $570, John Sullivan $710, Juno $275, M. Clicquot $275, Our Gertie $2,840, Salabar $3,890, Sallie Clicquot $2,370, Sallust $315, CARYLE CARNE.

THE COMING CHAMPION.
WHO IS IT?

"John," who has looked after so many of the celebrities has an expressive smile on his good-natured countenance when questioned in regard to his present pet, and should the queerly-named horse fail to obtain a greatly improved place in the trotting records, during this season of 1898, he will, to say the least, be quite disgruntled.

These two pictures are named, the other one of the trio my readers will have to put on their thinking caps, and conjecture which of the denizens of the stables will fill the bill.

The picture gives the homestretch and judges' stand, the horse forming so small a part of the portraiture that not much knowledge can be obtained of his form. But this much I can say, on my own knowledge, that if nothing happens to the one represented the head of the class will be the position occupied at the close of the season.

Brave words, it is true, but seldom, indeed, when I felt there were more solid ground to base a vaticination upon.

What of the other celebrities at Pleasanton? Other pictures taken, and these well worthy of reproduction. Lady Salisbury; Lena N.—never so fast a horse at the pace, say those who have seen all of the cracks—and after them Azote, Searchlight, Lady Margaret, Rect, Anaconda, Owyhee, Klatawah, Diablo, celebrities firmly established or giving full promise of acquiring a full measure of fame. And so far as I saw all of them looking to be in robust health and acquiring that condition which is so essential in stubbornly contested races.

Searchlight comes very nearly to filling the bill. He has surely grown since he came out of his victorious sea-both of these purchases successfully. He bred Lexington Belle to Brigadier, and in 1882 she had a filly, Lassie Jean. From Lassie Jean there are colts in training at Pleasanton that are surely worthy of more than passing comment.

By good sires, it is true, but when they are hailed with acclamations a great part of the glory must be awarded the "blind hero of Woodburn."

And now to digress from the horses, though still within horse circles, the race day which is to be held on the track, Saturday, April 30th, two weeks from the date of this issue, will come in for a full share of attention. It may appear singular that on what many may term an outside place, a big attendance can be secured, but judging from the history of the past, it is already assured that a big concourse of people will be on hand.

Thousands surely, and it is safe to assert there there will be an appreciative gathering well worth the trip to those who are constant attendants at Ingleside and Oakland, as there will be novel features to admire and a full measure of enjoyment in witnessing the happiness of those to whom racing is only an occasional pleasure.

Quite liberal, too, the programme. One thousand dollars hung up, and the track as open as field on a farm. But it is beyond question that high fences and closely guarded gates are not necessary to put an embargo on those who would fain beat their way and ticket sellers will be kept busy to furnish credentials.

Apart from the five races on the bill there will be other attractions. Directum, not only the champion stallion of the Salmera $2,600, Salvable $9,075 Salvado $1,595, Salvation $2,100, San Mateo $325, Sleepy Belle $30, St. Aignon, $295, St. Raymon $375, Sylvester $280 and Woodford Filly; total, $36,590.

Imp. Sir Modred, winners of $1,000 or more—Adam Andrew $1,130, Briar Sweet $1,980, Connoisseur $1,142, Decapod $2,497, Hermoso $1,050, Hi Daddy $1,015, Lizetta $1,163, Manchester $1,775, Momentum $1,030, Premier $8232, Simmons $2,820 and Sir Play $1,105; total, $32,036.

St. Carlo; Principal winners—Charlemagne $1,080, Count of Flanders $3,350, Joan $930, Lord Marmion $1,820, Ruinart $8,875, St. Cataline $4,605, St. Cuthbert $1,155 and Zimar $2,500; total, $28,333.

Imp. Brutus; principal winners—Duckling $3,205, Hobenzollern $1,225, Installer $2,580, Meadow Lark $1,505, Nebula $1,420, Peter II $1,215, The Roman $5,160 and Vincitor $1,075; total, $23,767.

Emperor of Norfolk—Bernardillo $5,655, Estaca, $4,945, Midas $935, Reddington $2,675, Rey el Salto $850, Rey Salazar $1,795 and Sinclora III. $1,050; total, $24,195.

Imp. Maxim—Altamex $4,675, Chum $1,050, Fleur de Lis $1,974, Napamax $3,952 Parthemax $1,125 and Shasta Water $4,295; total, $19,774.

The progeny of Fresno won $16,605; Ben Ali, $13,640; Morello, $12,305; Apache, $11,277; El Rio Rey, $10,366; Surinam, $10,015, and imp. Prestonpans, $9,610.

The Owner of the Great Wilton.

CIRCLEVILLE, O.

Dear Sir—The Speed Sustaining Elixir is a compound that is invaluable in resisting fatigue in a horse while undergoing excessive physical exertion. I have found it beneficial this season in several instances. In a word, it does all claimed for it.

The San Jose Show.

The bench show held at San Jose last week under the auspices of the Santa Clara Valley Poultry and Kennel Club in combination with the California Collie Club was on the whole a creditable one in many respects. Mr. C. R. Harker, the Secretary, and Superintendent J. C. Berrett are deserving of great praise for the systematic order and detail with which the show was conducted. Mr. C. D. Nairo, who judged all classes, seems to have given general satisfaction; he has the reputation of being a careful and pains-taking judge. The attendance was good each day and evening during the show, among the San Francisco visitors we noticed Dr. W. J. Cluness, Jr., Miss Ethel Creagh, Thos. H. Browne, J. Kirkpatrick, John E. De Ruyter, J. G. Barker, H. A. Wegener, W. L. Prather, Jr., Arthur Bennett, J. B. Martin, D. J. Sinclair, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst, Mrs. A. Roncouveri, Mrs. F. E. Beck and others.

The entry list was not large in numbers but the standard of quality was of a good order, remarkably so, in some classes. The entries of most absorbing interest during the show were the collies—perhaps one of the most notable tributes ever paid a California dog was when the Verona Kennels' Bonnie Brae, Braw Scot, and Verona Artistic beat the famous imported dogs, Heathermint, Heather Molly, and Border Lad. The San Jose business men deserve a word of commendation for the liberal manner in which they contributed special prizes.

The list of awards was as follows:

Standards.

THE COLLIE.—The head is moderately long, covered with short, soft hair. Skull: flat, moderately wide between the ears and tapering to the eyes; very little stop. Skin on head very tightly drawn. Muzzle: of fair length, tapering to the nose, which should always be black. Mouth a bit overshot. Eyes: of fair size, not prominent, placed rather wide apart, almond shaped and set obliquely—they may be of any shade of brown: the darker the better. Ears: small, covered with short, soft hair, carried semi-erect when at attention; at other times thrown back.

Neck: long, arched and muscular. Chest: deep and narrow in front, but wide behind the shoulders. Back: short and level. Shoulders: oblique. Loins: rather long, slightly arched and powerful. Forelegs: straight and muscular. Hindlegs: sinewy. Hindquarters: drooping slightly, very long from hips to hocks. Stiffes: well bent. Hip bones: rather wide and ragged. Pastern: long, springy and lighter in bone than the rest of the leg. Feet: oval soles well padded, toes arched and compact. Tail: moderately long, carried low when quiet, gaily when excited.

Coat: an important point—abundant, except on head and legs, the outer coat straight hard and stiff; inner coat soft furry and very dense; frill, very abundant; hair on tail very profuse and on the hips long and bushy; forelegs slightly feathered; hindlegs below hocks smooth.

Color: not material.

Height: dogs, 21 to 24 inches—bitches, 2 inches less.

Weight: dogs, 45 to 60 pounds—bitches, 40 to 50 pounds.

Defects—Domed skull; high peaked occipital bone; heavy pendulous ears; full, soft eyes; heavy feathered legs; short tail.

General appearance is that of a lithe, active dog, of pleasing outline, exhibiting strength, speed and intelligence.

San Francisco Bench Show.

Active preparation on the part of the San Francisco Kennel Club, for the coming bench show to be held at the Mechanic's Pavilion on May 18-21, is now in progress. The office is open and located at 224 Montgomery Street, where Secretary H. H. Carlton and Mr. D. J. Sinclair, who will be the clerk of the show this year can be found. E. M. Oldham has again been selected to act as Superintendent, the gentleman is due in Frisco on the 18th inst. Spratt's Patent will bench and feed the dogs as usual. Mr. Jas. Burrell of New York will officiate as judge of the collie class. Mr. E. J. Bull [judge of coursing at the Union Coursing Park] will judge the greyhound class, and Mr. Geo. Bell, of Chicago, will judge all other classes. The premium list will be issued in a few days, the list of awards and specials will be more than satisfactory to the fancy. From present assurances the Club is sanguine that the coming exhibit will be a most excellent one and a success in every particular. An innovation that will strike, not only the fancy, but the public at large, as a most happy departure from the routine of general exhibitions, is the announcement that seventy-five per cent of the net proceeds of this bench show will be devoted to distribution among charitable organizations, viz: the Protestant, Catholic, and Hebrew Orphan Asylums, the Children's Hospital, and the Associated Charities.

COURSING.

April 8-9—Ingleside Coursing Park. Regular meetings every Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Drawings every Thursday evening, 1019 Market street.

April 8-9—Union Coursing Park. Regular meetings every Saturday, Sunday and holidays. Drawings every Wednesday evening, 909 Market street.

The Pittsburg entry list is over 600.

The Pacific Mastiff Club will hold a regular meeting this evening.

The collie Finsbury Pilot, sire of Verona Kennels' Old Hall Admiral, was sold recently in England for $1,000.

Fred McDougall, of Pleasanton, has recovered his fine hunting dog "Don" which disappeared about three weeks ago.

The career of the new comers in J. B. Martin's fox terrier kennels, two pups whelped recently (Ch. Golden Jewell—Ch. Norfolk Veracity) will be followed with some little interest by fanciers.

It is reported that a bench show will be held in Oakland within a week after the dates of the San Francisco Show. This is a good move and will no doubt add materially to the success of our friends across the bay.

W. L. Prather, Jr., brought his fox hounds up from San Jose on Sunday, as they had been penned up in the bench show at San Jose for four days he deemed it wise to give them a little exercise. They were put down just below the dam at Lake Temescal and in a short time they started a fine fox from a thicket. Reynard kept the dogs on the run for two hours before he surrendered his brush.

K. K. Gardner, Secretary of the Pacific Advisory Board has been notified by Secretary Vreedenburg of the A. K. C., that the Southern California Kennel Club, the Victoria Kennel Club, the Stockton Kennel Club and the Cocker Spaniel Club of California have been suspended for non payment of dues. This apparently means that record bench shows will not be held this year in either Los Angeles, Stockton or Victoria.

G. A. Mudgett (Alameda County Kennels) has recently purchased from Mrs. Lee (Alta Kennels), Toledo, Ohio, the fine, promising young rough-coat St. Bernard bitch Princess Rachel (Le Prince—Judith Rachel). She won first in the open class at Toledo last December. She weighs about 160 pounds, is perfect in color and markings, has elegant conformation and is strong boned. This bitch is a valuable addition to the St. Bernard ranks on this Coast.

Joseph McLatchie, who had at one time one of the best fox terrier kennels upon the Coast, has been very unfortunate lately with his dogs. Mission Clairette, by Blemton Reefer—Dauntless Suzette, a frequent winner upon the bench, was killed by a car recently. Mission Rival, by Blemton Reefer—Rejoice, was lost some months ago and no trace has been heard of him since. Several inbred Reefer pups have died from distemper. All that Mr. McLatchie has left of his kennel is a bitch by Blemton Reefer—Dauntless White Violet.

WHELPS.

J. B. Martin's (San Francisco) fox terrier bitch Ch. Golden Jewell (Blemton Reefer—Blemton Spinaway) whelped on March 27, 1898, one dog and one bitch to Geo. H. Gooderham's Ch. Norfolk Veracity (Visto—Violet de Vere).

NEW YORK.

H. CLAY GLOVER, V. S., Dear Sir—I have used your Distemper Cure in several severe and obstinate cases of distemper, and regard the remedy as invaluable in every kennel of dogs, Yours truly, LOUIS C. CLARK.

NOTICE TO SECRETARIES.

If secretaries of gun clubs will send us the full scores of their regular monthly shoots we will be pleased to publish them; but we must receive the copy on Wednesday to insure its insertion that week.

The Game Law.

Ventura—Deer, July 15 to Sept. 1. (Market hunting prohibited).

California Wing Club.

A large and interested attendance of sportsmen and their friends were present at the second monthly live-bird shoot of the California Wing Club at Ingleside last Sunday. In the club race at twelve birds there were twenty-seven entries (all but four of them shooting out the entire string); this was the largest entry of the year, and in consequence the birds ran short in the third event of the day. The score in the club medal shoot was as follows:

O. Feudner	22212222222-12	S. Sharp	0*210121122-9
H. McMurphy	2222121122-12	Russ	0*012111011-9

West	2121201110*2-9

* Dead out of bounds. † Withdrew.

The only straight scores were by Otto Feudner and Harvey McMurphy of Syracuse, N. Y. "Mac" tied Feudner in a similar race a year ago in a California Wing Club shoot. The eleven hole was held down by Fred Webster, F. Vernon and C. A. Haight who lost his fourth bird just out of bounds. Vernon and Webster both lost their eleventh birds. Webster's, though hard hit with both barrels, managing to get over the line before dropping. Eight men stopped at the ten mark, McRae being the only man whose two birds dropped beyond the bounds.

After the club event a $2.50 freeze-out followed with eleven entries. The birds in this race were a hard lot, but three men killing two birds straight.

The men who went out on their first birds were Webster, Golcher, Donohoe, Carr, Shields, Jackson, Andrus and Vernon; Nauman losing his second bird, left Haight McRae and Feudner in the money. In this race Edgar Forster and H. Wagner tied the leaders, but were not entered in the money.

The second freeze-out was of a different color, six men were at sixes together when the supply of pigeons ran out, stopping the match. The money was divided among the high guns. The score was as follows:

C. A. Haight	12222-6	P. McRae	0
C. Nauman	21222-6	W. Andrus	1122-7
O. Feudner	22222-6	W. Andrus	12101-7
E. Forster	221221-6	F. Vernon	20201-7
H. C. Golcher	221221-6	C. M. Fisher	20201-7
H. Wagner	211111-6	West	1112-7
A. M. Shields	0	Carr	12*2-7
G. F. Grant	10	"Roosini"	0221-7

* Dead out of bounds. † Birds only.

Guns and Loads.

The complete list of entries, scores, etc., made at the Grand American Handicap live-bird tournament as published exclusively in last week's issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has apparently been very acceptable to the Coast trap-shooters, judging from the general interest created in reference thereto. In connection with the foregoing it will be a matter of comparatively no less interest to know just what guns and what particular loads were used by the experts.

The nine high men who made twenty-five straight and divided first money used the guns and loads listed below. Among this group of nine shooters, while the Remington was the winning gun, three Parker guns were used, one of which was second in the race; of the others, two were Winchester, one a Hollenbeck, and two others were of foreign build. Schultze and E. C. powder were the choice of seven of the contestants, the Hazard "Blue Ribbon" being the only other make represented. While the Winchester shell was the choice of six out of nine men who stepped to the score. The U. M. C. "Trap" finished one, two, three.

Another table that will be of almost equal interest to the shooters is the second, which shows the guns and loads of the twenty-two men, who scored 24 out of 25:

This table of records will interest every trap shooter who thinks there is but one gun, one shell and one load in a race at the traps. Of the guns used, there were 8 Parkers, 5 Smiths, 1 Daly, 1 Colt and 7 of foreign build; the leading makes of powder were pretty generally represented, with Du Pont, Schultze, and E. C. prominent in the lot, while the choice of shells was almost evenly divided between Winchester "Leaders" and U. M. C. "Traps."

A study of the loads will be interesting to the younger generation of trap-shooters.

Seattle Won the Cup.

For the first time in years the members of the Tacoma Gun Club acknowledge defeat at the hands of Seattle trap-shooters and lose possession of the handsome shooting and fishing championship cup. Seattle won the match on Sunday, March 27th, by a score of 206 to 200.

There was a good attendance at the traps at the head of the bay, both of spectators and shooters, and although the day was cold and raw, there was no dearth of enthusiasm manifested.

The championship team shoot between teams of five men each from the Tacoma and Seattle clubs was, of course, the event of the meet. That Tacoma does not intend to leave the trophy long with the Seattle men is evidenced by the fact that a challenge for a second contest for the cup was issued immediately after the close of the meet. It will be shot off at Seattle April 24th. Defeat in the championship contest, the Tacoma men say, was due to the fact that Seattle shooters have been at the traps regularly for several weeks past, while they have just commenced their practice. The championship contest was for 50 birds, shot off in halves of 25 birds each, and was the third event on the day's programme. The score follows:

Cloverdale Gun Club.

The organization of the Cloverdale Gun Club was perfected Wednesday evening, March 30th by electing C. A. Thilo, president; J. H. Hill, vice-president; R. E. Baer, secretary; trustees, J. B. Cooley, F. W. Brush, G. W. Hoyle, C. A. Thilo and J. H. Hill. Committee on rules, regulations and by-laws: G. W. Hoyle, F. W. Brush and H. F. Domine.

Reliance Gun Club.

The Reliance Gun Club held their regular monthly blue rock shoot at the Webster Street grounds, Alameda, last Sunday. There was a fair attendance of shooters and some good scores were made, notably so by Bekeart, "Heidelberg," Webb, Debenham, and Sands.

Lincoln Gun Club.

On Sunday, April 17th, the regular monthly shoot of the Lincoln Gun Club will be held on the Alameda grounds. The club shoot will take place at 10:15 A. M. In the afternoon, commencing at 1 o'clock, the following events will take place: Event No. 1, 20 targets, entrance $1.25, four classes, $25 guaranteed. Event No. 2, 15 targets, entrance $1, four classes. Event No. 3, 10 targets, entrance 75 cents, three classes. The moneys in all events will be divided in an equitable manner by the management, so that scores of 16 and 17 will not take down more money than those of 18 and 19.

The club will discourage all attempts at "dropping for place" by returning entrance fee and barring the delinquent from future meets.

Empire Gun Club.

To-morrow the regular monthly blue-rock shoot of the Empires will be held at Alameda Junction. A large attendance is expected. Preceding and after the club event, practice and pool-shooting open-to-all will be indulged in.

The Empires purpose to have a 20 bird event this season, entrance $1.00, open to amateurs only, scores to count on a classification basis and for which entry can be made at any club shoot. This is strictly in the interest of the sport and is intended for the encouragement and advancement of new beginners and the amateur class. Inducements for shooters to enter this race will be in the shape of some handsome and valuable prizes, among them a fine hammerless shotgun, valued at $50, a fine Winchester repeater, a Smith and Wesson revolver, etc. Full information can be acquired on the grounds to-morrow.

Olympic Gun Club.

The live bird shoot last Sunday will no doubt be the means of bringing out a large attendance at the Ingleside grounds to-morrow, the occasion being the monthly pigeon shoot of the Olympic Gun Club. Judging from last Sunday's work some hot scores will be shot over the traps on this occasion. After the regular club event at twelve birds, sweepstakes open-to-all will be in order and some exceedingly lively and clever work with the shot-gun can be expected.

South End Gun Club.

The only blue rock event on this side of the bay tomorrow will be the shoot of the South End Club at Colma. Quite a number of shooters will be on hand for the pool and practice events. The club cordially invites visitors to their grounds.

CARTRIDGE AND SHELL.

Coming Events.

April 10—Olympic Gun Club (live birds), Ingleside.
April 10—Empire Gun Club (blue-rocks), Alameda Point.
April 10—South End Gun Club (blue rocks), Colma.
April 17—Lincoln Gun Club (blue-rocks), Alameda Point.
April 24—Olympic Gun Club (blue-rocks), Ingleside.
May 1—California Wing Club (live birds), Ingleside.
May 1—Reliance Gun Club, Webster street, Alameda.
May 29-30—California Inanimate Target Association, Annual tournament, Ingleside.

Harvey McMurchy will face the traps with the Stockton shooters to-morrow.

Mrs. W. P. Shattuck, who attracted a great deal of attention by her skillful shooting during the recent Grand American Handicap, uses a Smith gun which was made to order for her.

The effect of rabbit drives in Kansas and Colorado on the current market prices of sausage is very depressing at times. In California we have not yet noticed any fluctuations in the price of tomatoes, but some people have sundry suspicions.

Frank S. Parmalee, of Omaha, Neb., has challenged Fred Gilbert, of Spirit Lake, Ia., for the Du Pont trophy, now held by Gilbert. The money has been deposited in the hands of the Du Pont Company at Wilmington, Del., and Gilbert will name the date and place for the shoot in the near future. The match will probably take place at Watson's Park, Chicago.

W. J. Golcher, Harvey McMurchy, and Phil B. Bekeart had a very enjoyable hunt at Maine Prairie last Thursday and Friday. They enlisted the services of Ed Plant of Rio Vista. Plant and his assistant staked out a large number of dead geese around the ponds as decoys, the shooting was done from behind blinds in the tules. The combined bag was 127 geese. Plant and his assistant called the birds in a style that was most effective every time a flock came within hearing, the result was some good shooting chances; out of one flock of fifteen every goose was killed, another flock of eight met the same fate—the dead birds were immediately used as extra decoys. Bekeart's blind took fire from spontaneous combustion this and the heavy wind on Friday closed up the shoot a little sooner than was anticipated—the party returned to the city on Saturday.

NOTICE TO ANGLERS.

Every angler is invited to drop us a line occasionally, telling us of the condition of the streams they have visited and the killing lure of the number and size of the fish caught, or any other item of interest to anglers.

Coming Events.

April 16-17.—San Francisco Fly-Casting Club. Fourth series of Saturday and Sunday contests. Snow Lake, Golden Gate Park.
June 8-9.—West Michigan Fly-Casting Association. First Angling Tournament. Grand Rapids, Mich.

The Carmel is reported to be full of fish.

Smelt have commenced to run in the bay.

Fishing on the Country Club waters has not been first-class so far.

A twenty-four pound striped bass was caught this week in Russian river near Duncans.

Smelt fishing is good in the Oakland estuary. Large catches have been made recently.

M. J. Geary, E. L. Ladd and Frank Dolliver lifted a few fish out of Paper Mill on Sunday.

The run of salmon in Monterey bay is still on. They are after the large shoals of sardines and anchovies.

Fishing from the cliffs at Light House Point enable Santa Cruz fishermen to make large catches of fine rock-fish at present.

F. M. Haight, J. Kennedy and a friend tried their luck on the Geronimo down to Lagunitas on Sunday. They had rather poor luck.

Twenty-nine tired anglers took the train at Lagunitas for the city last Sunday. What few fish were in the stream were tired too when they left.

Del Cooper, Geo. Walker, H. Smyth and F. Ireland were on the Los Gatos Sunday. Walker was high hook with nine nice fish. The outlook in that stream is meagre, there being but little water.

C. Shaw last Sunday tried the Zayante, one of the tributaries of the San Lorenzo near Felton. The fish caught were all small. The water is low and the stream has apparently been cleaned out by poachers.

The Paper Mill had the life thrashed out of it last Sunday. From 50 to 75 anglers sprinted along its banks, each trying to keep ahead of his neighbor. Some of the wise ones who fished down stream leisurely, caught a few small ones in the holes.

Pat Dugan himself made a big catch while spooning in "white rock hole" at Point Reyes on Sunday. In making a back cast he struck an inquisitive dog who was watching him from the top of the bank. The spoon settled in the dog's hindquarter. The keyser sprinted away taking a good section of line with him and wrecking Dugan's rod.

"Doc" Cox fished in Sonoma creek last Sunday. A number of anglers whipped the stream between Glen Ellen and Sonoma. Among them were Theo. Eisfeldt, L. Rondeau, A. F. Finch, W. J. Street and Chas. Precht. The general luck was poor, from Aqua Caliente down. Precht landed a fine pound fish. The trout are very few in comparison to past seasons.

The spearing of game fish, which is considered by thoroughbred sportsmen to be one of the most interesting diversions imaginable, is permissible by law in but one body of water in the State of New York—Chautauqua Lake. The enactment authorizing the sport went into effect on February 7th, since which time muscalonge aggregating in weight upward of 2,000 pounds have been taken from the lake.

Local anglers are not overly pleased with the angling outlook for the season. The results for the past week have been far from satisfactory. An Eastern exchange notes the following, which may have a tendency to make our fishermen indulge in few reminiscences: "This week the trout season on Long Island opened up, and many a pound of fat trout will be brought to the top of the water during the next five months. The fish are in splendid condition this spring, the extraordinarily open winter having much to do with this state of affairs. Food has been very plentiful, and the long, lean three quarter pound fish of last April is replaced by a fat fish that weighs about a pound and a half, beautiful to look at and excellent to eat. The stalls in Fulton Market are now a sight worth looking at. To the angler, however, these stalls in the market will not be altogether a thing of joy. He will note a sad absence of hook-marks on the jaws of many a noble trout, and will then heave a sigh that so fine a fish was fated to die in such an ignoble manner."

Cattle Breeding in California.

SECOND PAPER.

Probably the answer to the question, "What two distinct breeds of cattle can be classed? the answer would be beef breeds and milk breeds. Not far wrong, perhaps, in this general application, and yet when a more definite reply was solicited there would be differences of opinion. Even to establish the beef breeds would be troublesome. In, say a hundred votes, there would be a decided preponderance for Durhams and Herefords, other races would find advocates, and with good arguments to support the position the minority occupies. Locality cuts quite a figure in the controversy. The "lordly Durham" and massive Herefords would cut a small figure in vigorous climates, however great the care to guard against climatic drawbacks, and while the little black cattle of the north of Scotland grow and thrive wonderfully when pastured on southern fields, they could not take the place of the heavy breeds. Now prized for the quality of the beef, were the habitat changed, the highly-prized flavor might be lacking, and to give it the relish, it is necessary that the early part of life be passed on the Moors, the second on the luxuriant pastures of the south of Scotland, or the equally fertile vales of England.

The milk-breeds. It may be that the problem is still more difficult, when milk, and the productions from milk, are to be considered. When two-year-old steers can be put on the scales and show the weights that Durhams and Herefords and some others of the heavy-breeds display, and with that the cost of bringing them to that point, there are dates that cannot be questioned. When pounds of butter, for week, month or year, are the subject of investigation that is also a well-defined inquiry, and when butter-making is the aim it would seem that the question can be settled with a comparison of the tests made. The amount of feed given the Channel Island cattle will certainly take high rank as butter producers. For many years, more than a century, the islands of Jersey, Guernsey, Alderney and Starke, have enjoyed a wide celebrity for that breed of cattle, and while Ayrshire, the milk breed of Galloways, and some of the English and Irish breeds had acquired just prominence, the islanders have not lost ground in the general appreciation of the public.

And while Great Britain and its dependencies were doing so much to perfect home breeds, foreign countries were "marching on." Holland, Switzerland, Germany, France, even India, producing races of high excellence. Apart from Holsteins and some of the Swiss breeds, the United States has mainly depended upon the breeds that have originated, or, at least, been brought to such a high state of perfection in the home country, as to take a decided lead; an unquestioned lead in every branch, unless Holsteins are the exception.

And now it may be that combinations of these well defined breeds will bring good results. "Pure breeding" is beyond question the right method when definite results are the object. With locality favorable, it may be that some of the heavy breeds are, par excellence, the best to produce beef. These, or grades, will, doubtless, best repay that class of breeders whose aims are to produce the most meat for attending expense.

But should a farmer desire to combine adaptability to take on flesh, at an early age, with as much milk giving capacity as possible, then crosses can be used to advantage. Jersey or Ayrshire on Durham or Hereford, and some great milkers have come from Jersey and Durham, and at the same time size and disposition to fatten. That is modified conditions, as it would be manifestly out of place to expect that a grade Jersey and Durham would equal in size the larger of the two parents, or that the hybrid would equal the butter producing qualities of the Jersey. Nevertheless when the two qualities are sought the animal resulting from the outcross might make amends for the deficiency in one of the departments.

The greatest of all the families of domestic animals have come from judicious mixtures of blood. Even when there appeared to be antagonistical elements the outcross was of decided benefit. Thus Bakewell introduced the Highland cross into his famous Teeswaters, and English breeders of greyhounds did not hesitate to introduce a strain of the bull-dog when additional stamina was sought. It may be in the far-away future that some of the distant Eastern breeds of cattle will be imported, and though difficult to believe that good results will prevail from the mixture of such widely divergent races, the results of actual practice may prove that for some purposes the incorporation of apparently opposing elements might be advantageous.

A fascinating study the breeding of animals, and however incongruous it may appear the diligent student will gain knowledge from a consideration of questions bearing upon the proposition.

Pasteurization for Butter-Making.

The pasteurization of milk in creameries where the highest product is aimed at seems to be the common thing. And like other improvements in dairying it will not be long in coming when its value is once demonstrated. The claims for this process are thus stated: First, it insures uniformity of product; second, it improves the flavor of butter. Surely these are sweeping claims and if once well established the adoption of the process will follow as a matter of course, as it makes more certain the production of finer flavored and better-keeping product. The constant effort now in the butter factories is toward improved flavor and uniform product. By these signs the creamery will conquer.

There is ample reason to believe that the claims for pasteurization of milk used for butter-making will be demonstrated. The Danes have taught us all sorts of tricks in butter-making and the invention of milk-handling machinery. Just why they have acquired such prominence in the world of invention and production in dairy lines it is not worth while to inquire at the present time: the fact is sufficient. The pasteurization of milk has become almost universal in Denmark as a result of trials of the system. In official figures 97½ per cent of all Danish dairies use milk or cream thus treated. The Danes are not faddists. The eminence of their product in the London market evidences their skill and the practical character of their operations. The new idea is progressing in this country. The market is calling for butter from pasteurized milk and that is the supreme test. Dealers who have tested the butter from creameries where the process is in operation are demanding more of the same goods and are prosecuting a search for them. This is the pole that knocks the persimmon. Demand at a price that will cover the slightly enhanced cost of butter-making from specially-treated cream will in time—and a short time—produce the supply.

The pasteurization of milk means the killing of the bacteria which produce the "ripening" of the cream. These bacteria are of various kinds, and most of them are undesirable. Their presence is the element that determines the flavor—sometimes good, sometimes bad, despite the skill of the butter-maker. The perfection of pure-culture starters—the cultivation of the bacteria known to produce the proper flavor—and the placing of such starters on the market at reasonable cost prepares the way for the pasteurization process. All bacteria may be destroyed by this process and to this prepared cream may be added the pure-culture starter, with the certainty of uniform results as to flavor. In brief the process is to kill all germs, then add the bacteria that has been bred to produce the right flavor. In this way the butter-maker is master of the last item which has heretofore stood between him and the absolute control of conditions.—Chicago Breeders Gazette.

Race Horses From Canada.

Collector Jackson has been notified by the Treasury Department that there are no quarantine restrictions on the reimportation of American race horses from Canada and under the circular of the Department of Agriculture of January 23, 1897, they may be admitted without inspection or certificate.

Southern California has a hard luck story of rain needed everywhere, and Riverside and San Bernardino both say deciduous fruits are a failure, but the Los Angeles summary says: "Rain on 25th helped grain but drying winds following retarded grain and hay slim. Some reports state deciduous fruit yet promises a fair crop."

General Breeding.

It may be well to define what is meant by general breeding.

Breeding and rearing animals or birds from the most diminutive to those which may weigh tons. White mice for instance, though much smaller living things will come into the class. Bees come legitimately within the arena; ants, too, have been closely watched, and one of the most interesting studies connected with biology is the life of these wonderful insects. Therefore it is safe to say that whatever the penchant may be, from the smallest to the largest, there is a fascination in breeding beyond that of any pursuit. Horticulture might come next, as the man who succeeds in hybridizing flowers and fruits, who brings a new species into existence may be termed a creator.

H. H. Cross, the famous painter of animals, had the satisfaction of being the first one to breed elephants in captivity, and proud he was of the baby elephant that he was instrumental in bringing into the world, it is somewhat doubtful if his pleasure exceeded that of the boy who first looks on the nest of pigeons, or one who sees wonderful improvements in the youngsters in the hutch. The farmer boy, if awarded the opportunity, has a delightful field to exercise his proclivities. Before he reaches the "teens" he can take extraordinary interest in the poultry yard. Delighted if he can display his capacity in breeding rare fowls. A broad ground for the exercise of his talents. Well defined breeds, and so many of them that whatever his fancy may dictate he will find exemplars. And it is within bounds to say that poultry breeding in California is in its incipient stages. Not a section of the farm that has not been given more attention.

One of the most striking anomalies in rural life here is that California is largely indebted to eastern states for its supply of poultry and eggs.

It does appear that climatic conditions could not be more favorable, that soil and surroundings are all that can be desired, and hence there should be nothing in the way of a bountiful supply of the products of the yards. Incubators have given the possibilities of producing whatever is necessary, so long as there is a sufficient supply of eggs. When hens are absolved from active maternal duties, the supply of eggs should be so largely increased that there will be no lack of embryotic material.

Therefore the supply should be adequate. Abundant in fact, and when scientific breeding is once inaugurated there is little question that this department of The Farm will keep pace with other branches.

Stylish Horses

All the Eastern people that have visited California during the past winter, and have been in a position to learn the movements in the horse markets, agree that horses of good size,  $15\frac{3}{4}$  to  $16\frac{3}{4}$  hands, with a fair amount of trotting speed, stylish, and fairly "good-lookingers" are not only in demand, but bring prices far beyond those which prevailed two years ago. California, of course, labors under the disadvantage of being far-distant from these markets, and, consequently, the only horses which can be sent with profit are those which will bring a good price.

Plenty of material to produce this class of horses if breeders are careful in making selections of sires and dams. Size, substance and quality are imperatively demanded, that is when the minimum of  $15\frac{3}{4}$  hands is produced, there must be an excess of other desirable qualities to make amends. While a horse of that height is far from being small, there must be other measurements to command attention. Light-bodied, leggy horses are not such as purchasers demand, and when a breeder uses a mare of that kind, or a stallion that is deficient in muscular development he cannot expect to be successful. "Weeds" will come when breeders use every precaution to guard against their production, and if parents be selected that come under that category weeds are sure to prevail.

But there are families in California that embody the qualities mentioned, thoroughbreds and harness horses of the highest type. There are, in all probability, fifty or more thoroughbred stallions in this State from sixteen hands to sixteen two and weighing from twelve hundred to fourteen hundred pounds. There are trotting stallions in plenty that are also large, and, of course, mares of size and substance enough to produce horses which will fill the bill. It is the intention of the manager of the Rancho del Paso to breed quite a large number of thoroughbred mares to trotting stallions. The mares selected will be of the type which are the most likely to produce stylish, substantial horses, and while a majority of the farmers of California are debarred from using mares of that high class, there is no lack of part-bred mares, i. e., crosses of thoroughbred and harness horses well adapted for the purpose. The breeding of fast harness horses is now confined, in a great measure, to breeders that are aiming to produce a high rate of speed. Many of the animals bred and reared on the farms that are specially engaged in the business of breeding the fastest, are also endowed with the qualities so highly prized, size, speed, action, beauty in so marked a degree, that even superficial observers would be struck with their appearance. There are small, medium and large horses on these ranches, but the farmer who looks for a certain return to recoup him for the expense of production cannot afford to take the chances of breeding a small horse. And it must be borne in mind, in fact, never lost sight of, the oldtime Yorkshire motto "that half a horse goes down his throat," and the farmer who adheres to that will breed larger horses than the stock he uses. Larger and better. There is nothing like liberal feeding to increase quality as well as size. Bones, muscles, coat, and, above all brain force, largely due to that which goes down the throat.

Crop Prospects.

The crop report issued Tuesday last for the week, made by Director Hammon, says: "The past week failed to bring relief from the unfavorable conditions which have characterized the season. The rainfall was far below the normal in all sections. Rain is badly needed throughout the State. Light showers occurred on the 2d in the northern portion, but a disappointingly small amount of rain fell except near the vicinity of Red Bluff. The temperature was more nearly normal than it has been for some weeks previous. The continuance of northerly winds and the absence of rain have caused the ground in portions of the great valleys to become so dry that it cannot be cultivated without irrigating. Reports of the preceding week concerning the great injury done to almonds, apricots and early peaches are confirmed. Grain is already beyond relief in many sections and badly in need of rain in nearly all others. Stock is being moved to the Sierras and northern counties."

Those districts in the Sacramento Valley that must have rain lie particularly in Tehama and Glenn counties. The San Joaquin Valley prospects are given as follows:

San Joaquin county.—Farmers planting sugar beets on account of failure of wheat. Apricot trees blooming second time now; small crop of apricots; almonds killed.

Merced county.—Grain improving very fast; sandy land with an inch more of rain will insure good crop; heavy land not showing up so well. Warm growing weather.

Stanislaus County.—Outlook poor. Drying up fast. Inside canal limits outlook still cheerful; elsewhere, beyond hope. Late rains benefited grazing on elevated sections. There will be some grapes and late fruit. Shearing finished; fair output of wool.

Kern County.—Grain doing well. Usual April rain will make a good crop.

Fresno County.—Continued dry weather and south-westerly winds have destroyed grain near Fresno. In the foothills considerable grain will mature if more rain. Apricot crop will be almost a total failure; peach crop about one-third to one-half; vines safe thus far. Shear-will last two weeks.

Kings County.—Prospect for grain very poor and frosts have killed most of fruit.

Tulare County.—Grain doing as well as could be expected. Rain needed; fruit killed.

In the coast and bay districts the reports are much more encouraging, though it is generally conceded that more rain is needed. Apricots are reported a total failure in Alameda, Lake, and Napa, and almonds in Lake and Napa. San Mateo reports that strawberries have been killed. The Eureka summary says: "Cold north winds have killed some pear, peach, and cherry buds, but not enough to prevent an abundant crop. Water in streams very low."

Cattlemen to Meet.

A despatch from Carson, Nevada, under date April 6th, says: Governor Sadler issued the following proclamation this afternoon:

EXECUTIVE CHAMBER,

CARSON, April 6.

"In compliance with numerous requests of cattle owners and those interested in the protection of that industry in this State, a meeting will be held in Carson City, April 11th, at the Governor's office.

R. SADLER,

Lieutenant and Acting Governor."

In compliance with this above a number of prominent cattle dealers of California as well as of Nevada, will be in attendance, the object of the meeting will be the discussion of the enforcement of the quarantine regulation recently imposed by the State of Nevada against the importation of California cattle into that State.

Agricultural Notes.

There are two questions which every California farmer should consider: Can any farm prosper without live stock? Are not the most prosperous farmers those who make the live stock department of their farms one of the predominant features?

It is reported that the recent cold weather in the neighborhood of Milo has considerably injured the early fruit and some think that the grain is likewise injured.

Our correspondent at Delta writes: "Grain is growing well with a prospect yet for a good crop. Haying will commence soon. The late frosts, he states, did not injure the fruit crops. There will be even a full crop of apricots. The lemon and orange trees stood the severe test without any injury at all. They will soon be in full bloom."

Samples of wheat brought to Stockton show one effect of the lack of moisture. Usually there are many stocks of grain from a single seed. This year, however, though three, four and five stocks started from the seed, there has been moisture sufficient for only one, and the others have withered up and died to the ground. The single stock left did not look any too strong and seemed likely to succumb to a continuation of the drouth.

The Secretary of Agriculture has notified Congressman Maguire that the quarantine regulations as imposed by the State of Nevada, are to be modified, that is, California cattle may be shipped on certificate of inspection who will be appointed by the Nevada authorities. Inspectors have been sent to various shipping points in this State and are already at work.

Movement of Live Stock.

Shipments of live stock from the following points are reported during the past week:

T. J. Johnson, shipper, Alameda, Cal., eighteen cars cattle to Hunt & Adams, Kansas City.

D. C. Wheeler, shipper, Amodee, Cal., six cars sheep to Miller & Lux, San Francisco.

D. C. Wheeler, shipper, Reno, Nev., three cars of sheep to Miller & Lux, San Francisco.

J. Barndout, shipper, Reno, Nev., one car cattle to Mohr & York, Sacramento, Cal.

E. H. Hamlin, shipper, Reno, Nev., to Wubhena & Highland, Auburn, Cal., one car cattle.

McCormick Bros., Amodee, Cal., shippers, to same, Stockton, Cal., one car cattle.

D. Gurnsey, Lovelock, Nev., shipper, to Horn & Judge, San Francisco, two cars cattle.

F. Junker, Lovelock, Nev., shipper, to Western Meat Co., San Francisco, ten cars cattle.

Keogh Bros' shippers, Amodee, Cal., to McCormick Bros., Stockton, Cal., six cars cattle.

W. Libbold, Lovelock, Nev., to P. H. Noonan, Santa Rosa, Cal., three cars cattle.

Cattle Notes.

Feed in the San Joaquin valley is getting very short and several large droves of cattle have gone to the Sacramento valley for pasturage.

Cattle are being shipped for pasture from Monterey county, to the Indian reservation in Round Valley, Mendocino county.

If stockmen will turn their attention to the valleys in the Sierra Nevadas, they will find good and abundant pasture for thousands of heads of stock. Our correspondent informs us that the forest reserves are now open for flocks.

Shipments of Arizona cattle will not commence as early this season as last, owing to the stock being all backward about two months.

Among the largest cattle deals consummated during the month just closed was the sale of the Ryan herd in Eastern Montana to the Murphy Cattle Company of Billings, an extensive concern operating in that State. The herd numbered from 12,000 to 15,000 head, for which $30 per head was paid, making a total of $450,000—almost a half million.

Sheep and Wool Notes.

Sheep in large quantities are being shipped from Fresno county to the ranges around Mayfield, where feed is reported good; grass throughout Southern California is very short owing to the light rains in that section of the country.

Twenty cars of California sheep arrived at Ash Fork, Arizona last week. Indications point to large consignments of sheep from this State to Arizona this year.

A Denver man has invented a sheep dip without using lime to cut the sulphur and will soon have it on the market.

Englishmen say that the best mutton is the result of crossing a Southdown ram with a Merino ewe, the product giving the finest quality of meat as well as having a light bone and the smallest percentage of offal. It is claimed that with these sheep there is a reasonable certainty that their good qualities will, to a certain extent, be transmitted to their offspring.

Representative De Vries, has arranged with the Interior Department at Washington for the practical opening of the Stanislaus forest reserve on the same terms as the lower reserve. Sheepmen will be permitted to drive sheep across it in summer. This amounts to a permission to graze them and feed is reported good in those localities.

Dairy Notes.

It is reported that Lorenzo Hansen of Wellsview, Cal., who operates a creamery at that place has leased the big Z. C. M. I. refrigerator at Logan and will convert it into a first-class creamery with a capacity of 30,000 pounds of milk daily. Mr. Hansen is known throughout his section of the State as a live go-ahead and enterprising man and the success of his new venture is almost assured.

The Hanford cheese factory shows a healthy growth. For the past month 103,140 pounds of milk were used in the factory, bringing the dairymen 30 cents a hundred pounds. Last March the record was 78,952 pounds and 73 cents per hundred pounds to the milk owners.

The Tulare creamery which has been in operation for about two weeks, is receiving daily about twenty-five hundred pounds of milk and the quantity is increasing every day. The outlook is very promising.

The dairymen of Alameda, Cal., have recently formed a syndicate and taken steps to pool their interests in the matter of pasturing their cows and marketing their milk. They are seeking to secure an option upon 1,500 acres of pasture land where every cow owned by an Alameda dairyman will be sent in the near future.

The prices at which pure bred bulls can be obtained leave no excuse for the use of low grade sires, and a bull with a little extra feed will sell for beef after two or three years service in the herd for nearly if not quite his first cost.

The man who has the milking and handling of a cow the first year determines her value for her entire life.

The farmers who pooh-poohed the dairy business as too slow a method of accumulating wealth are now the victims of vain regret. This time last year your milk was selling at the creameries at 50 cents per hundred pounds, while to-day it is worth $1, and the farmer who owns three or four cows will tide over the dry year and hardly feel it, while the farmer who sold out his herd with the object of going into the beet business will get sadly left. The cow was the bird in the hand—the beet the bird in the bush.

Except in a few places, the question of summer and winter feed is easily solved. The pasture will last well on to the autumn and then stock beets of which large areas have been planted, and are still being planted, will come in, and these along with sorghum, another popular crop this year, will keep up the milk flow and the monthly check from the creameries. The meeting of the farmers' institute at Westminster has given an impetus to scientific farming in that fertile section. A farmers' club has just been organized, with H. G. Carlyle as president and R. O. Shively as secretary. The first meeting is to be held at the call of the secretary. The club committee has adopted a good dry year motto—free membership.—Los Angeles Herald.

It takes twelve quarts of ordinary whole milk to make one pound of butter. Properly managed, the breeding of high-grade milch cows can be made profitable. Cows should have access to salt all the time in order that they may eat it whenever they require it. It is believed by those who have studied dairy principles closely that the milk of cows that are salted often and regularly keeps sweet longer than does the milk of those who do not receive it as often as necessary.

Swine Notes.

Breeding sows need something to make bone, and they find this in wood ashes and charred cobs. There is no better way to give them their salt than to sprinkle it over their ash pile. They seem to enjoy both better.

A pound of pig flesh is produced more cheaply before the pig is six months old than is possible at any time afterwards. This means early marketing and two litters a year. The profits may be small, but they are profits.

Hogs can be raised more cheaply, kept in better health and brought to a better development by supplying them with good pasturage than if kept confined. This does not mean that they can be turned out and entirely neglected. It pays well to look after them regularly, just as it pays to look after the other live stock.

Pigs will give some additional reward to the farmer if they are kept bedded in straw. They will eat part of it; it will assist in keeping them clean, and the portion that is tramped into the dirt will catch and retain the liquid manure. During the winter a considerable compost heap can be obtained from this bedding, capable of adding much to the fertility of the farm.

Breed, feed and care. These are the factors, and the only factors of success in any department of live stock raising, and in no other are they more important or more certain of valuable results than in raising swine. There is no farmer who does not know these things, but there are many whose management of their swine does indicate such knowledge.

Tests at one of the agricultural experiment stations show that young pigs make as good gains when fed through the dam for a given quantity of feed as after weaning, when on the same feed. There is no danger from heavy feeding with pigs, provided they are given the right kind of feed and sufficient exercise. Some corn may be used, but it should be ground or soaked before feeding.

You cannot successfully breed swine without making some outlay of money. You must buy new blood every year, and the best is none too good. In this the utmost care must be taken. You should be sure that what you buy will improve your herd. Do not let a small difference in price cause you to buy an inferior boar when you can secure a better one, and do not let pedigree alone determine your choice.

A correspondent has asked for a remedy for mange in hogs. The following has been recommended: Make a wash by preparing a strong decoction of tobacco, strain and dilute it, mixing with it about one-half pint of glycerine. Wash the hog well with this, or rub it with the following liniment: Linseed oil, one pint; oil of tar, two fluid ounces; sulphur, two ounces. Either should be used two days, allowing it to remain three or four days. Then wash with soft soap and tepid water and, if necessary, repeat the application. Rubbing posts, the sides and floors of the pen or sleeping place should be disinfected with carbolic acid.

The Pacific Northwest Dairy and Hog Association was permanently organized at Walla Walla, March 17th, when a constitution and by-laws were adopted and the following officers elected: W. P. Spillman, President; Vice-Presidents, for Oregon, H. T. French, of Corvallis; for Washington, Frank M. Lowden, of Walla Walla; for Idaho, Dr. Fred A. Huntley; for Montana, S. M. Emery, of Helena; Secretary, D. C. Dillworth, of Spokane; Treasurer, John L. Smith, of Spokane. Executive Committee: Oregon, Julius Kanpisch, of Portland and Turner Oliver, of La Grande; Montana, C. H. Williams and Dr. M. E. Knowles; Washington, Miller Freeman, of Seattle, and M. Bradley of Fairfield; Idaho to be named by the Governor of that State.

It is not so generally appreciated as it should be that the breeding sow, while she is bearing her young, needs just the kind of nutrition that the growing pigs will require. Sows fed heavily on corn fatten, and bring thin, stunted pigs, with very little ability for them to care for themselves. Such pigs will never do so well as those whose dams were fed milk and wheat bran with some kinds of roots while bearing their young. These will have good digestion, and will grow rapidly, while the stunted pig will never fully recover from the improper nutrition it received before it was farrowed.—American Cultivator.

Poultry Notes.

For hardiness the scrub stock affords a good foundation.

The best layers of a breed are generally those of medium size.

After all, there is no best breed, so much depends on the point of view.

Neither over-fed hens nor full-fed tramps care about doing any work.

Nothing will make hens lay and chickens grow like plenty of milk to drink.

It is a waste of money to get good stock unless the buyer is ready to give it good care.

For the average farmer it is best to keep fowls principally for eggs and poultry as a side issue.

A pale comb is not necessarily a sign of disease. Fowls wear bright combs only during the laying season.

The common mistake of farmers is to give hens too much of one kind of feed and that feed is generally corn.

Over-feeding and over-crowding and under exercise tell the story of the average failure in poultry farming.

No vegetable comes so handy for the poultry grower as cabbage. Hang it up and the chickens do the rest.

Good treatment for the yards in early spring is to scatter air-slacked lime and dig it under at once, then let the hens scratch it level.

It is said that it costs less to produce 1,500 pounds of poultry than 1,000 pounds of beef, and it can be sold for twice as much.

Fowls do not like a dark poultry house and will often fail to seek shelter in it at a time when they need shelter from stormy or wet weather.

It will pay to fatten the old hens before offering them for sale, though they can be profitably prepared for the home table if the market is not satisfactory.

Air-slacked lime scattered about the poultry yard will often prevent disease. If it is used freely in dusting the roosts, walls and floors it will keep out vermin.

Coarse manure put on potato ground in the spring will do more harm than good. It should have been spread on the ground in the fall and thoroughly plowed before the potatoes are planted.

Probably the best breed of fowls is that which one likes the best. He is apt to give it decidedly better care than he would give to one which he does not prefer, and the results in every way will be better.

Males of game and other quarrelsome breeds may have their spurs clipped off with pruning shears with good effect to their dispositions. Despered fowls are as tame as dehorned cattle.

The lungs of lice are in their skin. Hence the value of dust baths. Anything that clogs the skin of insects stops their breathing and suffocates them.

C. L. Drake's recipe for roup is turpentine and lard in equal parts; a teaspoonful three times a day. Apply some of it to the outside of the head.

The best way to warm up fowls early in the morning before the scalded feed is given is to scatter a little grain in the chaff on the floor and let them work for it.

The dairy business requires a large farm but poultry keeping requires only a small area. That is an important advantage. Hens, however, need more room than they generally get.

There is a chance for improvement of turkeys in the direction of more compact in shape and fuller breast. Most people buy a medium sized turkey, but they want plumpness and plenty of white meat.

One farmer says: "I should think well of incubators if some one used to them would make a business of hatching chickens for those not used to them." Here is hint for enterprising young men who will learn to succeed with incubators.

The hard grain ration should be considered rather a chance for exercise than a food. It is quite an art to feed it in a way to get the most work out of the hens. Proper feeding of the grain alone makes a great difference in the winter's egg production.

The hen which is the best forager and the best feeder is likely to be the best layer. A man who spends much time with his fowls can easily pick out those which have most gumption. He will find, as a general rule, these are the ones oftenest seen on the nest.

It is better to allow the chickens to help themselves to charcoal, rather than to mix it with the soft feed. Break or grind it into pieces about the size of corn or wheat, according to the size and age of the fowls. Corn charred on the cob is a good form of charcoal.

THE MARKETS.

Reports of Butchertown, Western Meat Company Refrigerated Meats, Local Wool, Hides, Tallow, Butter and Cheese, and Eastern Cattle Markets by Telegraph.

EASTERN LIVE STOCK MARKET.

CHICAGO, April 8.—The great part of the beef steers crossed the scales at $14.00, the commonest offerings being salable at $13.80, and prime shipping cattle, $15.25 to $15.50. The stocker and feeder trade was fairly large, with sales at $12.00 to $14.00. Calves were in great demand, best grades at $6.00 to $6.50.

Prices for hogs were a little better than yesterday. Hogs sold at $3.70 to $4.10, an extreme range chiefly at $3.85 to $4.00, and pigs sold largely at $3.60 to $3.80. Prime light hogs sold at $3.92, and the best heavy at $4.10.

Trade was fairly active in sheep, but wool d lambs were slower and a shade lower. Woolled sheep, $4.50 to $5.00; short, $1.00 to $1.50; culls, $3.00 to $3.50; yearlings, $4.50 to $5.00; shorn lambs, $4.25 to $4.50; unshorn, $3.50 to $4.00. Receipts—Cattle, 12,000; hogs, 30,000; sheep, 16,000.

KANSAS CITY, April 8.—Cattle—Receipts, 6,900. Native fed cattle, $4.00 to $4.50; Western fed steers, $3.75 to $4.00; cows and heifers, $2.50 to $4.75; bulls, $2.00 to $3.50.

Hogs—Receipts, 14,500. Market generally 5c lower; bulk of sales, $3.60 to $3.75; heavies and packers, $3.70 to $3.90; medium and mixed, $3.60 to $3.80; light, $3.50 to $3.75; pigs, $2.25 to $3.00.

Sheep—Receipts, 6,500. Western Sheep, $4.10 to $4.65; Colorado lambs, $5.25 to $5.50; spring lamb, quiet, $6.50 to $7.00.

DENVER, April 8.—Cattle—Receipts, 500; market slow and dull; beef steers, $3.50 to $4.00; cows, $3.00 to $3.50; feeders (freight paid to river), $4.00 to $4.50; stockers, do, $4.00 to $4.50; bulls and stags, $2.00 to $2.50.

Hogs—Receipts, none; market quiet; light packers, $3.70 to $3.80; mixed, $3.70 to $3.75; heavy, $3.65 to $3.75.

Sheep—Receipts, none; quiet, unchanged.

BUTCHERTOWN.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 8th.—The local beef market throughout the week has been somewhat unsteady and prices have ruled weaker than the previous week. This fact slaughterers attribute to the uncertainty of being able to graze their cattle on Nevada pastures, due to the quarantine laws passed by that State. Stockmen in the Northern counties have shown some anxiety, and in consequence prices have slightly fallen off, but we look to rather an advance than any perceptible break and have no hesitancy in stating that by next week the market will have fully recovered itself.

CALVES—Continue firm and the demand is fully equal to the supply. Arrivals are not heavy and consequently there is no accumulation of stock in the corral.

SHEEP—The market is firm and choice wethers remain scarce. 9 1/2 cents was paid this week for a lot of No. 1 wethers, but this is top figures, as bulk of sales run from 8 1/2 cents to 9 cents. Ewes are in good demand and bring our full quotations.

LAMBS—Are slightly easier, owing to being more plentiful. The market has shown quite a falling off this week. Arrivals have been very heavy and packers have shown no disposition to buy except at reduced figures. We quote the following, which are rates from slaughterers to retailers:

Steers—First quality, very choice, 7c; Steers, No. 1, 6 1/2 to 6 3/4 c; Steers, No. 2, 6 to 6 1/2 c; Steers, No. 3, 5 1/2 to 5 3/4 c. Extra Choice Cows and Heifers 8c; Good to Fair, 5 1/2 to 5 3/4 c; Bulls, stags and old Cows, 4 to 4 1/2 c; Calves, choice range, large, 6 to 6 1/2 c; Dairy, 6 1/2 to 7 1/2 c; Wethers, first quality, 8 1/2 to 9c; Wethers, second quality, 8 to 8 1/2 c; Lamb, yearlings, 8c; Lamb (this Spring), 10 to 11c; Hogs, dressed hard, 6 1/2 to 7c; Hogs, live, hard, medium, 4 1/2 to 4 3/4 c; Hogs, live, hard, heavy, 4c.

REFRIGERATED DRESSED MEATS.

Wholesale market, Sixth and Townsend, S. F.
Beef carcasses, prime, 6 1/2 to 6 3/4 c; beef carcasses, second quality 6 to 6 1/2 c; No. 1, Cows and Heifers, 5 1/2 to 6c; No. 2 Cows and Heifers, 5 1/4 to 5 1/2 c; Mutton, Wethers, carcasses, 8 1/2 c; Mutton, Wethers, carcasses, No. 2, 8c; Mutton Ewes, carcasses, No. 1, 8c; Mutton, Ewes, carcasses, No. 2, 7 1/2 c; Lamb, (this year's Spring), 10c; Veal, light, 8 to 7c; Veal, heavy, 5 1/2 to 6 1/2 c; Pork, carcasses, 6 1/2 c.

HIDES AND SKINS.

The local hide market is quiet with a trifle lower prices. Owing to an anticipated dry season the tanners are purchasing only for their immediate requirements. Wet salted hides, kip, veal and calf are quiet, with moderate stocks on hand. Dry flint hides, kip and calf are relatively lower than the wet salted, as prices on these goods are based on the values obtainable in New York and Boston. The values on horse hides remain about the same, with a good demand. Wool and sheep skins are quiet at lower prices. Tallow remains about the same. Deer skins meet with ready sale, with no change in prices.

WET SALTED HIDES—Heavy Steers, over 56 lbs, 10c, culls, 9c; Medium, 48 to 56 lbs, 9c, culls 8c; Light Steer, under 48 lbs, 9c, culls, 8c; Heavy Cows, over 50 lbs, 9c, culls 8c; Light Cows, 30 to 50 lbs, 9c, culls 8c; Sags, 6c, culls 5c; Kips, 9c, culls 8c; Veal, 9c, culls 8c; Calf, 10c, culls 9c; Dry Hides, 16c, culls, 13c; Dry Kip and Veal, 1 1/2 to 1 1/4 c; culls, 1 1/2 c; Dry Calf, 18 to 20c, cull, 15 to 16c.

PELTS AND SHEARINGS—20 to 30c each; do, short, 40 to 70c each; do, medium, 70 to 90c each; do, long wool, 90 to $1.30 each; Deer Skins, summer, 2 to 30c; do, good medium, 20c; do, winter, 10c per lb; Goat Skins, 20 to 37 1/2 c a piece for prime to perfect; 1 to 20c for damaged and 5 to 10c each for Kids.

TALLOW—We quote: No. 1, Rendered, 3 to 3 1/2 c per lb; No. 2, 2 to 2 1/2 c; Grease, 2c per lb.

WOOL REPORT.

Until the war scare blows over there will be nothing doing in the local market, as manufacturers East are not inclined to stock up until they can see an outlet for their goods. Meanwhile holders are firm, believing that as soon as the international dispute is settled the market will revive and the accumulated stocks will gradually be worked off.

FALL WOOL—Southern California, 7 to 8c; San Joaquin Plains, 6 to 7c; Northern Plains, 10 to 12c; Mountain, 10 to 12c; San Joaquin Plains, 6 to 7c; Humboldt and Mendocino, 14 to 15c.

SPRING WOOL—Nevada Spring—Light and choice, 10 to 13c. Oregon Spring—Eastern, choice, 10 to 14c; Eastern, poor, 9 to 11c; Valley, choice, 10 to 16c; Valley, low grade, 12 to 13c.

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

BUTTER—There has been no apparent change in the condition of the local butter market throughout the past few days. Reports from all indications are that supplies are liberal under a fair demand and values are well sustained. Fancy Dairy Butter and the cheaper grades of Creamery still sell in preference to Fancy Creamery, and in consequence the latter stock is not held as firmly as the former. The top quotation for fancy creamery was an extreme for favored brands. The Victoria s-eamer, which sailed on the 25th inst. carried over 22,700 pounds of Butter. We quote as follows:

Creameries, 15 to 18 c per lb and occasionally higher for extra fine. Dairies, 15 to 17 1/2 c; mixed store, 15 to 16 c.

CHEESE—The market is firm with a good demand and prices throughout the week have remained unchanged. We quote: California per lb, Cheddars, 10 to 11c; Flats, mild, new, 9 1/2 to 10c; fair to good, 8 1/2 to 9c; Young America, 10 to 11c; Eastern, New York Cream, Cheddars and Flats 12 to 13 c; Western, 11 1/2 to 12 c.

EGGS—An easier tone is noticeable in the egg market, due to large quantities of the Oregon product arriving this week. We quote: California Ranch, 14 to 14 1/2 c; California Store, 13 to 13 1/2 c; Duck Eggs, 16 c.

POULTRY—The demand for poultry continues good, and offerings are held firmly at full figures. A carload of Eastern stock arrived on the 7th inst. and sold well at quotations. Game is weak and values are easy. We quote: Old Roosters, per doz, $3.50 to $4.00; young, $7.50 to $8.00; Fryers, $6.50 to $7.00; Broilers, large, $5.50 to $6.00; small, $4.50 to $5.00; Hens, $1.50 to $1.75; Ducks, old, $4.00 to $4.50; young, $7.00 to $7.50; Turkeys, live, Hens, per lb, 12 to 13c; +obblers, 10 to 11c; dressed, per lb, 12 to 15c; Geese, pair, $1.50 to $1.75; Goslings, per doz, $2.00 to $2.50; Pigeons, young, $1.50 to $2.00; do, old, $1.25 to $1.50.

EASTERN Poultry—Old Roosters, per doz, $1.50; Hens, $7 to $7.50; Fryers, $7.50; Broilers, per doz, $9; Young Roosters, $9; Ducks, $5.50; Turkeys, per lb, 11 to 13c; Geese, pair, $2.

GAME—Per doz: Brant, $10 to $12.50; Fray Geese, $1.50 to $1.75; White, 50c; Hare, 75c to $1; Rabbits 75c to $1.

WHEAT—Tidewater quotations are as follows, $1.50 for No. 1, $1.52 for choice and $1.55 to $1.57 per ctn for extra choice for milling.

HAY—(Ex-car) round lots: Wheat, $19 to $23.50 per ton; Wheat and Oat, $18 to $22.50; Oat, $17.50 to $19.50; Barley, $17 to $19; compressed Wheat, $20 to $22; compressed Oat, $18.50 to $19.50; Alfalfa, $11 to $14; stock, $12 to $13; Clover, $12 to $14.

STRAW—35 to 45c per bale.

BRAN—$19.50 to $20 per ton.

MIDDLINGS—$23 to $25.50 per ton.

FEEDSTUFFS—Rolled Barley, $25 to $27 per ton; Oatmeal Meal at the mill, $25.50 to $29.50; Jobbing, $30; Cinnamon Cake, $21.50 to $22.50; Cottonseed Meal, $22 to $30 per ton; Cornmeal, $24; Cracked Corn, $24 to $25.

FLOUR—Net cash prices are: Family extras, $5 to $5.10; Bakers' extras, $4.75 to $4.85 per barrel. Superfine nominal.

MILLSTUFFS—Price in sack as follows, usual discount to the trade: Graham Flour, $3 per 100 lbs.; Rye Flour, $2.75 per 100; Rice Flour, $6; Cornmeal, $2.50; extra cream Cornmeal, $1.25; Oatmeal, $4; Oat Groats, $1.25; Hominy, $2.25 to $3.50; Buckwheat Flour, $4 to $4.25; Cracked Wheat, $3.75; Farina, $4.75; Whole Wheat Flour, $1.25; Rolled Oats (barrels), $5.80 to $6.20; in sacks, $5.60 to $6; Pearl Barley, $4.75; Split Peas, $4.25; Green Peas, $4.75 per 100 lbs.

BEANS—Bays, $2.75 to $2.90; Small Whites, $1.45 to $1.55; Large Whites, $1.40 to $1.55; Pinks, $2.40 to $2.50; Reds, $2.25 to $2.50; Blackeye, $2.40 to $2.60; Butters, $1.40 to $1.60; Limas, $2.10 to $2.20; Peas, $1.40 to $1.55; Red Kidneys, $2 to $2.25 per ctn.

SEEDS—Brown Mustard, $2 to $3 per ctn.; Yellow Mustard, $3 to $3.15; Flax, 2.35; Canary seed, 2 1/4 to 2 1/2 c per lb.; Alfalfa, 3 to 6c; Rape, 2 1/4 to 3 c; Hemp, 2 1/4 to 3c; Timothy, 5 to 6 c.

DRIED PEAS—Niles, $1.60 to $1.85; Green, $1.75 to $2.00 per ctn.

POTATOES—Early Rose, 35 to 45c; River Reds, 40 to 50c; River Burbanks, 50 to 60c per sack; Oregon Burbanks, 50 to 60c; Petaluma Burbanks, 50 to 60c; Sweet Potatoes, 75c to $1 for Merced; new Potatoes, 10 to 12c per lb.

ONIONS—Common, $1.75 to $2.25; choice, $2.35 to $2.65 per ctn; cut onions 50c to $1.25 per sack.

VEGETABLES—Asparagus, $2 for fancy, $1.25 to $1.75 per box for No. 1 and 75c to $1.00 for No. 2; Rhubarb, 35c to $1.00 per box; Alameda Green Peas, $2 to 2 1/2 c per lb; Dried Peppers, 6 to 7c per lb; Dried Okra 12 to 15c; Cabbage, 65 to 75c per ctn; Carrots, 17 to 20c per sack; Garlic, 15 to 20c per lb; Cucumbers, 40c to $1 per dozen; Mexican Tomatoes, $2 and Los Angeles $1.25 per box.

EVAPORATED VEGETABLES—Potatoes, sliced raw, 12c per lb in lots of 25 lbs; sliced, 10 to 12c; gr. mutated raw, 13c; Onions, 60c; Carrots old, 13c; new, 18c; Cabbage, 30c; Sweet Potatoes, 30c; Turnips, 25c; String Beans, 30c; Tomatoes, 50c.

DRIED FRUIT—Prunes, carload lots, 3 1/4 to 4 1/4 c for 40 to 50's, 3 1/4 to 3 3/4 c for 50 to 60's, 2 1/4 to 3 1/4 c for 60 to 70's, 2 1/4 to 2 3/4 c for 70 to 80's, 2 1/4 to 2 3/4 c for 80 to 90's, 1 1/4 to 1 1/2 c for 90 to 100's; Peaches, 3 to 5c; fancy, 5 to 6c; peed, 10 to 12c; Apricots, 5 to 6c for Royals and 7 to 8c for good to fancy Moo parks; Evaporated Apples, 6 to 7c; sun-dried, 4 to 5c; Black Figs, in sacks, 2 to 2 1/2 c; Plums, 4 1/2 to 5c for pitted and 1 1/2 to 2c for unpitted; bleached Plums, 5 to 6c; Raisins, 4 to 5c for prime to fancy; Peas, 2 1/2 to 4 1/2 c for quarters and 3 1/2 to 4 c for halves, according to color, etc.

Has trotted 40 heats as a three-year old better than 2:27 1-2, 31 in 2:20 or better and 12 in 2:15 or better. Won 13 races out of 17 starts as a three-year-old, and a total of $5,400 in his three-year-old form.

ZOMBRO, 2:11 (Registered No. 28,029), brown stallion, foaled in 1892, stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds, and is one of the most perfect formed horses in America. His career on the turf in 1895 stamps him as one of the greatest three-year-olds the world has ever seen.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, sired by McKinney, 2:11 1/4, son of Aleyone by George Wilkes.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, first dam Whisper, by Almont Lightning, son of Almont 33, dam by Mambrino Pilot 29 Patchen and Lady Thorne, 2:13 1/4.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, second dam May Berry, by Kentucky Clay 194, whose dam is also the dam of Mambrino

ZOMBRO, 2:11, third dam by Edwin Forest 49.

Whisper, the dam of Zombro, was bred and raised by Gen. W. T. Withers, of Lexington, Ky., and is a handsome brown mare, 16 hands high, weighing 1,150 pounds. She has never been beaten in the show ring, always carrying off first prize.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, won the first prize over all three-year-old stallions at the Horse Show in San Francisco in 1895.

This grand stallion will make the SEASON of 1898 at SACRAMENTO RACE TRACK, from FEBRUARY 1st to JUNE 1st, 1898. Terms, $30 cash at the time of service.

SEYMOUR WILKES, 2:08 1/2

(REGISTERED 0232)

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

J. H. White's Stock Farm, Lakeville, Cal.

TERMS—$25 FOR THE SEASON

SEYMOUR WILKES was sired by the King of the Wilkes family, Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, dam Early Bird, by Playmail (brother to Barney, 2:25 1/4); second dam Lucy, by Odd Fellow (son of Chloroform); third dam by a son of Williamson's Belmont; fourth dam by Blackhawk 767. Playmail was by Mike 3103 (he by Vermont 322, out of the Peniger mare), out of Kate McDonough (dam of Ella Lewis 2:27, and granddam of Saladin, 2:04 1/4).

SEYMOUR WILKES stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds. He is a seal brown in color, and in conformation is one of the most symmetrical of any in California. His qualities as a level-headed, game and speedy race horse are known to all horsemen. He is the fastest son of the mighty Guy Wilkes, and on his maternal side traces to the very best of sires and dams. He has an iron constitution, and all owners of good mares that want horses that will have breeding, size, bone, quality, good disposition and extreme speed should not overlook this horse. His service fee is placed at a very low figure considering his merits. He never was bred but to a few mares, and his progeny are models of perfection.

Mares can be shipped direct to the ranch via steamer "Gold." The best of care taken of them on the farm, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Pasturage $3 per month. For further particulars apply to

Torso sired the following winners: Torsina, Joe Roger, Torello, True Love II., Tortosa, Una Que Amo, Torsion, Torsolene, Myrtle H., Tortenson, Sister Ella, Solution, Hearso, Torsida, Sculptor, Torchdance, The Shrew, Vana, Odds On, Cosina, Caricia, Restless, Our Johnny, Sweet Liberty, Tessa, Finanza (dead) and Merry Lass (dead).

During his two years of turf career, Torso won nearly $45,000. His full sister, Aurelia, was one of the best mares of her day, winning $20,385, and her first foal was last season's capital two-year-old performer, Aurelian. Their dam, Imp. Santa Lucia, also threw the winners, Tasso and Aureole. She is a daughter of the triple event winner, Lord Lyon, and through him obtains the potent blood of Paradigm, who produced Achievement, and two of whose granddaughters are the dams of Ladas and Glare, two of the best two-year-olds in England in 1893.

Algerine, the sire of Torso, was a superior race horse, winner of the Belmont Stakes, etc., and is by Abd-el-Kader, out of Nina, by Boston. Abd-el-Kader (a full brother to the good four-miler, Abd-el-Koree), although badly hiped, was a fine race horse at all distances. He won a dash of four miles at Saratoga, in 1869, in 7:31½, a very creditable performance. Nina, the dam of Algerine, was one of the best race mares of her day. She was a winner at all distances, from one to four-mile heats, in good time, and produced Planet, one of the best horses in the country at all distances, and a successful sire, also Echequer, Minette, Eclipse, etc.

Torso was a brilliant two-year-old. He won the first of the Double Events from a field of nine and also the second Double Event with a five-pound penalty, making his weight 123 pounds. In the Surf stakes he beat Cayuga, St. James and four others, and in the Flatbush he defeated Reclaire, Onaway, Burlington and three others.

At three years of age he won the Lorillard Stakes, 1½ miles in 2:36¼, from Tournament, Barquet, Sadisha, Devotee, St. John, Burlington and Protection, a high-class field; was second to Burlington for the Brooklyn Derby, in front of Tournament, Padisba, Lisimouy, Kenwood and four others; was second for the Equinoctial Stakes to Reclaire, beating Tournament and others, and carrying nine pounds more than the winner, and was third for the Omnibus Stakes, 1½ miles, carrying a penalty of five pounds.

TERMS $50 THE SEASON.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898. All bills payable not later than that date. Good pasturage at $5 per month.

Sire and Grandsire of ALL the 2:10 Performers ever Produced in Oregon and Washington.

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

Alameda, at $100 the Season.

(WITH USUAL RETURN PRIVILEGES.)

LIMITED TO TWENTY-FIVE MARES.

ALTAMONT shares championship honors with Baron Wilkes, a horse of great opportunities, in having six 2:10 performers to his credit. He has taken a leading position among the foremost trotting sires of the country under such conditions that phenomenal ability alone has saved him from oblivion. A very small proportion of his progeny has been trained, and an extremely small number of these by competent men. As a partial illustration of his meagre advantages, it may be stated that he has never produced a colt from a pacing-bred mare or from one with a fast record. Nor until 1897 had he ever been crossed with a descendant of George Wilkes, Electioneer, Dictator, Sidney or Dexter Prince. Oregon and Washington have produced seven 2:10 performers, and EVERY ONE of these are ALTAM. NTS.

ALTAMONT is a horse of iron constitution, and at twenty-three years of age is in the full vigor of his prime, a sure foal-getter, and, except for his blindness—the result of an accident—is without blemish. He has never sired a sorrel, all of his colts having been solid colors—bays, browns or blacks.

Note—Bessie Rankin, by Altamont, sold November, 1897, brought the highest price obtained for a harness horse at public auction in California during the year. Address

ZOBAIR

—SIRED BY—
ST. SAVIOUR, out of NIGHTHAWK, by HADDINGTON; second dam by NORFOLK, etc., to the thirteenth dam.

ZOBAIR is a bay stallion, foaled in 1890, and is one of the finest-looking thoroughbreds in America. His career on the turf compares favorably with any thoroughbred in America. He started 38 times, won 11, was second 9 times and third 7 times, and won almost $6,000 in purses.

ZOBAIR will make the SEASON OF 1898, ending JULY 1st, at the PETALUMA RACE TRACK. TERMS $25 THE SEASON.

Mares kept in any manner owners may desire. Facilities for doing so are first-class. Mares can be shipped per steamer "Gold." For pasturage, etc., apply to

If MONTEREY begets colts like himself he will prove to be the poor man's friend, for it will cost but little to bring them to the races.

MONTEREY had but five months' training before making his record of 2:13¾, last half in 1:03¾. Last season I had no idea of getting him beaten, but his foot was injured in the blacksmith shop, consequently he had to be let up in his training. Previous to this unfortunate accident, I drove him a mile in 2:11¼, last half in 1:02½, last quarter in 30 seconds. This was done in the presence of 3,000 people about July 10th. I could have driven him better than 2:10, as he seems to be all right. I look for him to get the harness record this year, which ought to make his produce very salable.

MONTEREY is a thorough race horse, as he is level-headed and game as a pebble. He has a fine, resolute way of going a gait so much admired by all. A glance at his pedigree will convince any horseman that he is bred in the purple and is justly entitled to his extra speed. Every one of his family are producers of early and extreme speed.

MONTEREY is one of the gamest horses I ever drove, and, like his full brother, Montana, 2:16¼, the races are never too long for him. Montana won the Occident Stake in seven heats and many a hard-fought race since.

Hattie, dam of Montana and Monterey, is a grand-looking bay mare, and I consider her one of the very strongest, as well as one of the best-bred mares in America. Her sire is strongly bred, and sires speed. To his credit may be mentioned Meteor, 2:17¼; Carrie Bell, 2:23¼; the dams of Iago, 2:11; Fell-fare, 2:16¼; Galette, 2:12½, and thirteen others in the list.

I have every reason to expect that Monterey will be the "King of all Trotters." In color he is a rich chestnut, and in conformation he has strong loins and back, good shoulders, fine head and neck, and the best of feet and legs. He weighs 1,200 pounds and stands 15.3 hands.

I will have Monterey at my ranch at Milpitas any time mares are sent there.

TERMS, $50, With Usual Return Privileges.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898, as Monterey will then be prepared for the races. All bills payable not later than that date. Address all letters to

THE BURNS HANDICAP.

How the Burns Handicap Was Run.—The ten horses lined up to the barrier and twice a majority of them broke away, and were recalled. At length the webbing flew skyward to a superb send-off, and they were not called back. Scarborough showed in front for a moment, but passing the stand it was Traverser first by a scant length, Buck Massie and Fonsovannah heads apart, with 'Ostler Joe at his heels, heading a bunch behind. In the run of the next quarter of a mile Fonsovannah went up second, and that was the only change worth recording. Traverser, however, had increased his lead to two lengths. Fonsovannah moved up until at the half-mile ground he was but a length behind the speedy son of Rossington, while at his heels came Buck Massie, 'Ostler Joe and Satsuma, heads apart as named, Scarborough another length away, just lapped by Linstock, he three parts of a length before Won't Dance and Candelaria, head and head. Now the field began to bunch up closer and closer, and as they neared the three-quarter pole shouts went up for Fonsovannah, Satsuma and Buck Massie, who were running strong at this point, and cries of "Traverser's beaten!" mingled with the yells for the trio mentioned above. On the final turn Shields suddenly shot Satsuma (who was against the inner rails) into the lead, and it was all over bar the shouting, for no horse was ever known to pass the son of Macduff, once his white face showed first in the homestretch. Morrellito was full of run, and though he tried hard to get through, was shut off completely. Shields took no chances with Dr. Rowell's game old horse, for Won't Dance and Candelaria (respectively seventh and ninth as the field straightened away for the home run) were coming as if propelled on the wings of the wind. Candelaria on the extreme outside of the course, Won't Dance more toward the center of the track. The homestretch was now the scene of great activity, and every jockey was doing his utmost to get his mount to the fore. Won't Dance and Candelaria cut down the space that separated them from Satsuma at a great rate, but the white-faced horse, though undeniably tired, was game, and ridden to the very best advantage by the tall Texan, won the great race of the California season, with all sails set, "out" to the last ounce, Won't Dance at his saddle, coming nearly twice as fast as the winner, while another half length away, on the outside, was Candelaria, running fully as speedily as Corrigan's mare, he as far before the pocketed Scarborough, who beat the unfortunate Morrellito half a length. The time was 2:07½; the fractional time, ½, 0:25½; ½, 0:49½; ¾, 1:15; mile, 1:41½, 1½, 2:07½. Judging by the applause that greeted the two "S's," Shields and Satsuma, upon their coming to the winners' ring, the victory was an exceedingly popular one, and when the floral horse-shoe had been placed by President T. H. Williams upon the neck of the victor, who walked proudly toward his abiding place, when Trainer Jimmy Coffey and owner Dr. Rowell had nearly had their hands wrung off by congratulating friends and when the band had played "Yankee Doodle," most of those present began to think of other fields to conquer, and the Burns Handicap of 1898 was but a pleasant memory.

Retrospective.—Viewed from any standpoint, the Burns Handicap was a great turf event. The race was close, exciting from a barrier-raise to sighting rod, and a long-priced horse won it, showing that the handicapper had performed his task well, for had he not mystified both the layers of the odds and most of the race-goers? That's the way to judge weight-fixing. When there's a good price against anything in the field that lines up and an outsider wins, then the "know-it-alls" shut up like the clams one reads about. The victory, though won by a Kentucky-bred horse, owned by a Minnesota man, was none the less popular, for the white-faced Satsuma is such a consistent fellow, such a demon of the homestretch, such a never-say-die horse that he has long been adored by those that love an honest-running thoroughbred. Satsuma won it because he received a better ride than any horse of the ten that faced the barrier.

That Won't Dance, the runner-up, was the best galloper in the race, ninety-eight out of every 100 close observers of racing will admit, for she was unfortunate enough to get kicked at the post by Satsuma, and was also cut off early in the action and forced to go around her field. That under those circumstances the daughter of Longfellow (carrying 118 lbs to Satsuma's 122) should finish a close-up second is astonishing, and her performance must be gratifying to her owner big Ed Corrigan.

Candelaria made up more ground in the homestretch than any horse in the big bunch. According to the official form chart, when they were straightened away for the run home Candelaria was ninth, over five lengths behind Satsuma, the leader, yet he came on the outside and was beaten but a length. This goes far to show that Thorpe did not move up soon enough with the brother in blood to Sir Walter, and that our estimate of Candelaria (that he was really the best horse in the race at the weights) was not far out of the way.

Scarborough ran a grand race and considering he was pocketed when nearing the three-quarter pole, must have been nearly as good a horse as the winner.

Morellito was a good horse in this race, but could not get through in the homestretch, hemmed in as he was on all sides.

Of Fonsovannah it can be said that his chances went glimmering because he chased Traverser for a trifle over a mile.

Buck Massie began dropping back at the head of the homestretch, and he can be written down in your book: "A good old has-been."

'Ostler Joe was a good fourth for three-quarters of a mile, then the 122 pounds on his back began to tell its tale of woe, and he wound up eighth, two lengths behind the once great Buck Massie.

Linstock had too much weight, as we remarked several days ago, and was never a dangerous factor.

Traverser would not do, because Fonsovannah was in the race, pressing him pretty hard for fully a mile.

Satsuma, the Winner.—The Burns Handicap victor is a dark chestnut horse over 16 hands in height, weighing we should say about 1,050 pounds. He has a blaze face and four white feet. The white on his hind legs extends nearly to his hocks, that on his off fore leg close to the knee, that on the nigh one not extending so far. Satsuma was bred by Milt Young at McGrathiana Stud, Kentucky, and is six years old. Dr. Rowell brought him to California a year ago last fall, and the white-faced horse had been considered more of a sprinter than anything else. He is a sprinter of a high order, as his six furlongs in 1:12½ at Oakland with 112 lbs. up shows, but he has also run the distance in 1:39½ at Oakland and did the distance in 1:40 at Ingleside, too. Satsuma is bred in the purple, as the following tabulated pedigree goes to show:

Macduff	{	Imp. Macaroon.....	{ Sweetmeat
		(Sire of Gregory, &c.)	{ Joaze
		Songstress.....	{ Chanticleer
		(Winner Oaks)	{ Mrs. Carter
Jersey Lass.....	{	Imp. King Ernest.....	{ King Tom
		(Sire of Kinglike, &c.)	{ Ernestine
		Jersey Belle.....	{ Aimpolite
		(Sister to Spendrift)	{
Volturno.....	{	Imp. Billet.....	{ Voltigeur
		(Sire of Miss Woodford, &c.)	{ Calcutta
		Sprightly.....	{ Lexington
		(Sister to Salina)	{ Lightsome
Alborak.....	{	Arminis.....	{ Imp. Phaeton
		(Sire of Arctino, &c.)	{ Nellie Grey
		Sangaree.....	{ Uncle Vic
		(Dam of Ella Warren)	{ Amanda Buford

Fifth dam, Sally Anderson (sister to the dam of Norfolk), by imp. Glencoe—9th dam, Chice Anderson, by Rodolph—7th dam, Belle Anderson, by Sir William of Transport—8th dam, Butterfy, by Sumpter—9th dam, daughter of imp. Buzzard—10th dam, by Dandridge's Fearnought—11th dam, by imp. Janus.

It will be observed that Satsuma has in his veins the most fashionable and best producing blood of England and America. Macduff won the Champagne and other stakes and was by imp. Macaroon, who sired Gregory and Cerise, latter dam of Morello. On the dam's side Satsuma traced to the same source as the unbeaten Norfolk.

Dr. H. E. Rowell, owner of Satsuma, is a well-known veterinarian. He used to live in Minneapolis, Minn., and has been in the racing game for half a dozen years or more. Satsuma is the best horse he ever owned, and few can boast of ever possessing a much better racer, take him all in all, Chappie and Abina have won a few races for the Doctor, but Satsuma is and has been for some time the mainstay of the stable. Dr. Rowell is not a wealthy man, and the win of Satsuma is therefore probably appreciated highly on that account, leaving out the sentimental part of it.

Jimmy Coffey, trainer of Satsuma, is young, but if there is a better conditioner of race horses than he on this side of the continent we know not where the superior of Jamey liveth. Coffey was for many years a jockey at the far East, especially well known at Gloucester and Guttenburg, and came out to California about four years ago as foreman for Frank Van Ness, who had a big string of gallopers, including the mighty Morello. The young man virtually trained about half the horses, and left Van Ness to "go on his own hook" about two years ago, and his great success is well known to everyone interested out this way in galloping material. Coffey is very conservative and modest, and was never known to brag of his achievements in the line of conditioning racers.

Henry Shields, rider of Satsuma in the Burns Handicap, is twenty-three years old, hails from the city of Dallas, Lone Star State (Texas), and, like Coffey, is exceedingly modest and unassuming. He started work in a racing stable as exercise boy about ten years ago. In 1890 he rode his first race, and it was for J. M. Brown, a brother of Galen. For two years he rode for another brother, Ed Brown. For two and a half years he was with Sam Hildreth, and has since been in the employ of Galen Brown. Shields knew Satsuma pretty well, for the bald-faced horse had downed the record-breaker, Libertine, by short heads on a couple of occasions when he (Shields) had the mount on the big bay.

THE BRUCE LOWE FIGURE SYSTEM OF BREEDING.

Nothing is attracting so much attention among American thoroughbred breeders at the present time as breeding race horses on the figure system evolved by the late C. Bruce Lowe, of Australia. As a large portion of this great work was done in the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN and we had many an hour's talk with the genial gentleman that has passed away to the other shore, we naturally take great interest in the theories advanced by Mr. Lowe, which are accepted as excellent lines to go on by the breeders of England and the Colonies. In this country, however, there is a diversity of opinion as to their correctness, and several prominent Kentuckians have recently tried to pull them to pieces in print. That Mr. Lowe made a discovery of value in that the male members of the 3, 8, 11, 12 and 14 families make superior sires there can be but no gainsaying, and it is equally convincing to our minds that the mares sired by horses tracing in the direct male line to Herod make sires of superior stud matrons. Thus there is much merit possessed by those descended in the male line to Eclipse or the Darley Arabian and those descending in the male line to Herod or the Byerly Turk. Those tracing in the direct male line to Matchem (the Godolphin Arabian line) are now quite rare, the best of that line in this country being Spendthrift, Mier, Kingston, Lamplighter and imp. Darebin.

We vouchsafe the opinion that Mr. Lowe's figures will serve as a very fair guide to breeders, at any rate, and it is our idea that if a mare tracing to Herod in the direct line and to "tap-root" mare No. 1 (Tregonwell's Natural Barb mare) on the female side were mated with a stallion of the Eclipse male line and tracing on the mother's side to the dam of the two True Blues (No. 3 of the Lowe system), the mare possessing roominess and strength, the stallion "looking like a horse," and neither stallion or mare having any transmittable defect, something very good in the racing line should be the result of the union. Nevertheless, many illustrious broodmares, among them Penelope by Trumpeter and Blink Bonny, by Melbourne, have traced in the male line to the Godolphin Arabian. Individuality should be the first care, then the breeding of stallion and mare. A weedy mother, no matter how well bred, is not likely to produce anything but a weed, and a feminine-looking stallion, may be bred ever so well, is not the horse that breeders should mate their mares with.

The late Bruce Lowe based his figures, which we give below, upon the degree of success achieved in the Derby, Oaks and St. Leger (England's three great classic racing events) by animals tracing their descent to some forty-three original mares. For instance, those tracing to the Tregonwell Natural Barb mare (No. 1) had the largest number of Derby, Oaks or St. Leger victories to their credit, those to No. 2 (the Burton Barb mare) next, and so on, down to No. 34. In short, the No. 1's stand first in point of racing ability, No. 3 stands third in the winning line and the male members of it first as sires, so that, taken all in all, No. 3 is the greatest of all families. The descendants of mares from 34 to 43 never won any of the three great classic events, but were, nevertheless, original, or 'tap-root' mares, and given numbers by our dead friend.

The families thus being numbered in order of merit from a racing point of view, writes a well-known New York breeding student, and that, too, on the only safe principle, i. e., judgment by results, two discoveries were presently made: Families 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 represent the highest degree of vital force, otherwise racing capacity, but that these 'running families,' except in the case of No. 3, are deficient in the elements that constitute successful sires; on the other hand, families 3, 8, 11, 12 and 14 are distinguished for the potency of what Mr. Lowe called their 'sire blood,' and, as he declared, no horse has ever been a marked success as a sire unless descended directly from one of these families or inbred strongly to them; where there has been any exception to this rule, as in Blacklock's case, the horse has only succeeded by having the 'sire' element strong in his mates. It is further proved to demonstration that no great horse of modern days can be named without some of the 'running' and 'sire' lines in the three first removes of his pedigree. And now if we set out the original mares in order according to their figures, with a few of her principal descendants set against each to serve as a guide, the reader will have a ready means of reference by which to understand what every figure in a pedigree means. The figures of the running families are, throughout, printed in italics, without brackets, the sire lines (including No. 3, which is both 'sire' and 'running') in thick type, and the other lines in ordinary type, for the purposes of easy distinction. Here, then, is the allotment of figures:

NO.	TAP ROOT MARES.	TO THIS SOURCE TRACED
1	Tregonwell's Natural Barb mare	Whalebone, Minting, imp. King Galop, English Loyalist
2	Burton's Barb mare	Voltigeur, Blacklock
3	Dam of the two True Blues	Stockwell, Sir Peter
4	Layton Barb mare	Matchem, Thormanby, Pontiac, Morello, Iroquois
5	Dau. of Massey's Black Barb	Gladiator, Hermit, imp. Kantaka
6	Old Bald Peg	Priam, Diomed, Manchaca

11	Sedbury Royal mare	Regulus, Birdcatcher, St. Simon
12	A Royal mare (Old Montagu mare)	Eclipse, Sterling Prince, Rudolph, Salvador, Leonatus, Liden, imp. Maxim, Onondaga, Sensation, Lexington
13	A Royal mare (dam of Turk mare)	Highflyer, Orlando, imp. Sarpedon, Alexander
14	The Oldfield mare	Touchstone, Macaroni
15	A Royal mare (dam of Whynot)	Soothsayer, Jerry, Foxhall, Inspector B.
16	Sister to Stripling (by Hutton's spot)	Ormonde and Agnes family
17	Byerly Turk mare	Pantaloon, Yattendon
18	Old Woodcock mare (dam of Old Spot mare)	Waxy, Trenton (Aus.)
19	Dau. of Davill's Old Woodcock	Isonomy, Sir Hugo, Lisbon
20	Dau. of Gascoigne's Foreign horse	Citadel, Traducer (N. Z.)
21	Moonah Barb mare	Sweetmeat, Lonely
22	Belgrade Turk mare	Gladiator, St. Blaise
23	Piping Pig	Ossian, Barcaldine
24	Helmley Turk mare	Camel, The Baron, Hindoo
25	Brimmer mare	Young Melbourne, Comus, Sefton
26	Merlin mare	Herod, Promised Land, Long-fellow
27	Spanker mare	Saunterer, Pero Gomez
28	Dau. of Place's White Turk	Emilius, Dalesman
29	Natural Barb mare (dam of Bosset Arab mare)	Landscape, Ashton
30	Dau. of Duc de Chartres' Hawker	Paris, Delpini, Stamford
31	Dick Barton's Barb mare	Ruler, Fazzoletto
32	Barb mare (Dodsworth's dam)	Nike, Fitz Gladiator
33	Sister to Honeycombe Punch	Sergeant, Dunganon
34	Hautboy mare	Antonio, Birdingham
35	Dau. of Bustler	Haphazard, Bustard (Castrol)
36	Dau. of Olden's Bay Barb	Economist, Old Engineer
37	Sister to Old Merlin	Dr. Syntax, Little Red Rover
38	Thwait's Dun mare	Pot-8-08
39	Bonny Black	Dagworth (Aus.)
40	A Royal mare (dam of Brimmer)	Boston (Am.)
41	Grasshopper mare	Bagot, Portrait
42	Spanker mare	Oiseau, Cestus
43	Natural Barb mare (Emperor of Morocco's gift)	Balfie, Underhand

It must not for a moment be assumed, nor did Mr. Bruce Lowe dream of contending, that the lowest figures are necessarily to be avoided. On the contrary, not a few of them have lately begun to gain strength by the process of repeated additions to them of the 'sire' and 'running' blood. Thus No. 10 has been built up into Queen Mary and her descendants, No. 16 into Agnes, whose fame culminates in Ormonde, and No. 19 has been peculiarly unlucky in classic victories, seeing that one of its members was Isonomy and another Plaisanterie, while Vedette and Surefoot of the same line did not get beyond the 2,000 Guineas in three-year-old classics.

THE TRUE TEST OF A RACER.

Capt. Thomas B. Merry, one of the best-posted turf writers in the world, has the following to say in his Los Angeles paper (The Phoenix) anent the merits of several turf celebrities. The real test of a horse's merit is his ability to carry his weight for age. I would rather own a winner of one race at weight for age than to own the winner of four handicaps—unless he had carried, in some one of these handicaps, a greater impost than his weight for age. That is the real test of a horse's merits. Almost any old skate that is naturally endowed with lots of pace can get out and run a bruising race with "a straw hat" on his back, but when the animal in question puts up 141 pounds and wins in 1:42½, as Frypan did when he beat Malus at Melbourne in 1886, you can conclude he is a pretty good horse. It is also worthy of remark that Carbine did two miles in 3:28½ with 145 pounds up, in a field of thirty-nine starters, which is another infallible criterion guaranteed by the weight and corroborated by the time record; and while the time has been beaten a second and a half by Judge Denny, it will be remembered that the latter was of the same age and carried thirty-seven pounds less. Under the old English rule a difference of seven pounds was equal to a distance.

The Kentuckians thought Aristides the greatest horse in all America, at long distances, because he carried 104 pounds and beat Ten Broeck, of the same age, two miles and a half at Lexington in 4:27½. That it was a good and fast race nobody will seek to deny, but how does it compare with the Ascot Cup race of 1853 in England, run in exactly the same time? West Australian, 4 years 117 pounds, won in 4:27½; Kingston, 5 years, 126 pounds, was second; and Rataplan, 4 years, 117 pounds, coming very fast, was third, the three finishing heads apart. Under the new rules in vogue in that country, West Australian and Rataplan would have carried 126 and Kingston 131, which would have reduced the relative difference from nine pounds to five; and that probably would have given Kingston the race, as he got a good deal less than a four pounds beating. In that same year Rataplan put up 130 pounds and won the Manchester Cup, a mile and three quarters, beating a field of seventeen starters, among them Virago and Hungerford, both great cup horses.

Still I have always regarded West Australian as a badly overrated horse and have been disposed to class him with such three-year-olds as Lord Lyon and Common, rather than with Ormonde, Isinglass and Gladiator. It is notorious that a bad start defeated Savernake for both the Derby and St. Leger, and that, if he had gotten off on even terms, Lord Lyon would have had to be contented with his victory over Monarch of the Glen and Knight of the Crescent in the Two Thousand. And as for Common, the best horse he ever beat was Gouverneur, and he was very poor, while Martenhurst (who was worth a ten-acre lot full of both of them on account of his Queen Mary blood) was still worse. I cannot find any three-year-old performance of West Australian's to make me believe that he was anywhere near first class as a three-year-old. In the Two Thousand he beat Sittingbourne, Barbatus and twenty-four others; in the Derby he beat Sittingbourne, Barbatus and twenty-four others; and in the St. Leger he beat The Reiver (brother to Windhound) and Rataplan with seven others unplaced. (The large field of starters in the Derby shows they were not much afraid of him.) Of all these, the only horse with any history worth remembering is Rataplan, who was never at his best till the autumn of his four-year old form.

Hence I believe there are triple-winners and triple-winners, and as I never heard of Sittingbourne or Barbatus having won a historical race of any great value, I must put down West Australian, Lord Lyon and Common in one class and Ormonde, Isinglass and Gladiator in another. There is no power on earth that could make me believe that any one of the first three was as good as the Flying Dutchman or his grand; son Galopin, who, though he only won the Derby, was a better horse than a great many who won both Derby and St. Leger. Galopin certainly made jassaxes of Cambello and Craig Millar, who won the Two Thousand and St. Leger in his year; and as for the Dutchman, he was never beaten but once—in the Doncaster Cup of 1850, won by Voltigeur—and that was from having a drunken jockey (Marlowe) on his back who undertook to make a runaway race of it. Hence I will always believe there are lucky horses. The Dutchman won the Emperor of Russia's Cup (two miles) at Ascot, beating Jericho, Canezon, Little Jock and Peep o' Day Boy, and was never once extended in the entire race. Neither Lord Lyon nor Common ever began to achieve such race.

PROPOSED RACING CIRCUIT, NORTH PACIFIC COAST.

At an adjourned meeting of the horsemen held in Portland last Saturday, the committee appointed to arrange dates for a racing circuit for the coming season reported as follows, says the North Pacific Rural Spirit. We, your committee, appointed to arrange dates for the coming season's racing, recommend the following dates as being the most satisfactory to all points concerned:

Portland, July 2d to 9th.
Spokane, July 11th to 16th.
Vancouver, B. C., July 18th to 23d.
Victoria, July 25th to 30th.
Independence, August 30th to September 3d.
Portland, fall meeting, September 10th to 17th.
Tacoma, September 19th to 24th.
North Yakima, September 26th to October 1st.
Walla Walla, October 3d to 8th.
Pendleton, October 10th to 15th.
La Grande, October 7th to 22d.
Boise City, October 24th to November 5th.

Should there be places given dates on this circuit who fail to hold a meeting, others can be substituted or dates changed, so as to make a continuous circuit. For instance, should Pendleton fail to get their track completed this year, La Grande could take their date, and so on. The dates suggested are not compulsory on any association holding a meeting, but are recommended to the best interest of both horsemen and the association. The territory is so large that it makes a tedious duty to arrange dates for all who are likely to hold race meetings this year; but we have considered the matter thoroughly, and believe the plan suggested is the best that can be done.

ELLIS MCLEAN.

E. I. ROBINSON, an attorney of this city who loves a good horse, has just completed the handsomest and most complete pedigree table that was probably ever made. It is of the grand St. Blaise horse, Magnet, and in shape resembles a fan. It is run out for ten generations, and is in colors (red, blue and black, the "running blood" in blue, "sire blood" in red), besides having the Bruce Lowe figures to every horse in the compilation. The work entailed in tracing all the animals in such a pedigree to their "tap roots" can better be imagined than described. Suffice it to say that Mr. Robinson worked upon it until midnight every day for two weeks, and if he were not a rapid and enthusiastic workman he could not have completed it in that period of time. The present owner of Magnet is a firm believer in the Bruce Lowe system of breeding, and it is therefore unnecessary to say that he values the tabulation very highly. Mr. Robinson can well be proud of this, a work of art as well of instruction.

GUADALUPE, April 10, 1898.—EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Please answer the following questions in your next paper: 1st. Who bred, how old and what color was Sacramento (son of Rifleman and Bonnie Bell). 2d. Who bred, how old and what color was Margery (daughter of Error and Gentle Annie). D. B.

Answer—1. The late William Williamson bred Sacramento, which was foaled in 1866, and which was in color a bay. 2. George Treat, of San Francisco, bred Margery, chestnut mare, foaled in 1870.

BOTH Senator Bland, and his sire imp. Inverness, trace through their dams to the Layton Barb mare. Another remarkable coincidence is that the sixteenth dam of imp. Inverness is a daughter of Brimmer and the fifteenth dam of Senator Bland is the same daughter of Brimmer. In other words, the last four dams of both imp. Inverness and Senator Bland are the same. According to the Bruce Lowe system of figures, the Layton Barb mare is No. 4 and the Brimmer mare No. 25.

SALVABLE, Pat Dunne's Salvator horse, with Jockey "Bill" Martin up, won the rich Montgomery Handicap at Memphis, Tenn., last Saturday, with 108 lbs. up. Ornament (127 lbs.) was second, Judge Steadman (94 lbs.) third. Three others started. The time for a mile and a sixteenth was 1:50½. This win of Salvable helps California out some, for the same day Kentucky-bred Satsuma won our richest stake, the Burns Handicap.

OLINTHUS, brother to Diggs, won two stake races within the week. He was ridden by Henry Shields, who also piloted Satsuma to victory in the $10,000 Burns Handicap. It begins to look as if Formero was the best two-year-old colt in California, for he has beaten Olinthus several times. However, the latter has surely improved lately, and might be able to turn the tables on young Sink's Conveth colt.

V. L. KIRKMAN's pure white two-year-old colt White Cross, by Palestine, dam Black Girl, is training at Cumberland Park and worked recently a quarter in 0:26. The oddity of a pure white thoroughbred makes the colt quite a curiosity, and should he turn out to be a good racehorse the combination of color and performance would place him among the phenomena of the turf.

Saddle Notes.

EDA (dam of Green Hock and Patriot) has foaled a colt by Almont (son of Three Cheers and Question, by Joe Hooker).

OCTURUCK is the second of the get of Rio Bravo to win. As Rio Frio's win was at seven furlongs and Octuruck's at a mile, it goes to show that the Rio Bravos like a long journey.

THE Macduffs were very much in the hunt Saturday. But two of them started, and both won—Satsuma the fourth race (the Burns Handicap) and McLight the fifth, a free handicap.

BEN BURR, a well-known turf follower, died of consumption in this city on Monday night. For some time past he had been writing sheet for the bookmaking firm of Jackman & Co.

DR. CATLETT impresses the work watchers at the Gravesend-track. He is nearly ready. Michael III, the California-bred colt by imp. Islington—Jessie C., is also a most attractive worker.

IT is no certainty that Ab Stemler will go East with Fleur de Lis. She pulled up a bit lame the other day, and he wants to find out whether it is anything serious before shipping 3,000 miles.

DAVID, of the Benson, Arthur & Co. string, was shaken up badly in the race special that was wrecked on its way from New Orleans here. It will be some time before he is able to race.—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

LITTLE DICK CLAWSON had six mounts Tuesday, and he put four of them first over the plate, besides riding second on one. His wins were on Canace (2 to 1), Banewor (2 to 5), Newgatherer (6 to 1), and Watomba (5 to 1).

OJAI, winner of the two-year-old race April 8th, is by Sid from Dottie Dimple, and consequently a full brother to Hueneme and Saticoy; also a half brother to Santa Paula. Dottie Dimple, owned by John Hill, has a yearling filly by Rin/ax.

MIKE DWYER, ever a disciple of present use of the horse is said to have offered H. Warne—who, through Reclaire, broke into turf success in 1889—$10,000 for his Pirate of Penzance—Minnehaha Belle colt, Pirate M., a smart youngster.

DR. H. E. ROWELL, owner of the Burns Handicap winner, has presented Jim Coffey with a diamond pin in recognition of his services in training Satsuma, the winner of the richest of California stakes. Coffey deserves his success, as he is one of the most painstaking and conscientious trainers in the profession.

THE horse Hugh Penny and his owner, F. W. Does, were ruled off at Little Rock for the ignominious defeat of the horse March 31st and his particularly easy victory over Laureate and other good horses two days later. The contrast was too strong for the judges and the cause of honest racing is the beneficiary.

JOCKEY A. THOMPSON, whose lamentable accident occurred outside the Sheffield, Ind., and not the Roby track, June 26, 1897, as the baloonic news from Nashville states, is riding at Nashville with a cork leg. He rode Kentucky Colonel Monday and the inanimate member did not seem to handicap him.—Daily Racing News.

TOMMY LOTTRIDGE, of the firm of Atkins & Lottridge, stated Tuesday that the horses in his charge would probably not go East this summer. The best of them, including Scarborough, Tea Rose and Saintly, will be given a well-earned rest, while La Parasseuse, Adam Andrew and a couple of others will be asked to earn oats on the California circuit.

THE first two races Tuesday were won by the get of two young Australian horses (imp. Creighton and Stromboli). Creighton, who won the first prize for thoroughbred stallions at the San Francisco Horse Show two or three times, is at A. B. Spreckels' Napa stock farm; Stromboli was taken back to New South Wales. The latter was a Sydney Cup winner, and won some good excellent races on this side of the Pacific—this after he had been given up as a racing proposition by his trainer in Australia.

F. GEBHARD did not carry out his intention of selling Olindo and his other crack jumpers, only the following being allowed to go under the hammer: Violets, ch m, a, by Hous-ton—Jennie Lee, J. McDonald, $175; Miss Quito, ch m, 5, by Quito—Violets, J. McDonald, $100; Active II., ch g, 3, by Senation—Alacrity, Stanton, Elliott, $50; Brown gelding, 2, by Simon Magus—Pandora, F. L. Reynolds, $160; Prince Howard, b h, a, by Prince Charley—Blanche, Dr. McCullough, $150.—Daily Racing Form.

GOOD old bald-faced Satsuma came out of his gruelling race in fair shape, but he will be hardly ready to engage in another such contest inside of ten days. Scarborough did not fare nearly so well. This horse might have won but for being hemmed in during the entire journey, and he has six distinct cuts as the result of the crowding, and it will be a long time before he will again face the starter. This is most unfortunate, as the son of El Rio Rey was in rare fettle, and is quite a severe blow to Atkins & Lottridge.

W. H. LEAVITT, for years connected with the Washington Park Club, Chicago, left for home April 8th after about a month's visit here. He was charmed with California, and especially with Rancho del Paso, which he declares is the greatest breeding establishment in America, by long odds. Of the stallions he saw at "the grant," imp. Star Ruby suited him best, though he was much taken with imp. St. Andrew, imp. Goldfinch, imp. Watercross, imp. Darebin and Salvador. Mr. Leavitt made many friends during his sojourn here, and we shall be surprised if he does not again make the trip to the land of the sunset sea next winter.

KINZEA STONE, Georgetown, Ky., has had the misfortune to lose the chestnut mare Equal Rights, eleven years old, by Himyar out of Georgetown, by Ten Broeck, she out of Georgia Wood, by imp. Knight of St. George. She died from the effects of foaling a fine chestnut colt by Charade, which also died.

CANACE, winner of the first race Tuesday, is the first of the get of A. B. Spreckels' good-looking Australian horse, Crichton, to win, if memory serves us well. The filly is out of Nellie Bell, dam of Little T. G. and a sister to Faro. Nellie Ball's dam, Avondale, is an own sister to Hattie Harris, dam of Joe Murphy and Joe Ullman. Gem of the Mountains (dam of Blue Bell) and Susie S., an excellent performer, were also sisters to Hattie Harris and Avondale.

WITH the legitimate racing season only two days old at Little Rock, the Castleton bred ones have shown well. The two-year-olds have started, and both have won, namely, Gay Parisienne, by Tournant—Prince Iskra, and The Gezeer, by St. Leonards—Lady Invercauld. A singular thing about Gay Parisienne is when a suckling she had a leg broken. It afterwards knitted and got all right, and the veterinary said at the time that the part of the limb fractured would be stronger than ever.—The Thoroughbred Record.

THE stewards of the Pacific Coast Jockey Club met April 8th and reinstated the horses Gold Dust and Silverado. The horses were ruled off when in Stanford's possession, but as the latter has left the country and the horses have reverted to their original owners, the change in ruling was made. Steeplechase riders Madden and Peters applied for a rehearing, but no action was taken. The case of H. M. Mason and Lobos, who were suspended at Oakland, came up before the stewards, who referred it to the Ingleside judges.

THE Putzel racing bill has passed both houses of the Maryland legislature and with its passage the hopes of the "out-law" turfmen go glimmering. The bill limits racing in all the counties of the State to thirty days, except in Baltimore County, where racing and bookmaking are permitted for forty days in each year. The bill further provides that licenses for racing on any track shall be issued by the judges of the Circuit Court for the respective counties, so that complaints against such racing on the ground that it maintains a nuisance can be laid before the judges and licenses refused or revoked for the public good.—Daily Racing Form.

HARRY M. MASON, trainer of the good colt Lobos, is in a queer position, and it's possible he would like someone to tell him just "where he is at." About three weeks ago he was indefinitely suspended by the C. J. C. officials for winning with Lobos at Oakland. Soon thereafter he applied for a rehearing. Late last week he was informed that the matter was turned over to the Pacific Coast Jockey Club stewards. Now the P. C. J. C. stewards, refusing to wash the linen of their neighbors, declare they see no reason for taking up the matter. Meanwhile Mr. Mason is "in the air," to use a slang expression. As two-year-olds are about as consistent as "jingo" Congressmen, some running well on one track and not on others, and as Lobos' showing is no worse than that of several others owned by men that have not been punished, it might be as well to shuffle up and have a new deal with the Mason and other two-year-old cards.

"BLITZEN, the 'iron horse,' the head of the Bloomingdale Stud, near Richmond, Va., has grown quite stout since his retirement from the turf, and shown to halter, the famous son of Blazes and Germania presents a very handsome appearance," so says our Richmond correspondent. "He was placed in the stud at Bloomingdale in the Spring of 1897, and his first crop of foals at the farm are beginning to arrive. Among them are a chestnut filly, out of Glorianna, by Ben d'Or; a chestnut colt out of Lady F., by imp. Kyrle Daly, and a bay out of an unnamed mare, by Hindoo or Sir Dixon, whose dam was Sabina, sister to Kingfisher and Majestic, dam of Eurus. Of the first lot of foals sired by Blitzen, a half-dozen in number, all are owned by Robert Bradley, at Greenway Farm, and two of them, a colt and a filly, have each shown quarters in 0:23 1-5. Mr. Bradley thinks highly of the pair of youngsters, both of whom are out of mares, whose names I did not hear, owned at Greenway.

THE Executive Committee of the Western Passenger Association met to-day for the purpose of considering the commissions that are being paid in various parts of the association territory and in particular commissions on Northern Pacific Coast business. It was found that in some cases excessive commissions had been paid, but their existence was traceable to the fight between the American roads and the Canadian Pacific. It was decided, therefore, that the large commissions should be withdrawn wherever they have been in effect, and a resolution to this effect will be presented at the general meeting Thursday. The Southern Pacific has given notice that it will demand the following arbitraries between Portland and San Francisco and Los Angeles for the race meetings that are to be held on the Pacific Coast this summer: Between Portland and San Francisco, one way or round trip $12.50; between Portland and Los Angeles, one way $22; round trip, $31.—Chicago Dispatch April 12.

THE fillies Duplicate, Terrene, May Be So, and Factory Girl, in the Clay & Woodford stable, have been unsexed. Commenting on the fact the Turf, Field, and Farm says: "The unsexing of fillies for racing is rather an unusual practice, but the idea is a good one for several reasons. The chances are that, being relieved of their sexual troubles in the spring, they will train better and keep in better condition and be more reliable in races. Again, the use of the knife will relieve the breeding ranks of many weeds. The careers of the unsexed fillies will be watched with much interest, and if the operation should prove successful it ought to become popular, for there can be no doubt but that the judicious and more frequent use of the knife on both colts and fillies will eventually benefit the breeding interests, as well as improve the breed of horses. It is important to invent a name for unsexed fillies, in order that they may be identified and kept track of as such, and whenever the operation is performed the animals should be marked in some way to prevent their being disposed of as entire mares by unscrupulous traders into whose hands they may chance to fall."

MY old friend Cy Mulkey, so long superintendent of the Spreckels farm at Napa, has gone to the Klondyke in quest of gold, although nearing the lee shores of sixty-five years at least. So they go. But Mulkey is a good winner and very clever as a prospector, so he will be as apt to find rich diggings as anybody if the good ground is not all taken up on his arrival. Mulkey has had a varied life and, as he reached Oregon before the discovery of gold in this State, could write a highly interesting book if he once sat down to do so. He was in Boise City in 1861, and in Helena, Montana, in 1862, when the Vigilance Committee got after the criminals of that place and hanged seven of them in one afternoon from the flume, near what is now the Montana Central railroad depot. An eighth man sat on his coffin for more than an hour and was finally let go. Cy Mulkey's testimony was all that saved his life. That man is now a bookmaker and I see him every time I go to San Francisco. I do not care to mention names.—Capt. T. B. Merry in Los Angeles Phoenix.

THERE is no good reason why the mid-summer meeting of the California Jockey Club, at Agricultural Park, should not be an unqualified success in every particular. The main feature is that it is coming just in our most attractive season of all the year, in June, when the days are warm and the nights so cool that you can sleep with two blankets over you. Most people are aware of this fact but think it is as hot here as at Red Bluff at that period, which is not the case. And while most of the Eastern cracks will have returned to their native homes across the Rockies by that time, there will be very good sport for all that, for many of the horses will use this point as one of preparation for the circuit in Montana, which is really the harvest field for the whole coast so far as betting is concerned. I predict a really good meeting and, if it does not clear any money in actual figures on the profit side of the ledger, it will hold the game together for the California Jockey Club, which is about all Mr. Williams desires.—Los Angeles Phoenix.

AS we go to press arrangements have been made between the owners of Irvington Park and some business men in this city whose names we are not at liberty to mention yet, whereby a lease has been given on the Irvington track for a term of three years, for the purpose of holding race meetings. The parties leasing the track, we are pleased to announce, are of the right make-up to give good clean race meetings in the interest of sport, and not for speculative purposes. They inform us that the dates claimed July 2 to 9 and September 10 to 17 are satisfactory, and two good meetings will be given here on these dates. Work will be commenced on the track at once putting it into condition to work on. The grand stand, judges' stand, stables, etc., will be thoroughly renovated, and everything put in condition for a first-class meeting. Work on the spring program will have their attention at once, and horsemen can look for a liberal program very soon. We are requested to announce to all horsemen to send in a list of horses now in training or likely to be trained giving their record, so that purses can be arranged to suit the greatest number. Send this information to the Rural Spirit office and we will see that the proper person gets it. Don't delay in this matter, as the program must be gotten out at once. The meeting will be for runners, trotters and pacers.—North Pacific Rural Spirit, Portland, Or.

ALL persons who own horses for which they pay board at livery and feed stables will be interested in the recent proceedings of San Francisco liverymen, who are about to raise prices. At a meeting held over Bridge's stables Monday night preliminary steps were taken to carry out the programme arranged by what is known as the San Francisco Liverymen's Association. This involves a concerted movement to raise the prices of boarding horses from the prevailing rates of $15 and $25 a month to about $5 more on each class. Secretary Wagner of the Hay Dealers' Association and two or three dealers were uncommunicative regarding the purposes of the meeting, which was a conference between the liverymen and the hay dealers. At half a dozen stables and hay stores it was almost impossible to learn the purpose of the meeting and of another conference, which is called for next Friday night, but one who attended the meeting gave the following facts relative to the movement: "The liverymen are tired of boarding horses at a rate that does not pay," he said, "and we have decided to try to get all the liverymen in and raise the prices. We have asked the hay and feed dealers to refuse to sell, save at an advanced rate, to any person outside of our organization. If we can carry to this plan out we are all right, but if we fail it is almost a certainty that we cannot succeed in our purpose." It is understood that there are several liverymen who have refused to join the association, and that a number of persons who have hay for sale will also decline to join the movement.

THAT the opening of the metropolitan racing season is near at hand is indicated by the fact that so many of the first class jockeys are reporting for duty. Fred Taral is getting ready at Morris Park, and even at this early date can make 115 pounds with heavy clothes on. Johnny Lamle has reported for duty at M. F. Dwyer's stable. He will do the middleweight riding for the "white, gold tassel," as Simms will probably have to advance to the heavyweight brigade. But there will be plenty of riding for him, as the Jockey Club has raised the scale of weights so much. Hamilton, the "colored Archer," as he was once called, has made no engagements as yet, but will not lack mounts, as his skill in the saddle is acknowledged. He began riding horses at exercise yesterday morning at Sheepshead Bay. William Lakeland, who developed him, always claimed that he never had a better exercising lad than Hamilton. Marty Bergen has taken a cottage at Gravesend, and will be ready for work immediately. Bergen prefers not to accept any permanent engagement. He has a few horses of his own, and may do well with them. In the meanwhile little Jimmy Michael, the bicycle wonder, who is learning to ride race horses at Gravesend under Frank McCabe's tuition, is earning golden opinions from all of the trainers. Many a lad would have "had a swelled head" by his victories on the cinder path. But he is a modest, polite, attentive, obedient and hard working as the highest type of lads that have been produced by the admirable system in vogue in English racing stables. Tod Sloan may be expected back from California inside of a fortnight. Willie Simms may ride in the West for a week before reporting for duty at Gravesend. Tommy Burus, the New Orleans crack, will hardly be on before the close of the Memphis meeting.—N. Y. Advertiser.

The Right of Cattle Quarantine.

[BY J. T. FLYNN.]

The action of the Nevada authorities in enforcing the so-called quarantine law against the starving cattle, sheep and horses of California raises a question about how far one State may go in excluding the products of another, without violating the Federal provisions of inter-state trade.

That the sage brush borough has the right to exclude diseased cattle, is a thing that goes without saying, but its right to practice general exclusion, such as is contemplated in the present instance, is a thing that is at least open to question.

The mere fact that such a provision is inscribed upon the statute books of a commonwealth, which is by courtesy called a state, does not make it law. The handful of people who comprise that prize fighting political subdivision of the nation, have no powers unenjoyed by the other States of the Union. A defiance of public sentiment, such as they displayed, when they converted its burning sands into a bloody arena, must not be mistaken for a special constitutional right.

The fact that the people of the United States did not rise in righteous indignation against that insult to public decency, carries with it neither endorsement of the practice nor a surrender of its national control. Much as the foreign cattle syndicates which graze their herds upon public lands in that State would like to have it otherwise, the State of Nevada is still a part of the United States and subject to its laws. These laws provide for a free and uninterrupted traffic in cattle, just as well as they do in cotton fabrics or other articles of commerce.

A law to exclude the sale of the Bible in the State of Nevada on the ground that its perusal might discourage the licensed industry of prize-fighting, would be no more absurd than is the pretext that cattle coming from California may prove a health menace to the bovine product of that Senatorial dice box. A constitution so elastic in its provisions as this one seems to be is one that might well be taken under the wing of Federal authority.

A public sentiment that legalizes prize fighting and yet excludes from its public wastes the starving animals of unfortunate sister states, is one that needs disinfecting. Such a sentiment as that is one that might well to pause before driving their stock into such an atmosphere. It might be going from the frying-pan of a parching desert into the fire of hell.

But with all this the cattle and horse owners of California have a right to go there with their herds if they see fit to do so. That right may not come to them by statute, but it will find sanction in the thing which makes law—that is public sentiment. Humanity demands that the starving cattle and horses of California be given an opportunity to graze upon the public lands of Nevada; no law can silence that demand. The right to feed hungry animals is a law unto itself. Statutes can neither enlarge nor impair that law; it is one of nature's decrees.

Society may have successfully denied man the right of access to the earth, but it has not yet excluded from its public wastes the starving animals of unfortunate sister states, is one that needs disinfecting. Such a sentiment as that is one that might well tended that decree to the unreasoning element of the animal world. It may be said, therefore, that the earth still belongs to the lower order of God's creatures, and is subject to their needs. Not being blessed with an education these creatures are not supposed to be familiar with either the statutes of Nevada or the trespass notices of Uncle Sam. Grass is their God, they have a right to it wherever found.

This may be in the foreign foraging precincts of Nevada or it may be in the forest reserves of a nation that is about to plunge into war for humanity's sake, but that does not alter the fact that it is theirs by a right which cannot be nullified by statute. My advice to the horse owners and cattle owners of California who find themselves helpless, not as the result of negligence or lack of thrift, but by the will of the Creator, is to take their starving stock to unused pastures, regardless of statutes or anything else.

As the venal spirit which placed this quarantine law upon the statute books of Nevada will most likely find willing hands to execute it, I would suggest that the convoy wagons be well stocked with shotguns. There are times when sentiment rises above law. This, in my opinion, is one of those times.

If the United States is justified in breaking the barriers of international law in its fight against Spain on the broad ground of humanity, it occurs to me that an effort to feed the starving cattle of California would meet with public sanction even though that effort involved human life.

The sight of a few rude graves upon the borders of Nevada may not be a pleasant one to look upon, but it will be no worse than that of the San Joaquin valley strewn with the bones of helpless dumb animals, such as the present drought forebodes. A spirit that will not yield to the mute appeals such as are now being made, is one that should be met by force if necessary. This is a desperate remedy, but the conditions which suggest it are also desperate. The right to exclude diseased cattle is conceded, but the right to exclude all cattle should be resisted to the bitter end. The law under which it is proposed to exclude California cattle was passed many years ago when the Texas fever was raging. We have no knowledge of any subsequent investigation, and the Government reports, so far as can be seen, contain no account of a later declaration on the part of any officer that the fever still exists in the State.

Upon the representation of some interested parties a few years ago, the Agricultural Department removed the quarantine on the northern portion of the State; but, as will be seen from the map presented herewith, the result has been to quarantine one-half the State against the other. This is clearly an invasion of State rights, and would not stand the test of judicial scrutiny.

Coach Horses.

At a notable gathering of horsemen held in Chicago last week an interesting paper was read by Mr. M. W. Dunham, who is by all odds the best known breeder of coach horses in the United States, made an excellent talk and greatly impressed his hearers. Mr. Dunham has had thirty years experience as a breeder, and is at all times in close touch with the markets of the world. This fact gives additional interest to his remarks. His enormous holding of pure-bred horses—nearly 600 in all—on his Illinois farm prove that he is rarely skillful as a breeder, and his dicta are entitled to the attention of the breeders generally. He said:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN: I will not trench upon your time further than is necessary to state a few facts that seem to me to be potential factors in the fast and future success of horse breeding in this country. We are credited in the old world with being very skillful breeders; they do not quite understand how it is so, but the arguments of our success, as demonstrated by the quality of American bred horses now found in every European country, seems unanswerable. I believe, however, notwithstanding our triumphs in the markets, and upon the race-courses of the world, there is a consciousness among our breeders that the reputation we enjoy is not wholly legitimate, when judged by the crucial standard of well defined purposes accomplished with a reasonable degree of certainty. That we are conscious of many errors (for which we are paying a penalty) and the fact that we are not wholly satisfied with our greatest achievements, and that we have risen superior to the chastening of untold failures is a sure guarantee of continuous progress.

No people have ever been called upon to meet such extraordinary conditions, to face so many difficult problems of heredity, as the horse breeders of America have been forced to do during the last fifty years.

For a long time the thoroughbred was regarded as the only ameliorating agent worthy of consideration. Then the trotter entered the field in hot competition for popular favor, and to add to the complexity of the situation, and more completely bewildered our breeders, demand for horses of greater weight than either the thoroughbred or the trotter could supply, was precipitated upon us by a new order of things. To supply these wants we were driven by necessity to look to those countries where breeds of greater weight had been developed.

The native born Americans sought their supply in France, where they found, evolved and perfected, a breed of horses of great weight, docile, active and enduring beyond all other breeds of equal size—horses in every way adapted to the requirements of a people of sanguine temperament like our own. Following these importations came draft horses of every breed. The efforts of all progressive breeders centered solely in the selection of stock of the highest physical qualities and purest lineage; but urgent demand for large horses presented a field too attractive to long remain unoccupied by the speculator. This opportunity for commercial gain was quickly seized by people of all countries possessing established draft breeds. A few good animals were brought to our shores by them, but mostly those of the kind that would yield the largest margin of profit with the smallest possible outlay. As our people were not familiar with the qualities of the different breeds the widest opportunities for mistakes and imposition prevailed. In the introduction of coach horses almost exactly the same conditions obtained.

When we understand the unfortunate circumstances under which our breeders have been placed, we are astonished that the results were not infinitely worse than they have proved. The fact that they are not worse, and will not continue, is due wholly to the American character which quickly rejects everything that does not meet the demands of its necessity. The bitter lesson of the past has been so well learned that the old conditions cannot prevail. The fittest have survived and to-day, taking counsel of the past, our breeders should demand only the best. The greatest promise for the future lies in the fact that we do recognize our weakness from the scientific breeders' standpoint.

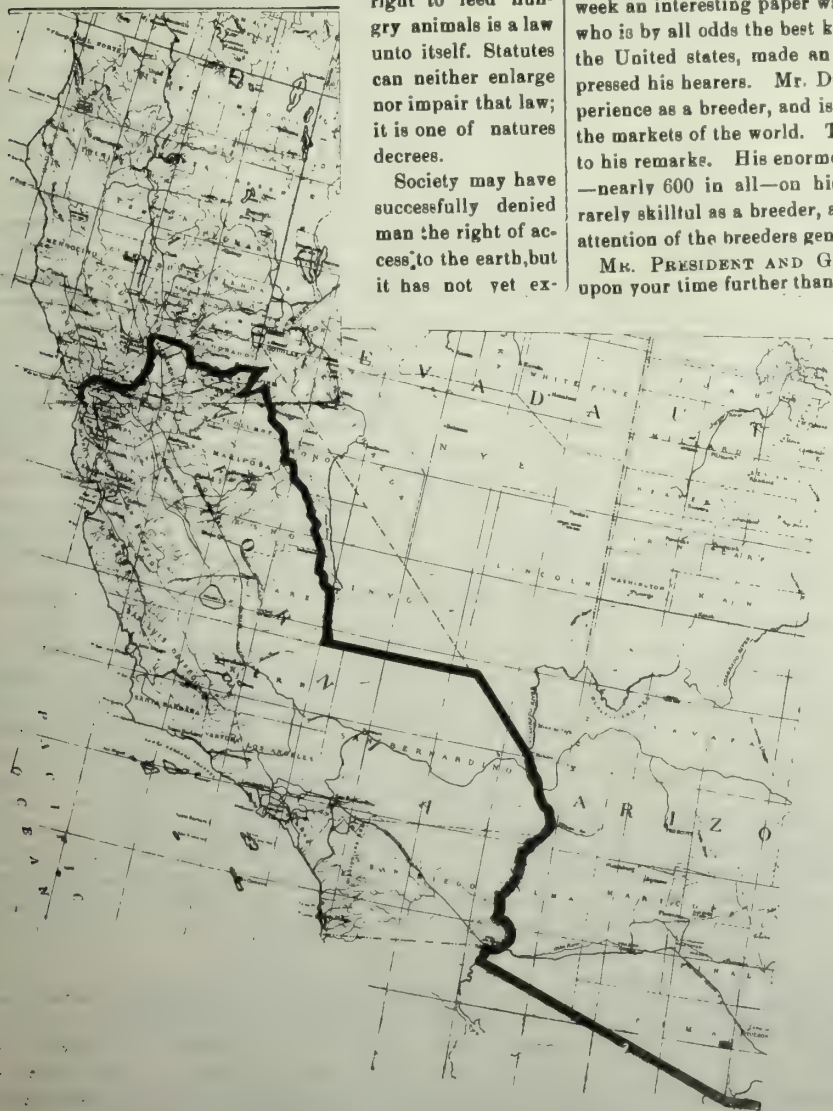

The demand of the export trade is to day the handwriting on the wall that must be accepted understandingly by the man who wishes to succeed in the breeding of horses. This trade absorbs nearly every kind and class of horse that is demanded for domestic use, and insures remunerative prices to every producer who will put himself in a position to supply the sorts wanted. It is the breeders' index, which if intelligently consulted, will prove an unerring guide. I cannot impress these facts too strongly on our people, no matter in what line of horse breeding they are engaged.

The typical carriage horse must remain the highest in price, because in no country is there, without governmental supervision, any well directed popular effort made to produce him. England, the country to which we have been taught to look up to as breeding the highest class of these horses, has in reality always been the largest importer of them. Before the exportation of American horses began, James Irvine Lupton, a prominent British authority on the horse, stated that half the carriage horses in London emanated from foreign sources, and that continental countries would eventually produce better general utility horses than the United Kingdom.

In America, with the development of our cities and the accumulation of wealth by our people, the demand for the carriage horse became active. No well directed attempt had been made to breed this horse systematically, but of the great number of all sorts produced, enough were for a time found to meet the domestic demand. As soon as the foreigners saw that this kind of horse could be procured in America, they began bidding for the offerings, and it was noticeable at once that they paid the largest price for these animals which most closely approached the model universally accepted for carriage use. The question, "How shall we obtain the best results in breeding horses for this use?" must be answered in this way. We must give them the model they seek, and the only way we can do this is by ingrafting on our stock the form and characteristics of the best foreign breeds. We must seek the carriage horse of greatest beauty, greatest substance, greatest endurance, highest type, best action and as much speed as is compatible with the possessions of all these desired qualities in large measure. This points to the selection of the French Coacher, and particularly of the trotting families of that breed, to intermingle with our own trotting mares, and in this cross I firmly believe we shall find the best and highest priced carriage horses in the world.

Under the wise directions of government officials and aided by enormous grants of money, the French breeders have raised on a thoroughbred foundation a trotting superstructure which compares favorably with our own. These government grants being available year after year and unaffected by general financial conditions, the type of the French Coach horse has been continually improved and the passage of wise laws has precluded the possibility of retrogression. The race course has been used, not as the mere means to sport and speculation, but to separate the good from the bad, to secure the survival of the fittest, to mark those animals which should be chosen to perpetuate the breed. Unsexed animals are not eligible to compare in races endowed by the government, and horses or mares standing under 15½ hands are arbitrarily debarred from winning government money, as being undersized and unworthy, no matter how great their speed. Again, take for instance the conditions of the great futurity trotting race of France, the Prix des Conselles Generals. These conditions provide that any horse entered in the race must be sold to the government at the close of his three-year-old career at the stated price of $4,000. Those animals that prove themselves worthy of places in the government studs are then bought and retired in the full possession of all their constitutional vigor and before excessive campaigning on the race-course has sapped their vitality. Such of these as are not bought by the government are so heavily handicapped in their older form as to render them unsatisfactory as racing tools. This sifting process makes way perpetually for younger generations and marks the utilization of the track as a means to the improvement of the breed above.

This has been going on for years and years. What are the results? A breed of magnificent horses of great size, beauty of conformation, endurance, high action and phenomenal speed considering the nature of the tracks over which they are raced. They must go on the turf or in the loose sandy soil, the billiard table track as we see it being unknown in France. This going has given these horses the high folding action so much admired in the carriage horse, and the selection of the best individuals as breeders has evolved and developed, and is still improving, the beautiful type, which here we seldom see, and which has been in this country produced not by design but by accident; a type that fills with money the pockets of the breeders the world over.

The French trotting racing so liberally endowed by the government is established on a firm and secure basis. The get of the leading French sire of trotters, Fushsia, has, during the past few years, won more money in races than the get of any American stallion has in this country, and on the grass tracks of France the French stallion Kepi has established a record which the best of our American horses have never been able to equal on French soil. These are results of which the French people may well be proud, and in their achievement they have placed ready to our hands the material with which we may, by intermingling it with our own, proceed to the production of the finest carriage horses ever known—horses that will dominate the markets of the world.

Our New York Letter.

NEW YORK, April 8, 1898.

James A. Murphy has matched his mare Emily for $2,500 against Mr. Hubinger's mare Margaret. He formerly offered to match his pacer Guinette, 2:05, against any pacer except Joe Patchen; this challenge was meant for Frank Agan, but Mr. Hubinger did not come forward. E. R. Bowne, representing John R. Gentry, was next heard from and after much negotiating the following matches were arranged: Mr. Bowne backs John R. Gentry against Guinette for three matches $2,500 each, and a side bet of $2,500 as to which wins the majority of the races. The events are to take place between February 1st and October 15th.

A great deal of interest is being manifested over the new rule which excludes hoppers from the tracks after this season. The rule should go into effect at once. Hoppers are not only an eye-sore, but a very dangerous device; how it "improves the breed of horses" to fasten their legs together is a question. Any one who witnessed the accident at Fleetwood three years ago with El Rami and can advocate hoppers, must have a taste for railway collisions and steam boiler explosions.

Goshen, Orange county, will have races on Decoration Day.

Old Spofford, 2:18½, who won the Charter Oak Stake ten years ago, is now training in Germany. He is now eighteen.

Ed. S. Hedges of W. B. Fasig & Co. is out again. He was totally blind and partially paralyzed for several weeks.

The Queens County Horse Show is announced for May 12th, 13th and 14th. The proceeds are always donated to the Nassau Hospital.

The coaching season has opened. The coach "Good Times" leaves the Waldorf-Astoria for Westchester county every other day in the week. The distance covered is 19 miles, rate of speed 7½ miles per hour, including stops. Seventeen horses are used. The "Pioneer" will make daily trips from the Holland House to Irvington-on-the-Hudson.

The sale of Director for $1,275 is regarded as small, but it must be remembered he is twenty-one years old. Red Wilkes brought $600. He is twenty-four years old. Both are "has beens." Director Moore, four years, half-brother to Nancy Hanks, brought $1,225.

This being Holy Week the theaters were not, as a rule, crowded.

Mrs. Fisk has been appearing as Tess at the Fifth Avenue and has good houses, which she well deserves. The play is excellent and her acting, particularly in the last two acts, is grand.

John Drew has for very good reasons withdrawn "One Summer's Day" from Wallick's. The public will heartily endorse his action. Mr. Drew is worthy a very much better production.

Mr. Crane with this week ends "A Virginia Courtship" at the Knickerbocker. While this play has had quite an extended run, it cannot be classed as more than ordinary work.

"The Highwayman" still holds its possession of the stage at Broadway, and very properly.

The Castle Square Company have been giving a series of operas this winter at the American, and have drawn good houses during the entire season. The choruses are exceptionally excellent. They have revived "Pinafore" and "The Mikado."

Henry Miller is still laboring with The Master at the Garden. He repeated his system of obtaining free advertising a few evenings since, by calling the attention of his audience of about 200 to the occupants of a box who found it impossible to find any interest in the play and his play, and who mistook his imaginary goat for comedy. It appears it was not intended to be laughed at and so the mirth it provoked was out of place. It was, however, very funny, and although Mr. Miller does not appear to be aware of the fact, he is a good comedian, nevertheless, but he must not be laughed at unless a stage speech between his lines is desired, in which one can readily distinguish the ideal Master.

Buffalo Bill with his Wild West Show is filling the big Madison Square Garden. The introduction of the wounded Cuban patriots, is the leading feature, who of course are every evening received with shouts of applause.

The only new play this week was An Old Coat, at the Bijou, it did not prove a great hit, but was as well spoken of as it deserved from the fact that the author is an officer of the United States Navy, a very popular organization these days.

The Olympia Amusement Company has a capital of $50,000; this amount should keep Hammerstein going for a week at least.

Thomas A. Edison restrained the use of the pictures in the Play at Daly's Theater. A license is now paid.

James J. Corbett has obtained a judgment for $6,472, against the Kinetoscope Company for royalties due him. He has received $13,347. The pictures were of himself and Peter Courtney who sparred with him in December, 1894, and had their pictures "took."

Yousouf, the Terrible Turk and Roerber are to have another bout in wrestling in this city, either April 30 or May 7. At the recent contest between these men at Madison Square Garden the Turk had matters all his own way, and in a fit of anger threw Roerber off the stage.

The Four Weeks' Meeting.

It is the duty of every owner and trainer of harness horses in California to carefully study the advertisement of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association published in this issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, and make just as many entries in the classes there enumerated as he considers he has by any reasonable chance a possibility of winning. Under the present condition of things in California this is a similar case to the kodak maker who has aptly said, "You push the button and we do the rest." If the owners and trainers will only make the entries, the Association and the public will "do the rest," and make the meeting a success. The dash system inaugurated by the Breeders Association, gives every one a chance to win money. Horses can be started every day in the week or several times in one day, as the owner elects, thus increasing materially the opportunities of winning and making training and racing profitable. We would advise the entering of horses in every class to which they are eligible within ten seconds of their record in the low classes, and in the faster classes name your horse in every event within five seconds of his record. The very small entrance fee will not be felt, and who can tell but his horse will get first money in the race where he least expects it. There are a few changes in the advertisement, as printed this week—only in the arrangement, however—and every horseman should study it most carefully. The four weeks' meeting to be given at Oakland will put the harness horse more conspicuously before the public than ever, and we miss our guess if the meeting does not create a lively demand for track and road trotters and pacers, exceeding anything that has been seen in this State for years. The mere naming of a horse in a race is an advertisement well worth the cost, provided the horse is for sale, and the astute owner of harness horses will not let an opportunity of this kind pass him by.

Plenty of Harness Racing.

Owners of trotters and pacers need have no fear that the season will be a limited one in California. There will be racing galore—good racing and plenty of it, and those who have not begun to train their horses should lose no time in getting to work. The P. C. T. H. B. A. will open the season with a meeting extending over four weeks. Santa Rosa is almost certain to hold a meeting, and Napa, Woodland, and Willows may take a week each. The State Fair will last two weeks, Stockton will follow with a week, and San Jose with another. Then comes Los Angeles and Santa Ana and perhaps a few more places not heard from. There is certain to be twelve weeks of trotting and pacing on the regular circuit this year and it is more than likely that fifteen weeks will be occupied. As a well-known horseman remarked to us the other day—"If it rains and crops are fair, everybody will attend the meetings, and if it is a dry season they'll have to go as there will be nothing else to do. The time for every horseman to get in and help is now. Make all the entries you possibly can, and the meetings will be held and the purses paid. Our word for it the attendance will be double that of last year."

American Stock Being Depleted.

In answer to the inquiry of a reader: "Where do all the animals sold at the various New York sales go to?" will say that a large per cent. of the choicest trotting-bred animals find a home in Europe, and the steady depletion of such stock will be felt in this country very shortly. Many of our purest gaited and fastest stallions are already upon the continent and the foreign buyers are getting prices on a majority of those remaining in the United States. Only a short time since Mr. Harriman, owner of Stamboui, was asked to place a price on that high-class stallion."

PROF. H. W. HAND, of Sacramento, has a three-year-old filly by Tom Benton that paced the first quarter she was ever driven in 40 seconds.

The Blood Breeds On.

While it is true that every trotting-bred horse is not a trotter of "high degree," it is equally certain that the trotting instinct is not entirely lost, even if a stallion fails to trot fast or sire fast performers. The influence of a well-bred stallion is not confined to a single generation, and a speed inheritance may remain wholly or partially dormant in the immediate descendants, but will certainly manifest its prepotence in later generations. The same rule may be applied to broodmares. A long list of trotting-bred stallions can be printed, should occasion require, that, while bred in producing and performing lines, have failed to sire a standard performer; yet the added years find their sons or grandsons, their daughters or granddaughters, recorded in the Year Book as producers of 2:30 trotters.

Buena Vista Ranch Foals of 1898.

STOCKTON, CAL., April 14, 1898.

Bay filly, with three white feet, by Rear Guard—Donna Juana, by Prince of Norfolk, foaled February 12th.

Sorrel filly, with left fore foot white, by Rear Guard—Sally Hampton, by Boote, foaled February 26th.

Bay filly, with two white hind feet and star in forehead, by Rear Guard—Miss Garvin, by Fellowcharm, foaled March 26th.

Bay colt, with left fore leg and left hind leg white and strip in face, by Rear Guard—Blue Bonnet, by Joe Hooker, foaled March 18th.

Bay or brown filly, with star in forehead, by Rear Guard—Rachel, by Joe Daniels, foaled March 19th.

G. W. TRAHEN.

JAMES M. MURPHY has outlined his plan of campaign for the champion pacer Star Pointer, 1:59½. The horse will not be started until July and probably not before the opening of the Grand Circuit July 18th. His owner says he will not consider any proposition to race the stallion, but will start him against time with a view to still further beating the 2:00 mark. Toward the end of the season Star Pointer will make an attempt to lower the wagon record of 2:04½ held by the gallant black stallion Joe Patchen. Then he will start to test Direct's champion record of 2:06, to high wheel sulley, and will wind up his campaign by going two miles against the champion record of Chehalis, 4:19½, made last year. Murphy is confident that Star Pointer can beat the two mile mark at least ten seconds, and he even hopes that the king of pacers may go the distance in 4:08 or better. If the big son of Brown Hal places to his credit these champion records, he will probably be retired to the stud. Although he is only nine years old, Star Pointer is the sire of the pacers Queen Pointer, 2:20½, and Clay Pointer, 2:23½, and it is said that half a dozen more of his get will be out on the turf this year.

A SHORT time ago, says the Vallejo Chronicle, a truckman was hired to haul away the body of an old mare belonging to the terra cotta company, which had been a faithful beast up to the time of its death. The moment he set his eyes on the animal he recognized it as once belonging to Higson, having been foaled in April of 1869. When two years old she was weanied, and as is the custom, a small coin, a ten cent piece, was dropped inside of the skin to keep it free. There it stayed for exactly 27 years, until the teamster, wanting to be sure of his identification of the animal, cut into the shoulder and found it securely imbedded in the flesh. The coin is slightly tarnished, but is in excellent condition and bears date of 1842. From this mare six of the finest draft horses in the State have been raised and are now the property of John Minihan, of Vallejo.

On March 21st, the stallion Boyets trotted four miles in a race in Russia in 10:07½. This performance lowers all records for the distance, not only in Europe, but America. The stallion is Orloff-bred, and eight years of age, and but once has he been beaten. In this race he earned $2,500 and won three gold medals. The race record for four miles in America is 11:05, made by Lady Dooley, a brown mare by Black Hawk.

Sulky Notes.

THE hopped horse is not likely to sire good road horses.

STAR POINTER paced 22 heats better than 2:06 last year.

THERE are 1630 descendants of Geo. Wilkes in the 2:30 list.

THE new Year Book can be had at this office. The price is $3.

FROM January 1st to April 1st, 7,000 horses were shipped abroad.

CALIFORNIA owners make twenty-two entries in the Kentucky Futurity.

BREED your best mares this year and mate them with the best stallions within reach.

MANY choice stallions are kept by the Russian Government whose services are free to all.

SENATOR A, 2:10, goes to the German Empire, having been sold to a government representative for $5,000.

TWO weeks from to-day is the date set for the racing and trotting matinee at Pleasanton. Don't miss it.

THE veteran Chas. Marvin will campaign a number of horses for Miller & Sibley in the East this year.

PALO ALTO Stock Farm has made ten entries in the "Horse Review" subscription purse of $6,000 for foals of 1898.

THERE is plenty of good pasturage at J. H. White's stock farm at Lakeville, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding.

THERE are not less than one thousand horses being trained as trotters and pacers in Fayette County, Kentucky, of which Lexington is the county seat.

DAY BELL by Palo Alto out of Beautiful Balls, called by some horsemen the best bred trotter in America, died at New Haven, Conn., April 5th.

A YOLO county farmer who is short on feed closed out his entire lot of weanling mules amounting to fifteen head, one day this week for $30 per head.

A MCKINNEY yearling out of a Steinway mare is one of the sweetest goers on the Salinas track and gives promise of being one of the wonders of next year.

THE regular meeting of the Board of Appeals of the American Trotting Association will be held Tuesday, May 3d, at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago.

DIRECTOR BELL, a brown colt, three years old, by Director out of Waiting Maid, by Belle Boy, was sold at the Cloverdale sale for $400, and the next day was resold for $1,000.

SEVENTY-TWO performers can read their title clear to the 2:10 list. Alx, 2:03½, is credited with 34 heats in 2:10 or better, Azote, 2:04½, with 28, and Directum, 2:05½, with 19.

SAM HOY is jogging quite a string of horses on his track at Winters. He has Stanford Medium among them and he should be a winner in the dash races at Oakland in June and July.

THE first large auction sale of American horses took place in Berlin two weeks ago. Three hundred horses were disposed of in eighty minutes. The price for drivers averaged $200.

THAT handsome little mare Margaret S, 2:12½, by Director, is twelve years old, but she sold for $1,025 at the Cloverdale sale. This is a pretty fair price for a mare that is past track service.

WHAT'S in a name? Well, one of the Pleasanton papers spells Andy McDowell's great horse Caryle Carne's name "Carikarney's." A prophet is not without honor save in his own country.

GOOD horses are in demand in spite of the dryness of the season and the high price of hay. A man who breeds his good mares to good stallions is certain of a good profit on the investment.

HENRY HELLMAN will train the game trotting mare May B, 2:19½, at Hollister this year. She is by Altoona, out of a mare by Wapsie, and is certain to beat 2:10 this year if no accidents happen.

THE meeting to be given by the Alameda Driving Association, May 30th, will be one of the best ever held on that splendid track. Some of the fastest horses in the State will compete in the races.

S. H. CRANE, of Modesto, has one of the handsomest young stallions in the State. He is by Diablo out of Electress, 2:27, by Elector, second dam by Lodi, and will make a season in Merced county this year.

If you have a handsome horse that does not show sufficient speed to make a track horse or a fast roadster, teach him to step high and put on all the style he is capable of and you will get a good price for him.

THE good roads crusade goes on and every man who owns a horse or enjoys riding or driving one should enlist in the movement. Good roads mean not only pleasure but profit for everybody who moves about.

SEARCHLIGHT, Anaconda, Diablo, Dione, Lena N., Caryle Carne, Azote, Flying Jib, Miss Margaret and many other champions and ex-champions will be shown at the Pleasanton track on the fifth day, April 30th.

THE average for the seventy-seven head of trotting-bred horses sold by the Cloverdell Farm in Pennsylvania, April 6th, was $360 50, which certainly is good evidence that the light harness horse is still worth something.

W. WOOD, 2:07, has been shipped to Honolulu, where he will be raced. Quite a number of fast trotters and pacers from California are now owned on the Islands, and the harness horses are very popular with the sugar growers.

ADBELE, 2:23, the champion yearling, sold at the recent Palo Alto sale, and now the property of W. E. Spier of Glen Falls, New York, will be trained for a new record this year and is certain to get one many seconds lower than his present mark.

As shown by the new Palo Alto catalogue Electioneer has twelve with records below 2:15, thirty-four with record between 2:15 and 2:20, forty-six from 2:20 to 2:25, and seventy-four between 2:25 and 2:30, or a grand total of 166 on the list.

DAGHESTAN, the handsome young son of Stamboul, bred by W. S. Hobart and driven to his record by Richard Harvey at Los Angeles, is now in Ohio, where he is doing stud duty. His colts are said to be models of beauty and very fast at the trot.

THE people of Bodega Bay, Sonoma county, will give trotting and running races for local horses over the track at that place April 19th. A novelty of the day's programme will be a trotting race for horses over fifteen years of age. The old fellows will only be required to go half-mile heats.

STEMWINDER, the dam of Directum, 2:05½, has a filly a month old by the great McKinney, 2:11½, and the little gal is causing a lot of talk over in Alameda county. Young as she is she trots about with all the vim and fire of a trotter out for the money in a hotly contested race. But then how can she help it, with the blood she carries in her veins?

SOME of the best mares in Yolo county are being bred to Falrose this year. This son of Fallis is attracting lots of attention in that locality on account of his size and style. There is no county in the State where the farmers drive better looking horses to their buggies than in Yolo.

GUINETTI 2:05, and John R. Gentry 2:00½ have been matched for $20,000. The races will come off between September 1st and October 15th this year, over some track to be hereafter selected. There are to be three races for $2,500 a side each, the winner of the two to take an extra bonus of $5,000.

In one-half the people go to Pleasanton on the 20th inst that have expressed that intention, the beautiful little town will have a greater population that day than it ever dreamed of in the boom days, and the track where world's champions have been trained will have to hang out the traditional "standing room only!"

OTHER things being equal a large horse will sell for a better price than a small one, but a handsome, compactly built 15 hand horse will outsell the homely brute of 17 hands every time. Never breed to big slab-sided horse with a homely head even though he be as big as a mountain and can show a two minute clip.

ONE of the finest lot of yearlings ever seen is now at the Woodland race track. They are all by Mr. A. B. Rodman's horse Gold Rose, and out of well bred mares. There are fifteen of the youngsters and not a poor one in the lot. For size, style and good looks they will compare favorably with the get of any horse in the State.

WE are glad to note a marked improvement in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, which has passed into the control of Mr. Judson K. Moore, formerly of this State. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, since its foundation by Jos. Cairn Simpson, has been one of the best of turf papers, and it now would seem to be better than ever.—New York Trotter and Pacer.

THE highest prices on the last day of the Woodward and Shanklin sale, April 1, were $340, for Wiltchrist, br. h., by Wilton—Christine, by Hambrino, and $325 for John H., br. g., by Simmons—Trimmer Girl, by Trimmer. The four days' sale netted $27,720, an average of $179 per head, which is very fair, since the top price was $800 for Berkshire Chimes.

HOW WOULD it be if the managers of trotting meetings should take a leaf out of the running horse book and refuse the entry of a notoriously bad actor—one whose specialty seems to be to delay starts rather than to win races? Sometimes we have seen good horses worried well-nigh to death by some miserable brute not worth the powder and lead to blow him up.

THERE should be the largest entry list in the history of the P. C. T. H. B. A. for the meeting which begins at Oakland track June 25th. Look over the programme for the first two weeks, as published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN and send in as many entries as you possibly can to Secretary Kelly. If the horsemen will only make the entries the Association and the public will do the rest.

HENRY FLEISCHMANN, who has for several years lived in New York, while engaged in purchasing American trotters for the European market, has paid $6,000 for Derby Princess 2:08½, the daughter of Chas. Derby and Princess by Administrator. Mr. John T. Boyd, owner of the Oakwood Stock Farm in this State, who bred this mare will be pleased to know of this sale, though he parted with the mare for much less money.

LOUIS SCHAFFER, of Oakland, reports that his stallions, Arthur L., 2:15, and Toots, both by Direct out of Nelly, by Geo. M. Patchen Jr., are making a good season in Yolo county. A good class of mares have been bred to both these horses and under the management of Dave Herspring they look in the very finest fettle. By the way, Mr. Herspring will probably have a string of trotters and pacers on the circuit this year.

MAJ. P. P. JOHNSTON, President of the National Trotting Association, has long been a terror to the "sharks" that occasionally infest the trotting turf, and now the report comes that while on a fishing excursion at Jacksonville, Florida, recently he landed a shark over twelve feet in length.

A HORSEMAN says he has cured many horses from forging by lengthening the heels of his hind shoes three-quarters of an inch for two or three weeks, the explanation being that the extra length having regard to the way the hind foot is delivered brings the foot down a moment sooner than it would otherwise touch the ground. Horses forge oftener from over-propulsion of the hind feet than from slowness in lifting the front feet.

THE State Agricultural Society's Colt Stakes for trotters and pacers close May 2d. They are for two and three-year-olds and will be valuable. It only takes $5 to name a two-year-old and $10 to enter a three-year-old. The Stanford Stakes for foals of 1897 to be trotted in 1900 will also close May 2d. This will be worth a big sum to the winner, and breeders and owners cannot afford to let it pass without making one or more entries.

GEO. T. BECKERS, owner of Zombro 2:11, is booking many excellent mares to his great young horse this year. Mr. Todhunter, the well-known horseman of Yolo county has just booked five mares to Zombro. Whisper, by Almont—Lightning, the dam of Zombro, was bred to Stam B. 2:11½, this week. Mr. M. A. Murphy of Colton, Cal., was offered and refused $800 for two yearlings by Zombro. The offer was made by C. A. Winship of Los Angeles.

ECHORA, 2:23½, by Echo, dam the Young Mare, by Jack Hawkins, was sold at the dispersal sale of the Cloverdell Farm in Pennsylvania for $80. Echora was foaled at Los Angeles in 1872, got her record at Stockton in 1882, and is the dam of Direct, 2:05½. She is past the age of usefulness, being 26 years of age. Mr. Moore, the owner of Cloverdell Farm, paid a big price for this mare, but she never produced another standard performer and failed to enter the list of great broodmares.

"FARMER" BUNCH evidently intends to breed a 2:10 trotter. He has sent to Sacramento to be bred to Zombro, 2:11, he by McKinney, 2:11½, the black mare Merle M., 2:25, sired by Boodle, 2:12½ (sire of Ethel Downs, 2:10) Boodle by Strenger (son of Goldsmith Maid, 2:14 and sire of Colonel Kuser, 2:11½) the dam of Merle M., 2:25, was by Junio, 2:22 (sire of Athanasio, 2:10). Junio was sired by Electioneer (sire of Arion, 2:07½). The second dam of Merle M. was Kitty Simmons by Lodi, and third dam was by Owen Dale (son of Williamson's Belmont). If Brother Bunch does not get a stake winner we will miss our guess.

At the Detroit Driving Club's coming horse show, which will be held some time about April 10, a new feature will be tandem driving, as it was originally planned. In England in the early days of the tandems the traces on the leaders were rarely taut, the wheel horse doing all the work, except in hill climbing. The leader was a hunter, and after the drive he was unhooked, saddled, and used in following the hounds. At the April show there will be a class for such turnouts. The tandem team will count a certain percentage, and then the leader will be saddled and ridden over the hurdles, this also counting. Many of the clubmen of Detroit are schooling their hunters to lead tandems, and the management anticipates much contention in this class.

"THE government's scheme," said Gil Curry, recently discussing racing in Austria, "and it is an admirable one for everybody except the American breeder, is to buy up first-class stallions and stand them in different parts of the country for a nominal service fee. This has been tried already on a small scale, and at has worked splendidly. As a rule the Austrian horsemen breed their Hungarian and Orloff mares to the American stallion, and they get a very good animal. He has the stamina and endurance that belongs to horses bred on the bleak Russian steppes and not a little of the speed of the American trotter. This combination animal would not be of much service on an American track, but he answers all the requirements for racing in the Austro-Hungarian Empire."

THE average cost of carrying a member on the rolls of the National Trotting Association, says the Turf, Field, and Farm, is $19.64, and yet some members are taken at $10 each, and others at $15 each. If the treasurer had to rely upon the support of minor tracks instead of upon those who pay a membership fee in excess of the average cost, he would soon get out of business. His accumulated funds would soon disappear and then a visit from the sheriff would be in order. The National Trotting Association will really be strengthened by the withdrawal of the weaker associations. When these threaten to secede, they take steps to cripple themselves more than the parent association. It is desirable to keep them on the roll for the advancement of the cause discipline, but it is a mistake to throw dignity and principle to the winds for the sole purpose of appeasing them. It is about time to explode the fiction that an excessive membership list is an evidence of strength. Real strength springs from quality of membership.

DOWN in Alabama, the well known trainer and driver, Ed Geers, has introduced a road grader, the first ever seen in that locality, and with the aid of the machine and six mules he has just put several miles of public road in excellent condition for speeding and working harness horses. Here in California a wonderful improvement can be made in the country dirt road by the aid of an ordinary race track wooden scraper. In the spring of the year, when the roads first begin to dry, the ruts can be entirely obliterated and the road left smooth by running the scraper over it. Then if the operation is repeated daily or even weekly the road will remain in fair condition. The reason is that by obliterating the ruts or tire tracks the teams do not all travel in the same path as is the case when the tracks are allowed to remain uncovered, and the road is not cut up. The writer kept an ordinary dirt road in front of a sixty foot country town lot smooth and comparatively free from dust by simply smoothing it over twice a week with the back of an ordinary garden rake, and this for an entire summer, although the road was deeply rutted on either side. If the road overseers in California would smooth out the ruts and ridges once a week even, a vast improvement would be made in the roads at small expense.

The Wonderful Speed Sustaining Elixir.

(Western Horseman, July 12, 1895.)

It is now little less than one month since the Speed Sustaining Elixir was first placed upon the market, and in that time enough demonstrations have been made in its behalf to fully and permanently place it in high favor with horsemen. Its work on the sixteen-year-old gelding Five Fly, at Bowling Green, is in itself an endorsement of the Elixir. Five Fly is by old Blue Bull 75, is a new member of the 2:30 list, and was trotting in the 2:40 class. He won his race in 2:27, 2:27 and 2:27. "Pop" Lemon says the Elixir helped the old fellow.

BOWLING GREEN, O., June 24, 1895.

SPEED SUSTAINING ELIXIR CO., INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
 Gentlemen—I used your Speed Sustaining Elixir on my horse Five Fly during the progress of the 2:40 trot at Lima, O., last week, and take pleasure in saying it does all you claim for it, and I shall continue to use it in all my races.
 Yours, etc., J. M. LEMON.

Office of Lesh Stock Farm, Home of "Online."

GOSHEN, Ind., Nov. 19, 1894.

SPOHN MEDICAL CO.—Gentlemen—I am not in the habit of recommending proprietary remedies, but when I know an article possesses merit, am free in endorsing its efficacy, especially when it may be of great benefit to thousands of stock owners in this country. Of such is Spohn's Catarrhal and Cough Cure as a remedy for distemper and catarrhal affections of the horse, and as a conditioner I consider it invaluable. We have used it with pronounced success and cheerfully recommend it for all you claim it.

Yours, etc., JOSEPH H. LESH.
 (Online 2:04, Sallie Clunker 2:13; former home of Ontario 2:07, and others.)

Used Successfully.

WEST POINT, TENN., April 14, 1897.

I bought a bottle of Gombault's Caustic Balm two years ago for a spavined horse. I cured him without any trouble. Have since cured a horse of poll evil. * * * * *

E. W. GRAVES.

PEIXOTTO, winner of the six-furlong race April 14th, by a block, is eligible to be registered with The Jockey Club, under the rule, which reads: "Only horses are eligible to registry under this rule which have either five uncontaminated thoroughbred crosses, or which authentically trace through to animals recorded in the first six volumes of the American Stud Book," etc. As Peixotto traces on the dam's side of the house to Fanny Howard, by Illinois Medoc, registered in Volume I of the American Stud Book, it makes no difference if Veto, the sire of the dam of Tyre's Veto, was begotten by an Indian pony, and there's no getting around that. The Missouri Veto was probably well bred, though. The making of this point will allow the registration of very making horses that we know of, for Fanny Howard has many descendants in this part of the world.

A BUTTE, MONT., special to the Chronicle reads: "The already long list of stake events for the Butte and Anaconda meeting has been increased by a stake announced by Manager Tipton to-day and christened Labor Day Handicap. Its guaranteed value is $5,000, and it will be run at Anaconda on Labor Day. It is for three-year-olds and upward, and the distance is a mile and a quarter. It will be divided, $4,000 to the first, $700 to the second, and $300 to the third horse. Tipton, who has just returned from a trip to California in the interests of the Butte and Anaconda meetings, which will continue for fifty-eight days.

THE Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern line, with its daily service of through Pullman and Tourist Sleeping Cars, to all Eastern points, and all meals served "a la carte" in dining cars, offers "comforts in travel" nowhere reached in a higher degree of perfection. Passengers leaving San Francisco on the 6 P. M. train arrive in Chicago in 3½ days, and avoid the necessity of changing cars en route. For tickets and sleeping car reservations call on or address R. R. Ritchie, General Agent, No. 2 New Montgomery street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco, Cal.

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F.—Dear Sir: Please send me another bottle of ABSORBINE. Your medicine does all you claim for it. Respectfully,
 J. S. SOHN, Kansas City, Mo.

"THE SPORTING GENTLEMAN." The Sportsman would be a better title in this country. "Sporting has an entirely different significance in this country from what was awarded in England. As will be shown from the article copied the sporting gentleman was highly thought of in that country, that is, England of fifty years ago. He has not retrograded there, and while in this country the term is more or less reproachful the reasons are that there is a wrong definition.

SPORT is a word which can be defined in various ways. The true definition, something which of business, "All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy" be truthful, the definition of sport should be given a wider range. The widest would, in all probability, be that which covered all the questions, and that a plowman, axe-wielder, any one, in fact, who was not a producer was a "sport." Very well, if those who choose to put such a construction on the word, and they must be of somewhat bigoted prejudices, and that men or women who toil are the only ones who are entitled to be classed outside of the sporting fraternity, while they may be entitled to all praise those who are not in the same class are entitled to consideration.

From whatever point of view there is pleasant reading in Nimrod's remarks.

The Sporting Gentleman is for the most part of comely appearance, his countenance and frame denoting health and cheerfulness, and cheerful he generally is. And a rare virtue is cheerfulness;—it makes more friends than learning and wit into the bargain; in fact, it was a proverb among the ancients, that a man who can laugh heartily, will never cut his throat. It is malice and cunning that render him serious. It may be said of him, indeed, what Cicero said of Cataline,—that he lives with the young, pleasantly; with the old, gravely;—that is to say, he is well bred enough to put all his friends and acquaintances at their ease. He abhors over-refinement, which he considers but a mark of profligacy, heartlessness, and insincerity; and often thinks what old Fabricius would say, were he to rise from the grave, and witness the overstrained and unnatural state of a great portion of the fashionable society of the present age. His house, however, abounds with everything tending to convenience and comfort; partly with reference to his station and family, and also with a view to the repose necessary to himself and friends, after a good day's sport.

In his general conduct,—in his transactions with the world,—the Sporting Gentleman has a scrupulous regard to truth, with the most religious attention to fulfil every engagement he may enter into, which is the distinguishing characteristic of a gentleman. * * *

The Sporting Gentleman is a great admirer of the female sex, and, if married, his wife is generally what is called a fine woman. His eye, being accustomed to regard the points of the brute creation, does not overlook them in woman, knowing that, on the principle of "like producing like," it is hopeless to look for fine and healthy progeny from an ugly and ill-formed mother. The Sporting Gentleman is also proud of his wife; takes her to London for a few weeks in the spring, as well as to all the races and race balls in his neighborhood; but, as he prefers the air of the country, and well ventilated apartments to the heated saloons of London, his stay in the metropolis is short. * * *

The Sporting Gentleman is a kind master to his servants—several of them being considered as heir looms on the estate—descending from father to son, and dying in the service of the latter, or retiring on the fruits of their service. But he keeps a tight hand upon them, those in his stables especially—the high condition of his hunters, as well as the neat "turn out" of his equipages, being a grand consideration with him. Experience has taught him two lessons touching this matter,—the one, that servants, like soldiers, under a relaxed system of mastership, are never really good; the other, that a good master makes good servants, kindness having more influence than fear. * * *

The Sporting Gentleman is on the Turf. That is, he has two or three thoroughbred brood mares, and runs their produce at the neighbouring races—say, within a radius of fifty miles. Racing with him, however, is only a secondary pursuit. Still, as far as he goes, he enters into it with spirit. He gives large sums for mares of the most fashionable blood, knowing that to breed from any other is to incur certain loss; and he selects the best stud-horse to breed from, regardless of the heavy expense. He is proud of his paddocks, which he has planned himself after the newest system, being about a fourth of the size of those in his father's time; and his young racing stock are fed chiefly on dry food, by which they are forced into size and form, and as such have generally the best of their neighbours. He does not back them at the post beyond a few pounds, still less attempt to make what is called "a Book," and this for two reasons. First, he is aware that there are very long odds against them, or against any other private gentleman on a race-course. Secondly, he is well assured that not one man in a thousand possesses the powers of calculation sufficient to enable him to make a winning-book; and lastly, it is not congenial with his feelings.* He considers it infra dig. to be in constant communication with a most disreputable order in society, the public betting-men of the day.

* It is a curious fact, that men who come under the true denomination of SPORTSMAN are seldom ardent admirers of the Turf. On the day of the last Epsom Derby, three masters of foxhounds, namely, Mr. Thomas Asheton Smith, the Earl of Kintore, and the Honourable Colonel Lowther, remained in London. * * *

It may be objected, that I have drawn too flattering a picture of the Sporting Man. Let me hasten, then, to disabuse the minds of such of my readers as may be of that opinion.

The Sporting Gentleman is far from immaculate,—perfection is not the lot of humanity:—

"Virtue and vice in the same man are found,
And now they gain, and now they lose their ground."

Still, as regards his morality, he is generally on a par with his neighbors. At all events, there is nothing demoralising in his pursuits; on the contrary, the pastimes of the Sportsman have been found to be public benefits in more ways than one; and his example in the field is not without its effect. We have no slight authority for saying that the hearts of those men which are capable of being strung up to a high pitch of enthusiasm and determination in the chase,—which is called the image of war,—would fit them to lead columns in their country's battles; at the same time that they are found to possess in the softer moments of relation and enjoyment, certain chords which vibrate the sweetest notes of pleasure; and the former of these positions is substantiated by the testimony of military officers, who have often so asserted, that in the battle-field the most daring and gallant soldiers have been those who have been accustomed to field sports.*

* General Sir Hussey Vivian expressed himself very much to this purpose, a few years back, in his place in the House of Commons. * * *

FRANK H. DUNTON. Well known to the horsemen of the United States, one who labored hard and anxiously to forward their interests, I take pleasure in publishing the following circular. And the only necessary explanation to add is, that no better man than Mr. Bauer could have been selected to take the matter in hand. That the raffle will be fairly conducted is beyond even the shadow of a doubt, and I sincerely hope that Mr. Dunton will receive the support he is so well entitled to. Many thousands of tickets in response to the call should be assured, and I further hope that the chronograph will come to the Pacific Coast:

CHICAGO, April 2, 1898.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, San Francisco, Cal.,
DEAR SIR:—Mr. Frank H. Dunton, founder and publisher for many years of Dunton's Spirit of the Turf, is, I am sorry to inform you, in extremely feeble health, which strained financial circumstances rendered more difficult to bear. Knowing the large-heartedness of admirers of the light harness horse, I induced Mr. Dunton to furnish me with a list of his old-time patrons and acquaintances, believing that a statement of his condition would arouse the spirit of generosity and magnanimity for which horsemen are noted, and as your name appears on this list I take the liberty of addressing you herewith.

The cruel murder of Mrs. Dunton some years ago, the dastardly attempt on Mr. Dunton's own life, his ill health since that time, legal complications, etc., have all conspired to bring Mr. Dunton to the point where it is necessary that he dispose of some of his not-needed personal effects, among which is the magnificent chronograph made especially for Mr. Dunton by Giles Bros., of this city, and for which he paid $400.

Knowing the natural antipathy of any gentleman to proclaim his distress to the world, I ventured to suggest to Mr. Dunton that he place the matter of disposing of the chronograph in my hands, his efforts to do so at something near its value having failed.

I believe that many of his old acquaintances would cheerfully expend a dollar or two for a ticket on the watch, which will be raffled off under my auspices at $1 per ticket, if a reasonable number of them can be disposed of by means of letters addressed to those who know Mr. Dunton. If unsuccessful the money sent me will be returned.

Will you not kindly advise me, at your earliest convenience, how many tickets at $1 each you will subscribe for, remitting the amount, receipt of which will be immediately acknowledged, and number of your tickets given you, and by so doing relieve to some extent the unusually heavy burden that has been placed on our mutual friend.

Your assistance will be greatly appreciated, and would not, I am confident, be withheld could Mr. Dunton's actual condition be brought fully to you, which it is impossible to do in the limits of a letter.

Awaiting your valued favors, I remain
Yours very truly,

JOHN C. BAUER.

"A TEMPEST IN A TEAPOT," original, and undoubtedly, when the "herb that cheers" was first introduced, as it might be that the "steaming urn" was kept under too high a pressure to secure the full fragrance of the Oriental herb. Whoever the originator of the expression, it has been adopted as signifying a contest when some puerile question was brought into comparison with those of more momentous importance.

The licensing of drivers, for instance, has occasioned a huge wave of turbulence, a tidal wave, that was sure to sweep away every obstacle. And when brought under the "X-rays" of the present day, that is when fully considered, any opposition to a measure which has proved beneficial in kindred branches of "sports," all branches, in fact, in which horses are the actors, the "side line" adopted expresses the situation. It might have been as well to confine the securing of licences to "professional drivers," and any complication arising from the use of the term easily removed by a simple definition. Not necessary to adopt the rule that governs in athletic circles, viz: that a man who competes against professionals is no longer an amateur.

But if there has been a case where the charge of making a big fuss over a lilliputian example, it strikes me that it is well deserved, and the time is not far off when "trotting folks" will look in supreme wonderment over this turmoil of 1898.

Whatever the future action may be should a special congress be called, and the N. T. A. accedes to the demands of those who have kindled the bonfire under the tea kettle little barn will result. Just as soon as the N. T. A. Congress of 1900 assembles a rule for licensing drivers will again be incorporated and, with an appropriate change in the wording receive the sanction of so large a majority of harness racing people as to be practically unanimous.

THE OUTLOOK.—Every one discouraged. Never so gloomy an outlook since 1864 is what the old settlers reiterate. It may be so. Looking at the flag on the roof of the Mills Building this Thursday afternoon, and a person of optimistic views would feel that his roseate predictions had small base to rest them upon. But while this fair weather token was swaying and trembling under the influence of the western breeze, there is an accumulation of clouds to the northwest. Banking up toward the zenith, that part of the mid sky but is only seen from the office windows, and it does seem that the "weather prophet" is again mistaken, and that before this number is found the welcome rain has revived fond hopes.

There was a "bow of promise" in the Western sky only a few mornings ago. A full arch, one end resting on the San Francisco hills, the other dropping so gracefully into the Golden Gate that one who did not accept the token was surely devoid of hopefulness.

I would rather lean to the bright side. At all events if the drouth is sure to come let us wait till this joyous month of April is nearer complete.

Ten inches, and a fraction more, the record of one April since I have known California, and an inch or two from this on will insure the glowing anticipations.

And now were the farmers of California ready to make provisions for a dry year, the bug-a-boo of drouths would not frighten the most timid.

A few extra stacks of hay, a few more sacks of barley garnered, and a dry season would not bring dread. Should this prove to be one of those years, suitable provisions cannot be made. But when the seasons are usually propitious, little trouble in providing for those which might fail.

Safe to say that fifty per cent. more hay could be harvested, and with a plentiful forage supply nothing more needed.

Moses, the patriarch, made provisions for some dry years; if the California farmers will emulate his example and divide his mark by five, no longer will the incubus be felt, plenty of feed over the wants of any one or two seasons.

NORAH. The following account sent by Rio Alto gives a sufficient history of one of the great broodmares of Palo Alto. Great in many senses of the word, as future generations are likely to show marked improvement over the original progenitors.

"Scientific breeding" could not be classed, as it now is, were there not progression, and it is only reasonable to expect that with the same skillful attention there will not be a failure, and even without retrogression unless there is a decided advance that would come next to failure:

Brown mare 15.3 hands, hind feet white; foaled in 1875. Bred by Chas. Backman, Stony Ford, Orange County, N. Y., died at Vina, April 9th. Nora was one of the mares purchased by the late Senator Stanford from Stony Ford at the time he purchased Electioneer. Her sire was Messenger Duroc. Norah was the dam of Nadine, who produced Betonica (31), 2:10½, (p), Amigo 2:16½, and Miss Maude 2:29½, dam of Nordeau (3) 2:17½.

She is also the dam of Candidate 2:26½, sire of Elfrida 4:12:13½, Catturme 2:14½, Gardenia 2:17½, and four others in the list. Norah is also the dam of Nora Whips, a fast filly by Whips, that showed a half in 1:06, and with Donchka, by Wild Boy took the Blue Ribbon as a road team at the Saratoga Horse Show, N. Y.

The dam of Norah was Mary Hulse (dam of Charley Champlain 2:21½, and Sam Hill :230½) by American Star 14. One by one the early importations from Stony Ford to Palo Alto are passing away, all, but in few instances leaving an imprint of merit on the records of Lone Pine Farm; none so meritorious as a contributor of extreme speed as Norah, except the great Electioneer and Dexter Prince.

CHAMBERTIN.—There is a great deal in cultivating tastes, and when any person has acquired those which entail the expenditure of a good deal of money, he is a happy individual who can adapt his tastes to the requirement of his purse.

Just as much pleasure, perhaps, in setting, at lunch time, a pint of California for twenty cents, as that in his prosperous days eight dollars a bottle was none too much for, and when it comes to dinner, a bottle of Sauterne or hock, the production of our native vineyards, at a small cost, will recompense for the higher-priced vintages of Europe.

If a philosopher, he will make the most of what is presented, and then again if these bon vivants, these gourmets, who are prone to dictate to him what should be a gratification, differ from what he really enjoys, accept the change without repinings.

In San Francisco, a man of moderate means, can secure just as good a dinner for twenty-five per cent of the cost it could be duplicated in New York, or Chicago. Why then grumble over the smallness of the bill when compared to the carte to those of the Eastern towns.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

JOHN MAXEY, a little jockey who could ride at eighty pounds, died April 14th. He was always very weak and puny and was apprenticed to Charley Sanders. Maxey was a faithful little fellow. His funeral expenses will be defrayed from the Turf Congress Jockey Club fund.

GOVIN is getting to be "some pumpkins" as a horse pilot. He took no chances with Oahu yesterday, winning off by over half a dozen lengths. He has not gotten into the look-around, grin-and-lose-the-money act yet, that's one good thing.

Admirable.

The illustration on the first page of to day's paper can be called very nearly a perfect type of the race to which Admirable belongs.

When compared with the cut of Indre, in the advertisement of the Oaklawn Farm, it will be seen that the portrait of the one could be accepted as the "counterfeit presentment" of the other, and barring the markings troublesome to distinguish them apart. And there is little question that horses of the type of Admirable and Indre are bound to be an important factor in American horse-breeding, and their production remunerative to those who breed them with a fair share of intelligence. To obtain horses of the desired type it would seem that all that was required was to have sires and dams of that conformation. But that is a difficult resource to be rendered available in this country.

Mr. M. W. Dunham has based his stud on these lines and can carry out his purpose with an assurance of success not gaunted smaller breeders.

It will then be well to consider that the French Coach horse has resulted from uniting the strains of different breeds, and that similar results can be secured from a like system of breeding. The basis thoroughbreds and native strains. Thoroughbred largely predominating as illustrated by the following pedigree of Admirable:

Admirable was bred in France, as the following tabulation of the government certificate shows:

NATIONAL STUD.

CERTIFICATE OF BIRTH.	I, the undersigned, Director of the Depot of Stallions of St. Lo, do hereby certify that it is proven by the certificate of covering and of the declaration in proper form, which have been deposited in my hands, that the mare named Miss Coy (by Pretty Boy and Kapiant) one-half thoroughbred, born in 1873 in Normandy, height 156 centimeters, color bay, head —, legs —, and belonging to Mr. Millet who resides at St. Marcouf, Department of La Manche, was covered in 1877 by the National Stallion named Jackson (by Jackson's Quicksilver and Tamworth) No. 176— one-half thoroughbred, born in 1869 in England—height, 162 centimeters, color, dark brown, head —, legs —, and belonging to the Depot of Stallions of St. Lo, and from which was produced the foal herein described (in the margin) which foal was born at St. Marcouf on the 14th day of April, 1878.
Product of the National Stallion
Subject to a tax of 12 cents.
Article 43 of Model Order No. 26. If it is a thoroughbred mare, mention will be made of the fact.
Government Stamp
Description. Name, Admirable. Color, redish or chestnut.
Head do Legs do
Seal of the Depot of Stallions of St. Lo. (Manche).

In proof of which I have signed and delivered this certificate at St. Lo, on the 31st day of December, 1878. The Director,
A. PROUVAUX.

That Admirable was a fine specimen of his race is not only assured by the picture, but is also corroborated by the prizes he won in France, and not only that, expense was eliminated from the calculation, the best being the objective point, "regardless of cost."

Selected by a son of Mr. J. B. Haggin, he gave the closest attention to the business, and determined to secure an animal that the most critical could not find fault with. He was not alone guided by his personal observation, but also sought the advice of the best judges. Now it may appear that an animal of admitted excellence, one of a type that would warrant the highest expectations of his progeny, was brought to California sixteen years ago, and so far as is known without leaving his impress. The first deduction would be that he was a failure, and that would appear to be a logical conclusion. But there may have been a cause; impotency, perhaps, or other reasons for Admirable being unknown. That Mr. Dunham has made a "striking success" proves that the breed can be produced now without deterioration, and still it would seem as if the grounds Mr. Dunham takes in his address were not tenable. In arguing against the "thoroughbred cross" he emphasizes the lack of size as one of the chief objections.

It is somewhat singular that a person of so much prominence in the horse world as Mr. Dunham should be so ignorant in regard to the "size and substance" of thoroughbreds. Not so singular when the prevailing opinion is also faulty. Plenty of people who are brought in daily contact with thoroughbreds who have the same erroneous opinions. The measurements given in the certified copy of Admirable's pedigree show that 162 centimeters are the maximum, and that is something short of sixteen hands. Now it is safe to say that at least twenty of the thoroughbred stallions in use at Rancho del Paso exceed that height, and weights ranging from twelve hundred to fourteen hundred pounds. And it may be that if all the French Coaches on Mr. Dunham's farm are measured and weighed, the average will not be as high as that of the thoroughbreds at Rancho del Paso. Size enough, surely, and no one who has the least knowledge of thoroughbreds will question their right to be named as the ideal horse."

The Benefits to Be Derived From Defeat.

The victory of Satsuma in the Burns Handicap, with Won't Dance in the place, should stir our breeders to greater endeavors in the line of breeding, for the above-mentioned horses are products of the grand old Commonwealth of Kentucky. California had to be content with third money. Traverser won the California Derby and Humidity the richest of our two year-old stakes. That Kentucky-bred horses should meet the best of our section and vanquish them is of course a bitter pill to swallow, but the effect of the dose should be beneficial. In this land by the sunset sea we have such a diversity of climate and land that we should be able to breed racers capable of coping with any in the world.

Kentuckians will tell you that it is the drinking of limestone water that makes the big-boned, sturdy race horses and men and women. The far-famed bluegrass region certainly contains much limestone and their horses are hard to beat, but California also has her limestone region, which stretches through the northern, southern and eastern parts of the State. There the land is "rolling" in character, and it is an undeniable fact that the racers with the staunchest limbs and the best lungs are reared upon uneven land. Where there are hills and dales the baby racer can develop nearly every muscle in its organization, but on level land it is almost certain to be weak and flabby, possessing speed, perhaps, but no ability to carry that speed over a very long stretch of ground. There is a difference of opinion regarding the efficacy of "limestone water," for in the portion of Virginia in which the greatest racers first saw the light there is little or no limestone formation. There must be something else in the mineral line in that section, however, to make the racers bred there what they are.

In California are the best-appointed breeding establishments in the world, at least visitors with a love for horses who have circled the globe say so. Within her borders are the most valuable horses of their time of three continents—Ormonde from England, Sir Modred from New Zealand, Darebin from Victoria, Australia, Salvator from Kentucky, etc. In the ranks of brood mares are many ex-queens of the turf, such as Miss Woodford, Firenzi, Lizzie Lucas, Flirtation and Bella B., and mares too, like imp. Flirt, imp. Fairy Rose, imp. Amelia, imp. Rosetta, Maggie R., Electra, Carina, Ethel, Glorienne matrons that throw racers of high degree with wonderful regularity. With the glorious climate that California possesses, especially fitting for the rearing of racers, with all sorts of land over which the youthful, blue-blooded galloper can run, developing every muscle as it goes with the most select strains of blood of the three great "horse countries," no wonder the achievements of California horses have challenged the admiration of the world of horse-lovers.

The only drawback with our thoroughbred breeders, the one matter that in our opinion has kept California from leading the whole world in the production of fast and staunch equine racing crafts, is—lack of scientific research. The Bruce Lowe system of breeding on the figure system may have its defects, but a study of the plan will set our breeders a-thinking, and from the Lowe ideas will doubtless be evolved theories that will be of immense benefit to lovers of race horses throughout the land. If there were but little material (and there is much) in the late Mr. Lowe's book having for its object the improvement of the breed of racers, it would still be a good thing to read, for our breeders would be brought to see their errors and to rectify them. To show how highly some men regard the ideas of our departed Australian friend, Marcus Daly (one of the most progressive men in the country as well as one of the most liberal) had a friend of Bruce Lowe's (one who knew that gentleman's ideas pretty thoroughly) "go through" his list of horses at Bitter Root farm and "cull" out every one that did not come from one of the great racing or producing families, tracing on the female side of the house. No matter how much the animal might have cost, she was put aside and either offered for sale or retired for good from the stud.

That there are many stallions and broodmares on farms in this State that come from none of the good racing families and will naturally never produce anything having more than mediocre ability, there can be no doubt, and if these breeders had thought of this and studied the subject of breeding on scientific principles they would have saved themselves much mortification and money. Therefore, we say again, the victory of Satsuma, of Kentucky, in our richest stake was a good thing for California breeders. It gives them food for reflection, and reflection will bring a resolve to excel, not to take a position in the rear of the procession of thoroughbred breeders of the world.

The Outlook for Harness Racing.

It may seem that there were few horses left in California to take part in the trotting and pacing races of this year. When such prominent stables as that of Palo Alto, Keating, McDonald and others are billed for Eastern events, or Eastern sales, the natural response will be that not enough were left to fill the bill. In place of that there is the assurance that with these important factors out of the field, horses will be trained that under other conditions would not come in. For instance, the owners of pacers who are eligible to the 2:11 class, might refuse to enter the lists against Betonica, with him out of the way ready to meet all competitors.

California has "raised" so many champions that the question necessarily arises if an animal cannot come up to championship form what is the use of training or entering it in races?

Champions are beaten, those which give the highest indication of being very near the top round of the "Ladder of Fame, give way, and when a person has a fairly good representative of its class, what happens to be the hardest race of the season, may prove to be the easiest, and the race which seems to be the hardest, prove to be the easiest of the programme.

HORSE OWNERS must not allow this day to go by without mailing their entries for the Montana Racing Carnival to Ed. A. Tipton, Anaconda. There are $30,000 guaranteed in stakes, a list of the events being published in this issue of this paper. There will be fifty-eight days of racing.

THERE is to be a grand trotting and pacing meeting at Overland Park, Denver, June 11th to 25th. Entries close May 15th. The purses are $500 and $1,000 each. Five per cent entrance. See advertisement on last page.

AN opportunity to get good, sound horses at your own price will be offered at J. M. Nelson's speed sale to be held Wednesday next, April 20th, at the Alameda Race Track.

ONE of the choicest farms to send horses for pasturage is the Ruinart Stock Farm at Baltane, Sonoma county. See the advertisement in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Standards.

BLOODHOUNDS—The Head and Wrinkle is the peculiar and distinguishable feature of this breed, and is estimated at a very high rate. In the male it is large in all dimensions but width, in which there is a remarkable deficiency. The upper surface of the head is domed, ending in a blunt point at the occiput; the brain case is not developed to the same extent as the jaws, which are very long and wide at the nostrils, hollow and very lean in the cheek, notably so under the eyes. Muzzle: deep and square. Brows: very prominent, the general expression of the whole head being very grand and majestic. Skin covering the forehead and cheeks wrinkled in a most remarkable manner, unlike any other breed. These points are not nearly so developed in the bitch, but are to be demanded in a proportionate degree. Eyes: generally hazel, rather small and deeply sunk, with triangular shaped eye-lids showing the haw, which should be a deep red. Ears: should be set on low and long enough to overlap one another considerably when drawn together in front of the nose, hang forward and close to the cheek, never showing the slightest tendency to "prick," leather thin, pendulous and covered with very soft, short, silky hair. Flews: are remarkably long and pendant, sometimes falling fully two inches below the angle of the mouth. Neck: long so as to enable the dog to easily drop his nose to the ground, considerable dewlap.

Chest: rather wide and deep, in all cases of a good girth. Shoulders: sloping and muscular. Back and back-ribs: wide and deep, the size of the dog necessitates great power in those parts. Hips or croup: should be wide or almost ragged. Legs must be straight and muscular and the ankles of full size. Feet: should be round and as cat like as possible.

Color: is black and tan, or tan only (seldom a pure black and little or no white); the black extends to the backsides, top of neck and top of head, the tan should be deep and rich red.

Coat: should be short and hard on body, silky on the ears and on top of the head.

Stern: is carried gaily in a gentle curve, but should not be raised beyond a right angle with the back; the lower side is fringed with hair.

Defect: absence of black color.

Symmetry of form is of great importance.

Height: from 25 to 27 inches, or a little less for bitches.

Weight: dogs, about 80 pounds or more, bitches somewhat less.

GREAT DANES (Deutsche Dogge)—See the issue of BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of January 15, 1898.

THE GREYHOUND—Head: fairly large between the ears, jaw lean, bent, not weak, little or no development of the nasal sinuses. Eye: full, bright and penetrating. Ears: small and folding down when at rest, but raised in semi prick fashion when animated. Teeth strong and mouth level. Neck: fairly long and and a trifle arched, rather than otherwise.

Shoulders: well placed, as oblique as possible. Chest: fairly deep, and as wide as may be consistent with speed. (A "narrow fronted" shallow chested greyhound is of no use.) Good length from elbow to knee, compared with that from knee to the ground.

Feet: hard and close, with toes well defined and well developed.

Loins: strong and broad. Back: powerful and in speediest and best dogs slightly arched.

Hind-quarters: very muscular; stifles, strong and well bent. Hind legs: well turned and shapely, and somewhat long, looking by thin curve even longer than they are.

Tail, generally fine and nicely curved, with more or less hair.

Color: black, brindle, red, fawn, blue, slates; sometimes mixed with white. One hue is considered as good as another, though white is considered an evidence of weakness.

Disposition, as a rule, kindly and amiable. Dogs in high training are apt to be unreliable, and during exercise, may fight and seriously injure each other.

San Francisco Kennel Club.

Active preparations for the bench show next month marks the order of progress among the rank and file of the San Francisco Kennel Club. The premium list is promised, for the perusal of those interested, by the beginning of next week. The list of special prizes are of value and of sufficient diversity to satisfy the most captious, among them will be noticed elegant cups donated by the Palace Hotel, Messrs. H. J. Crocker, J. E. De Ruyter, J. G. Barker, H. A. Wagner, John D. Spreckels, Clabrough, Golcher & Co., The E. T. Allen Co., Geo. W. Shreve & Co., etc. The medals offered by the club will range in value from $6 to $50 and the cash prizes will be proportionately valuable.

The statement heretofore published that Mr. E. J. Bull, the popular judge of coursing at Union Coursing Park, will judge the greyhound classes is here corrected. While such selection on the part of the S. F. Kennel Club had originally been made Mr. Bull has formally declined the office, alleging that while he may be able to judge coursing to the satisfaction of the leashman, he declines to express his judgment as to the bench merits of the dogs. A decision that will commend Mr. Bull to the good opinions of all fanciers.

Rumors of dark horses (?) on the bench who will be crackerjacks are plentiful. Mr. E. S. Heller, who is now in the East, will bring out some Boston terriers, the very best that can be procured. A St. Bernard entry is promised which is expected to carry off all honors. An entry of smooth coat and wire-haired fox terriers from New Orleans, by Mr. Thos. Woodward, Jr., will be seen in the fox terrier classes. British Columbia will be represented by a string of entries in charge of Mr. Frank Turner. Mr. E. A. Deal of San Luis Obispo will have a fox hound kennel in prize shape. J. L. Cunningham of Los Angeles has reported a string of twelve or fifteen entries from the south.

Pacific Mastiff Club.

At a meeting of the Pacific Mastiff club held last Saturday evening, April 9th, the club decided to rescind a resolution adopted March 10th, (published in the issue of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of March 19th), the purport of which was, first: the pioneering of a secession movement and formation of a Pacific Coast fanciers association; second, several animadversions and criticisms directed against the A. K. C. for various alleged delinquencies by that body, discriminating against the interests of the Pacific Mastiff Club.

The exclusively published report of this meeting states that: "After a heated and at times acrimonious discussion the resolutions were passed rescinding the action taken on March 10th, at which time the club seceded from the American Kennel Club."

Following the settlement of this momentous question, the club placidly proceeds on the even tenor of its way and offers the following list of prizes for distribution at the coming record bench show:

For the best California bred mastiff, irrespective of sex or club membership, the Pacific Mastiff Club's competition trophy, a silver mastiff, to be competed for annually at San Francisco until won three times by the same exhibitor.

For the best California bred mastiff of opposite breed to winner of the trophy, irrespective of club membership, a gold medal, to be competed for annually at San Francisco until won three times by the same exhibitor.

The Pacific Mastiff Club shield for best mastiff exhibited by a member (under special club rules).

Pacific Mastiff Club class medal for best mastiff dog shown by a member of the club.

Pacific Mastiff Club class medal for best mastiff bitch shown by a member of the club.

Pacific Mastiff Club class medal for best mastiff puppy dog shown by a member of the club.

Pacific Mastiff Club class medal for best mastiff puppy bitch shown by a member of the club.

Thursday morning a letter from the Secretary of the Pacific Mastiff Club, dated April 11th, was published in the "Call," stating that the American Kennel Club had brought into play the heavy axe of suspension for cause. This bombshell in the ranks of dogdom had its fuse clipped by the Secretary's supplementary argument: "Of course, this overt action was not to be tolerated by the powers that be, but (?) the suspension must of necessity fall to the ground in view of the rescinding by the Pacific Mastiff Club of the offending resolution on Saturday last. The ancient philosophy of Judy. 'Don't do as I do, but do as I tell yer' may have been good once upon a time. It seems to us that the affairs of the P. M. C. for the time being are in the nebulous condition known as 'Where are we at?'"

MONTCLAIR, N. J.

DR. H. CLAY GLOVER—Dear Sir:—I have been intending writing for some time for the purpose of extending my appreciation of your medicines and soap. I have cured within the past six months a St. Bernard weighing 154 pounds, a Newfoundland, a Yorkshire Terrier and a Greyhound of the worst kind of mange. I cannot say too much in favor of your medicines, and always take pleasure in recommending them to my friends.

Yours truly,

A. BARTLETT, JR.

St. Bernard Club.

A regular meeting of the St. Bernard Club of California was held last Monday evening in the office of Dr. Cluness, Jr., 406 Sutter street. A large number of the members were present. After the usual routine business had been transacted, on the question being brought before the meeting as to the action of the club in offering medal prizes for distribution at the coming bench show, to exhibitors of the St. Bernard breed, the vote of the meeting was that a medal or medals from the club would not be offered.

Coursing Notes.

The coursing at Union Coursing Park last Saturday and Sunday drew forth an increased attendance. On Sunday the long shots had decidedly the best of the game. There were a few "no-goes," but the hares were above the average and the results were unusually lively. The betting in the ring was fast and furious and many thousands of dollars changed hands.

W. C. Glasson's Terrona, who opened at 25 to 1, managed, by brilliant work, to land the final stake, defeating George Whitney's Theron. In the puppy stake Bonita was an easy winner and a favorite, and in the final course with Pastime she showed her supporters that there was nothing to it.

The talent came home happy, for they managed to get next on the long shots without exciting suspicion. The best work of the day was done by Eclipse, who but for the long and tiring courses that she was forced to run to reach the final course, would have in all probability beaten Terrona.

The following is how the dogs ran:

In the first ties in the "Reserve" Stake, all-age greyhounds, prizes $220, $100, $60, $30, $30, $30, next six $15, next twelve $5 each. J. J. Edmond's Forget beat S. W. Smith's Sans Souci, A. Johnson's Tod Sloan beat B. Dougherty's Tessie Fair, Al Austin's Douglas beat R. E. de B. Lopez' Green Valley Maid, W. C. Glasson's Terrona beat P. J. Rush's Van Needa, R. E. de B. Lopez' Camilla beat R. B. Kay's Chit-Chat, J. J. Warren's Sweet Lips beat Curtis & Son's Chartist, George Whitney's Theron beat W. C. Glasson's Magic, W. M. O'Neil's Promise Me beat F. P. Courtney's The Turk, J. J. Edmond's Move On beat Simmons & Donahue's Moore's Prescription, J. Seggerson's White Chief beat Larkey & Rock's Hercules, R. B. Kay's Eclipse beat D. J. Healey's Rusty Gold, E. V. Sullivan's Flying Buck beat A. Johnson's Mountain Beauty.

In the second ties Tod Sloan beat Forget, Terrona beat Douglas, Sweet Lips beat Camilla, Theron beat Promise Me, White Chief beat Move On, Eclipse beat Flying Buck.

In the third ties Terrona beat Tod Sloan, Theron beat Sweet Lips, Eclipse beat White Chief.

In the fourth ties Terrona beat Theron, Eclipse ran a bye.

Final—Terrona beat Theron.

In the first ties in the Puppy Stake, limited to sixteen entries, prizes $50, $30, $15, $15, next four $7.50 each, F. Keenan's Royal Oak beat P. Dougherty's Palmer Hill, D. J. Healey's Pastime beat C. Strehl's Star Pointer, D. Ford's Bonita beat E. V. Sullivan's Flying Faster, Larkey & Rock's Minerva beat D. Ford's Handy Andy.

In the second ties Pastime beat Royal Oak, Bonita beat Minerva.

Final—Bonita beat Pastime.

Coursing has caught on at Dixon.

A coursing park is one of the probabilities in the near future at Stockton.

The regular Sunday coursing at Los Angeles draws large crowds. Great interest is taken in the sport down South.

The Modesto Coursing Club is in a flourishing condition. The meets are well attended and the coursing of a high average.

An Up-to-Date Dog Hospital.

Those of the fancy who have had occasion recently to avail themselves of the first-class facilities afforded in the treatment of ailing dogs, are untrusting in recommending the Dog Hospital, located at 2128 Market street. Dr. A. E. Buzard is a veterinarian of international reputation and also well known to Pacific Coast fanciers. The Hospital has been lately refitted and is now in position to handle any and all cases in the most satisfactory manner.

Congress and the Birds.

Senator's Hoar's bill to protect song birds was passed by the Senate on March 24th. The bill is in the interest of humane as well as protective legislation and will no doubt meet with the approval and encouragement of all fair minded people, but as is usual when fat pockets are assailed the commercial hyenas are loud in their howling. A meeting of feather importers was recently held in New York and specious objection was urged against the bill on the grounds: that millions of dollars invested in an important business would be seriously interfered with; that the fall importations already on hand would be rendered worthless; that it would throw out of employment in New York at least 20,000 people (so far as this latter argument goes, the same sentiment controls the payment of the miserably low wages paid feather workers, which prompts the unnecessary destruction of song birds); that the government revenues would be reduced at a time when the national treasury is most in need of funds, etc. These arguments are easily refuted, a profitable investment can always be found for capital and employment can be provided for wage-workers at living rates without relying on a continuation of an uncalled for and cruel destruction of bird life and traffic in bird skins.

The following is the text of the bill:

"Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, that the importation into the United States of birds, feathers or parts of birds for ornamental purposes be, and the same is hereby prohibited, provided, however, that nothing herein contained shall be construed as prohibiting the importation of birds for museums, zoological gardens or scientific collections, or the importation of living birds or of feathers taken from living birds without injury to the bird. The Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to make regulations for carrying into effect the provisions of this section.

"Sec. 2. That the transportation of birds, feathers or parts of birds to be used or sold, from any State or Territory of the United States is hereby prohibited. Whoever shall violate the provision of this section shall, upon conviction in the district where the offense shall have been committed, be punished for each such offense by a fine of $50.

"Sec. 3. That the sale, keeping or offering for sale, within any Territory of the United States, or within the District of Columbia, of birds, feathers or parts of birds, for ornamental purposes, except such as are excepted in the first section of this act, be and the same is hereby prohibited. Whoever shall violate the provision of this section shall, upon conviction, be punished for each such offense by a fine of $50."

It now remains to be seen what the "Third House" will do in the premises. We sincerely trust this bill will finally receive the President's signature and become a law.

Northwest Tournament.

Advices from Wallace, Idaho, of recent date, state that the tournament committee of the Coeur d'Alene Rod and Gun Club has prepared the following program for their tournament, which will be held on April 22, 23 and 24, the first two days being devoted to blue-rock shooting at the club's grounds and the last day to live-bird shooting at Osburn. The first days events will be:

- Event 1—Fifteen singles, unknown angles; entrance $2.
- Event 2—Twenty singles, unknown angles; entrance $2.50, $25 added.
- Event 3—Twenty singles, unknown angles; entrance $2.50, $25 added.
- Event 4—Twenty-five singles, unknown angles; entrance $3, $50 added.
- Event 5—Twenty singles, unknown angles; entrance $2.50, $25 added.
- Event 6—Twenty singles, unknown angles, reverse pull; entrance $2.50, $25 added.
- Event 7—Twenty singles, unknown angles, entrance $2.50, $25 added.

SECOND DAY.

- Event 8—Fifteen singles, unknown angles; entrance, $2.
  - Event 9—Twenty singles, unknown angles; entrance, $2.50; $25 added.
  - Event 10—Twenty singles, unknown angles; entrance, $2.50; $25 added.
  - Event 11—Team shoot, three men, each to be from the same club or town, twenty-five singles per man; entrance, $9 per team; $75 added.
  - Event 12—Twenty singles, unknown angles; entrance, $2.50; $25 added.
  - Event 13—Twenty singles, unknown angles; entrance, $2.50; $25 added.
  - Event 14—Twenty singles, unknown angles; entrance, $2.50; $25 added.
  - Event 15—Consolation shoot, open to all who have shot in not less than seven events and whose percentage is not above 65, fifteen singles, unknown angles; entrance, $2; $50 added.
- General average prizes of $26, $20, $16, $13, $10, $7.50 $5 and $2.50 will be given, based upon the whole blue-rock shooting, except for the three-men team shoot.

THIRD DAY.

- Event 1—Ten live birds; entrance, $2.50; $25 added.
  - Event 2—Fifteen live birds; entrance $5; $50 added.
- Birds extra. The tournament will be open to all amateur sportsmen of the northwest. The prize list foots up an even $600, all of which is in cash.

Olympic Live Bird Shoot.

The second medal shoot of the Olympic Gun Club at the Ingleside grounds last Sunday was a very successful meeting. The day was an ideal one and the birds were a good lot. The attendance was large, a great deal of interest being manifested in the skill of the shooters. Twenty-three men stood over the traps in the club event. The clean scores were by W. J. Golcher, who stood at the twenty-nine yard mark and shot in clever form; E. A. Schultz at the twenty-six yard peg, who made his first appearance this season and had the only one-barrel clean score for the day; F. J. Schultz, also on the twenty six yard line, was in nice form and used the second barrel but once in making his score. W. E. Murdock used his second three times in making the fourth straight score. Harvey McMurchy shot as a guest of the club, his fourth bird fell out of bounds leaving him in the eleven hole. O. Feudner and C. A. Haight were handicapped by hard luck, Haight's birds in particular being about the fastest drivers set loose during the day. Nauman was kept in the eleven list by a piece of unluck for bad luck in the fifth round, he dropped his bird apparently dead with the first barrel and used the second for safety which had the effect of rousing the bird to swift flight beyond the flags. The detailed score of the club race is as follows:

Yds.	T	Yds.	T

* Dead out of bounds.

The first six-bird race at $2.50 entrance had three straight scores, made by Haight, Jackson and Bushnell, who divided the pool. The scores were:

C. A. Haight.....22211-6	F. Vernon.....212010-4
J. R. Jackson.....11111-6	"Edwards".....22201-4

A second six-bird match gave a division of the pool to Golcher, McMurchy, Nauman and Wagner, who each made clean scores, as follows:

W. J. Golcher.....12211-6	J. R. Jackson.....210011-4
H. Wagner.....11212-6	"Edwards".....21012-4
H. McMurchy.....22121-6	F. H. Bushnell.....100*2-3

C. A. Haight.....02212-5	E. A. Schultz.....01011-3
M. Unger.....11011-5

* Dead out of bounds.

In a third six-bird race McMurchy had the only straight score taking first money, whilst Golcher, Feudner and Haight with five each divided second and third moneys.

Back scores were shot by four men in two of the six-bird races. The scores made were: Unger 10, Bushnell 9, "Edwards" 8, E. A. Schultz 8.

Aside from the club race the feature of the day was a special match between Achilles Roos and Chas. Carr of Monterey. The race was at fifty birds, the loser to pay for a dinner and the pigeons. The race was close and interesting from the beginning. Carr finally proved the winner by a score of 41 to 40. After twenty-eight birds had been shot the match was finished in the club match. At the end of the twenty-fifth round Carr led by two birds, having scored 21 to 19. Roos gained one in the next twenty-five, scoring 21 to Carr's 20. Under the conditions the scores of both men were good. The detailed record of the match is as follows:

Roos.....2221221210110202222*0022*221121212101100111221-40
Carr.....1*21211221200122211102121111101101212*112*10212-41

* Dead out of bounds.

The next regular event on the Olympic grounds will be the club blue-rock shoot on Sunday, April 24.

Spoonbill Gun Club.

The opening of the blue-rock season by the Spoonbill Gun Club of Sacramento last Sunday at East Park was well attended. The grounds are in fine condition for the season. The first event was at ten targets. The scores were:

Eckhardt.....1111111101-9	Steigler.....1111001010-6

In a 25-bird match Nicolaus broke 7, Robertson 10, Smith 20, Rubstaller 12, Eckhardt 16, Soule 19, Chapman 12 and Peck 12.

Blue Rocks at Colma.

The regular monthly shoot of the South End Gun Club took place on the grounds at Colma last Sunday. There was a good attendance of members and their friends. Several practice and pool events took place; two events of considerable interest were the three men team shoots for dinners, as the losers evened up bad scores by buying generous dinners, etc., we refrain from giving the names. The scores made in the principal race of the day at 25 targets, the regular club shoot, were as follows:

Gilbert—Parmalee—Elliott.

Fred Gilbert has accepted the challenge of Frank Parmalee of Omaha to shoot for the possession of the Du Pont Trophy and $100 a side and named Thursday, April 14th, at 1 p. m. as the time and Watson's Burnside Park, Chicago, as the place.

His acceptance of J. A. R. Elliott's challenge to shoot for the Kansas City Star cup and $100 a side, was posted April 5th, and Tuesday, April 12th, at 1 p. m. was the time and Watson's Burnside Park the place named for the match.

Elliott refused to shoot on the 12th inst., giving the reason for his refusal that it will be inconvenient for him to shoot on that date. The rules governing challenges, however, specify that the one challenged shall, among other privileges, have the right to name the date, and consequently, it appears that Elliott will have to shoot on that date or not at all, unless he can give good reasons for his objection.

Los Angeles Gun Club.

The Los Angeles Gun Club has elected the following officers for the coming year: A. W. Bruner, President; J. B. Menasco, Vice-President; F. M. Lyon, Treasurer; Charles Van Valkenburg, Secretary and L. F. Schenk, James Matfield and John Schumacher directors. On the 23d and 24th of this month the club will hold a tournament, at which San Francisco, San Diego, Santa Barbara, Redlands, Riverside, San Bernardino, Pasadena and Santa Ana will be represented. Shooters generally are cordially invited to attend this semi-annual tournament; $500 in added money and prizes are a few of the good things hung up for shotgun devotees.

Every morning at 7 o'clock a little fleet of yachts can be seen on the horizon, sailing over the deep and unruddled blue. Some of the crafts contain guests of the hotel, in search of health or novelty, who get up before daylight in order to be off and catch the rising sun on the sea. They return at night tired out, with big strings of fish, and hungry as wolves.

Cattle Breeding in California.

THIRD PAPER.

It might be thought, or rather imagined, that cattle breeding in California is restricted to two breeds, viz.: beef and milk. That these are the two leading industries no one will deny, but it may be that there can be combinations of the two races that will be advantageous to the breeders of both. And still further, that cattle breeding in California can cover still broader grounds and capacity to work is a valuable characteristic.

Quite safe to say that had the working capacity of cattle been ignored the Eastern States would have been placed outside of civilization, at least had the labor performed by cattle been thrown aside, the country would not have been made habitable for many years after it was brought to play an important part in sustaining the population.

Now it may seem to those who concede all the valuable traits to the horses above, that it is idle to consider any other competitors, and the "patent ox" cannot figure, not even secure second or third place in the struggle for supremacy.

The true useful simplicity of all the arrangements would seem to warrant such a conclusion, and when a person advocates that oxen can be used to great advantage on the farm, he would be set aside as having little knowledge of the topics under discussion.

That oxen can be utilized in conducting the various operations on the farm, and that to great advantage is susceptible of the clearest proof. True, undoubtedly, that a person who had never seen oxen work, would place them in an inferior place to horses.

Quite as true, that for many uses on the farm, a yoke of well-broken oxen, are far superior to horses.

In the first place the expense. Five dollars the maximum for that part of the outfit, that is the yoke, and in parts of the country where oxen are worked a strip of timber lashed to their horns the only requirement for draught. The American yoke, however, is the best contrivance, pairs being the motive force, and if single animals are used a sort of harness must take the place of the yoke.

A few instances where one ox has done effective service.

In one case a bull, in place of being a sort of supernumerary on the farm, did good work.

An unruly fellow, breaking fences and causing very many tribulations to his owner. The owner came to the conclusion that work he should, and he was hitched to a stoneboat and made to gather the superfluous stones on a stony farm. Rebellious, of course, but ursa major soon came to the conclusion that a lumbering gallop was not a pleasant method of progression, much easier to walk and land his load where his driver directed.

But unquestionably the pair are far more effective, everything in the way of simplicity favoring the duo. The yoke put on in a few seconds and the tractable animals ready to accept the badge of servitude. The neck of the off-ox encircled by the bow, the yoke put on, bow pin put in place, and the near one of the team responding to the command "come under" cheerfully.

Little trouble, no buckling of straps, and when the vehicle has to be attached all that is required, if a cart, is to put in the iron pin which completes "the hitch," if harrow or plow is to be used, the hook of the chain placed in the clevis and ready for work. "Sluggish oxen" a term of opprobrium, not at all justified when the educator has fair capacity, and acres plowed in a day that the best horses could not beat, or, at least, by only a small margin.

Then when there are more working cattle on the farm than can be employed to advantage, there is a profitable transfer to the feeding stables. And now the question of crossing comes in and the up-to-date farmer may use his knowledge to advantage.

In hilly or mountainous regions Devons can be made profitable. Handy on plow, harrow, cart or sled, but size may be lacking, adaptability to acquire flesh inferior, and then the question of mingling of breeds becomes prominent.

Peter Coutts of Mayfield had a herd of Holsteins. Some of them were emasculated and broken and magnificent teams resulted. These were pure breeds, though it might be that other crosses could be incorporated with decided advantage. The cattle which played so important in the settlement of the Eastern States were a combination of breeds. Even as short a time ago as the early years of this century, what are now known as the improved breeds were only in their first stages. Necessity, however, compelled, so far as lay in the power of the early breeders, to produce a race that "filled the bill," and those very old folk who can recall the oxen of fifty or more years ago will bring to mind many splendid specimens of the class.

Maine claimed to have the very best, and the writer knew two yokes of oxen that were brought from the "pine tree State" to Northern Pennsylvania more than fifty years ago, and they were certainly worthy of the highest encomiums. Their driver used a "goad stick," a strip of ash or hickory with a brad in the end, and started in the furrows on the valley of the Tioga river, never the loss of a yard with the best teams of horses in the land. "Bull-whacking" no part of the lessons inculcated. Never a loud shout, his only talk no louder voiced than that used in ordinary conversation, and when night-time came just as fresh as their equine competitors. At all events, the question, Can oxen be substituted for horses in farm work? is worthy of consideration.

The Farm.

Making farms in the woods of the far East was the subject of one article not long ago. No other comparison can be made, as the labor of cutting down a dense forest, the placing of trees and branches in a shape to prevent them from encumbering the growers, getting rid of all the superfluous material cannot be paralleled.

When the possibilities of the prairie country became known, when the slow traveling intelligence that there were natural farms awaiting the occupancy of the husbandmen was appreciated, even then it was known that long and tiresome journeys were necessary to secure the advantages presented.

Even as far east as where the writer was brought up—northeastern Pennsylvania—many months of tiresome journey, with horses to haul the "prairie schooner" before the destination could be reached. The land of the setting sun a long way off. Part of the State of New York, all of Ohio, all of Indiana, all of Illinois between the land of promise and the starting place, when Iowa was the objective point.

And those who made the trip could not feel otherwise than the highest spirit of elevation when the land of their destination was reached. In place of heavy forests covering the whole country, wide prairies alternating with "timber lands" along the streams, and on the islands of the Mississippi and contributory streams. The immigrant from the East would naturally come to the conclusion that all that was required was to plow and sow, but older settlers would inform him that "his claim" could only be brought under proper subjection at one period of the year. When the grass on the rolling prairie was knee-high to the oxen that was the proper time for "breaking." If plowed earlier or later the sod would not rot, and the result, far better to leave it undisturbed.

A twenty-four-inch plow, with four yoke of oxen to haul it, was the favorite size, though larger and smaller did efficient work.

It would not do to turn the sod over as flat as the plowman of older countries regarded to be the only work to meet with approval, and it was left in truncated cones and broken patches and then the air and other agencies made the reduction complete.

May—the latter part of the month—June and July the time for effective breaking, and those who were anxious to secure immediate return for their labor could obtain a fair crop of "sod corn." But after that no end to the resources of the soil. A fair crop of wheat nearly assured when the seed was sown in October, and if the farmer did not want to take the risks of "winter-killing," then the ground in March would be just right for a spring crop, provided there was that modicum of March dust, said to be worth the ransom of a king, to enable the seed to be put in in proper order.

After that experience of the first year little in the way of making fairly profitable Iowa farming. A little more expenditure, it is true, than the axe which was the actual capital of the invader of the forest. Not much. He made his claim, did not even have to mark "homestead" on the broad acres he intended to farm. Not only a bold man, but one endowed with the smallest modicum of common sense, would realize to "jump that claim," would surely bring "retributive justice." But while the man who went into the big woods and took up some of the unoccupied acres, the settler on the prairie did the same thing, practically. The breaking could be done for a reasonable amount per acre and not outside of the means of the early settler to accomplish that.

He could, with one yoke of cattle or one span of horses break up a certain amount of ground and even the comparatively diminutive twelve-inch plow lay the foundation for the farm.

An ideal country that of Iowa fifty years ago. No end of pasturage in the summer months, no lack of forage, millions of acres covered with the most nutritious grasses, easily cured into hay. The winters hard, it is true, and that demanded protection unknown to this favored climate.

Making farms in the woods that covered nearly all of the eastern part of this hemisphere were arduous undertakings, even those in the prairie districts brought more or less tribulation, while the "glorious climate" of California overcomes a great part of the difficulties.

A few acres here can be made so productive that the small farmer has the same advantages as the larger; it may be has more than compensating advantages.

The Big Gamblers.

It may sound queer to the average reader to claim that farmers are the biggest gamblers in the world. In the first place ready to take chances that the elements will favor them, never for a moment considering that they should "hedge" against prospective chances. "A bet is never well laid until it is properly hedged," has secured the endorsement of the highest speculative authority in the world. That means that however high the apparent chances of a horse to win, and when the speculator has an opportunity to guard against losses, he should not neglect to place his investments hereafter that would make them safe.

Conceding that the prospects are now decidedly favorable for a dry year, that such a contingency only arises one year in three, why not provide for that possible event by providing against the off chances?

California farmers who will govern themselves by this sure rule, that if one dry year prevails in ten, they will be ready to meet the requirements by laying up an extra supply. If not needed in the next year, it is an insurance, a wise insurance, against contingencies that are likely to come up, but yet an act of wisdom to provide for that one chance. If not needed in the next year, the supply will be on hand, and with that to fall back upon no necessity for fearing a famine.

Simply this: if a farmer has a sufficient supply under ordinary circumstances—to feed a hundred cattle or horses, then let him base his calculations on ninety per cent, his reserve being enough to tide him over the year that may prove to require the additional supplies. Not likely that our farmers will be sufficiently provident to protect themselves, and yet when these kind of studies are brought into a prominence, that is likely to happen, gamblers in farm products may realize that the better course is to lessen adverse chances.

The White Flag.

However acceptable the omen may be to those who are anxious that "bloody war" shall not break out, when the white flag surmounts the upper story of the Mills' Building, there is a feeling of despondency on those who are interested in horses and horse matters. And not without reason, though still there is the glorious hope that the weather prophet may be out of the way in his calculations, and that in place of the brazen sky being indicative of dryness, that the next twenty-four hours will show a change. A happy change, for all that is necessary now to insure prosperity to a good part of California, are April showers. More than showers, perhaps, a fall of one-quarter of the amount that has fallen here before in this genial month sufficient to make good crops of hay, and with that assured, nothing else in the way of prosperity.

Sound Sense Gamblers.

A "plunger" may win by venturing a little money against a goodly sum. It might be that the outlook was so favorable that a hundred against ten could be laid with still longer odds in favor of the layer, and for all that a reasonable person would be justified in insuring against loss. In designating farmers as the big gamblers of the world, the charge is justified by the well-known fact that when a farmer puts a crop in he has an overwhelming belief that Providence will be with him. Better far to speculate that the season is "going against him," and that, a small amount of common sense would urge to provide against such contingencies.

Therefore while crediting farmers as being the big gamblers of the world, it may be well to recommend them to speculate on surer grounds.

Crop Prospects.

The following crop report, issued by Director Hammon Tuesday last, shows that a lack of rain is felt throughout the interior of the State, and that in some sections a total loss of crops will be the result. The hot wave, unusual at this season, that has prevailed since Mr. Hammon's report only serves to intensify the situation, and as the time has now passed in which rain can be expected to fall the outlook is hardship for stock-raisers and high prices for country produce, cereals and fruits for the summer.

Shasta County—Light showers not sufficient to benefit. Grass drying up. Rain needed badly.

Sacramento County—Crops holding their own. No north wind to amount to anything. Good rain fell on 5th. Irrigation necessary to permit cultivation in many vineyards.

Butte County—Lemon and apple trees in bloom and occasional orange blossoms. Rain of 5th, though light, was made much use of, by harrowing ground already plowed.

Tehama County—Wheat looks well, but it is thought that unless rain soon comes crop will be light; fruit not injured as much as first thought. Severe norther on Monday.

Glenn County—North wind continues; prospects for crops very doubtful.

Yolo County—Heavy north winds at end of week. Grain and vegetation suffering for rain; irrigating orchards. Fair crop of pears and prunes anticipated.

Solano County—North winds. Grain suffering for rain. Prospects discouraging. Do not expect half the usual crop. Rain much needed.

San Joaquin County—Grain in rolling land is standing drought much better than that on low or black lands. Heavy rains would insure crops in some localities; in others it is too late for rain to save grain.

Merced County—Warm growing weather. Grain doing well. Need more rain.

Stanislaus County—Winter sown grain beyond help; rain may help summer fallow. Outlook still favorable for crops inside canal limits.

Kern County—Favorable weather for growing grain, which is in fine condition.

Fresno County—All crops except budding grapes suffered from drought during the past week. Farmers irrigating; shearing finished this week. Grain doing well in canal districts.

Kings County—Grain is past redemption. No apricots; some peaches and plums; more prunes and an abundance of pears and apples.

Tulare County—Warmer. Discouraging for grain. Shearing on.

Sonoma County—Some rain helped grain and hay. Prunes not hurt so badly as reported. Farmers plowing orchards and vineyards and planting corn. Hay and grain looks well. Prunes, pears and apples all right thus far.

Napa County—Rain on 5th helped grain and grass very much. Farmers planting corn; ground works well. Pears and prunes promise good yield; prunes, apples and pears but little damaged by frost.

Alameda County—Farmers think fruit crop will be small. Prospects for vegetables not very good so far.

Lake County—Rain on 6th beneficial to all crops but not enough to help vines and trees. Previous estimates of damage by frost correct; in some localities prunes have been damaged though not in blossom. Rain needed.

San Mateo County—Crop outlook very poor; prunes will be a full crop, also cherries; other early fruit much damaged.

Santa Cruz County—Crops and feed in good shape but will require rain soon.

Santa Clara County—Apricots not a total failure; in some places there will be a tenth of a crop. Peaches not so badly injured; prunes little injured. Unless more rain, little hope of maturing fruit crop on land not irrigated. Every means of irrigating called into use. Grain on high lands beginning to suffer.

Monterey County—Crops failing fast. Need rain badly.

San Benito County—Feed dried up and grain drying. San Luis Obispo County—Grain and grass about done. Cattle shipped away for feed. Dairy interests in distress.

Los Angeles County—Bassett. Grain in bad shape. Some corn planted. Duarte. Cereal crops will not be worth cutting unless rain falls soon; deciduous fruits look well. Los Angeles. Fruit of all kinds looking well; cutting what hay there is. Palmdale. Very poor prospect for grain or hay. Pomona. Crops suffering for rain. San Fernando. Dry north winds. Prospects for hay and grass very poor without more rain; deciduous fruits looking well.

Ventura County—Withering, curled-up blades of barley show unmistakable signs of a failure, but on irrigated lands looks healthy. Stock being moved. Oranges and lemons doing well; hay and grain a certain failure.

Orange County—Fruit trees looking well; small grain suffering.

San Bernardino County—Continued dry weather. Unfavorable reports from whole section as to outlook for grain. But little hay will be made.

Riverside County—Dry and warmer. Deciduous fruit all killed. Grain and hay crop short; outlook for oranges good.

San Diego County—No rain and all hope for hay and grain gone; very poor prospect for apricots but good for peaches and prunes. At San Diego local rain on 5th.

Los Angeles Summary. Grain and hay a failure, account of continued dry weather, except on irrigated land. Oranges blossoming freely; fair prospect for deciduous fruits in most places except apricots and early varieties.

Eureka Summary—Copious warm rains have overcome bad effect of previous frosts and cold north winds on grain and grass; fruit advancing; vegetables just beginning growth. Crop prospects good.

Agricultural Notes.

It is said that only three per cent. of farmers fail, while only three per cent. of men in other lines of business escape failure. The man who owns a farm and sticks to it is certain of an eventful profit. At least, there is no farmer of good intelligence and good health anywhere who cannot make a good living for himself and family; he is safer than the banker, the merchant, the manufacturer or the railway manager.

The present unprecedented season of drouth has resulted in an unusual demand for forage crops of every sort. The grain-hay crop will be exceedingly short and alfalfa hay is fetching figures higher than known for many years, says the Fresno Expositor.

While farm products will fall far short of anything known for year past, there is now a chance for farmers to make money by planting forage crops in the irrigated districts, as there will be plenty of water by the time it is needed to mature them, and there is no question but they will find a ready market at good prices.

Farmers, therefore, need not hesitate to use all available space for the tillage of corn fodder, sugar beets, Egyptian corn, sorghum, field peas, pumpkins, Jerusalem artichokes and all plants that may be utilized for horses, cattle and hog feed. If the farmers of irrigated lands will but go to work at once and in earnest they may do much yet to make the season a profitable one to them.

Our San Luis Obispo correspondent under the date, April 13th, writes: For the past two days a hot wave prevailed here. On Monday this section was visited by a sandstorm, which dried out the ground. To-day it has been extremely warm all over the county. On the hills the pasture has curled up and in many places everything is parched and brown. Pasture was already very short, but the past two days have alarmed stockmen and many of them are preparing to move their cattle to other counties.

The fruit crop does not seem to be damaged yet, and along the coast the grain is still fresh, but it is badly injured in other sections. This is the hottest wave ever known in this county at this time of the year, and it is feared that it will continue.

California Cattle Going East.

Cattle and sheep are leaving California in droves. The cattle quarantine against the central and southern parts of the State has been sufficiently modified to permit the removal of fully 100,000 head of stock from the drought-stricken sections. The value of the imperiled stock approximates $2,000,000. A much larger sum is involved when thousands of sheep are taken into consideration. Nevada has refused to harbor any of the animals, even when properly inspected, on the ground that its own feed is short; but it has agreed not to interfere with interstate shipments to points beyond its eastern line.

The Nebraska, Utah and Wyoming authorities, it is understood, have agreed to allow shipments into those States where proper inspection against disease is made. The overland railroads have also consented to make half the ordinary rates for stock sent East for pasturage. In consequence arrangements are now being made for the shipment of many heavy trainloads.

Many cattle and sheep will be sent to the northern part of this State and to Oregon, but other thousands will be pastured in Utah and the States east of there.

One big shipment of 18,500 sheep is on its way East. It comprises five trains. Each train has thirty-seven cars, and in every car there are 100 sheep. Another shipment of 15,000 sheep is on the way to Chicago, the owners having made a favorable sale to several big buyers there. The railroad people think 70,000 sheep will be shipped East within three weeks. Cattle and sheep cars are being collected and hurried here from all parts of the West.

Some 5,000 cattle will be ready for shipment to-day or to-morrow to Utah, Colorado and Nebraska. This one consignment of stock will require fifteen trains. Each train will have about eighteen cars, and there will be twenty head of cattle to the car. The railroad authorities are making arrangements for sixty trains of eighteen cars each, so as to handle a vast quantity of cattle within the next two weeks. If all of these trains are used, it will mean the shipment of 20,000 head of stock to points east of Nevada.

Should there be a good rainfall within a day or two, there will be a decrease in the contemplated shipments.

Wool Buyers Shy.

Fresno County wool growers are preparing for a contest with the San Francisco buyers. The wool buyers have formed a combination and propose to transact their business on a commission basis hereafter. The growers have received notice that no buyers will be in the field this season, says the Fresno Republican.

Such firms as Christy & Wise, Dennigan & Son, Jake Wolner and Moses & Co., have entered the combination which comprises the majority of the leading wool buyers on the coast. Representatives of the combine were in Fresno a few days ago explaining to the wool growers the plan which they argued would be beneficial to the producer as well as to the middle man. It was positively stated that no buyers will be in the field this season and that all wool sold will be through consignments. The representatives claimed that the producer would secure better prices by consigning, but their arguments did not convince the growers, who have witnessed the demoralization of the raisin industry by the commission men.

The wool men believe that a combination to rob them of the greater portion of their fleece is planned. The commission men want to secure control of the season's output and pay the growers whatever they deem sufficient, the producers claim. This has been the case with raisins and if the commission system is adopted in the wool business it will be the same with wool.

Usually there are from twenty-five to thirty wool buyers in Fresno during the spring clip. Representing competing firms, there was considerable rivalry in securing a share of the wool product. This afforded the growers an opportunity to obtain fair prices for their wool. The buying season commences about the 15th of March and lasts for three or four months. No buyers have appeared in the local market this season and the growers are planning a fight to combine and secure cash rates as a result.

There is no inclination on the part of any of the growers to part with their wool without securing its equivalent in cash. Much indignation is expressed that the buyers of San Francisco, whom they have dealt with for years, should now combine to flitch them out of their just dues.

William Helm, when asked for his views on the matter, said that while he did not care to talk much in regard to the subject, the evident purpose of the combine is to place growers at the mercy of the buyers. Loans at extortionate rates of interest will be made on consignments, and after several months of delays and vexations incidental to such methods of doing business the grower will find that if anything is coming to him it is mere pittance. Mr. Helm says that the growers are unanimously opposed to the plan and will hold their wool until the buyers come with cash in hand. The local banks have given the growers assurances that advances will be made on their product and this will enable them to hold out against the combine.

Sheep and Wool Notes.

A Nebraska paper says: Stockmen generally agree that goats and sheep will not cross, but Hon. Watson Tyson says it is a mistake. Last Friday a ewe on his farm had twins—one an Angora goat, the other a lamb. The latter died, but the goat is frisky and well.

In Australia and New Zealand, the two greatest sheep-raising countries of the world, drouth has existed for so long and to such an extent that it has virtually ruined the sheep industry. The latest reports are to the effect that the thermometer ranged as high as 160 degrees and half the sheep in those countries were already dead and the herders were killing and skinning the rest as fast as possible to save the pelts. After such a disaster Australia and New Zealand will be slow about restoring their lost flocks. Indeed the common experience of man teaches us that for a period of years at least the sheep growing industry will lie dormant in those countries. The demand of the world's markets for wool will grow, as it ought to, and every indication points to a good market for wool. Besides this, the consumption of mutton in the United States is increasing at the rate of about 15 per cent. a year. It now takes from twelve to fourteen million sheep and lambs a year to supply the American demand. With the foreign demand increasing it will be seen that a constantly growing number of sheep and lambs must be provided, and as we are not now importing any sheep this increased demand must be met by our home breeders. The time is ripe for our Western and Northwestern States to introduce the sheep industry on a still larger scale.

Pure breeding has proved its worth, and no animal is more quickly impressed and improved by crossing with good blood than sheep.

Reports from Southern Montana are to the effect that several sheep and cattle growers are buying great tracks of railroad land, a notable purchase made recently being that of George Pierrie, who has secured 32 sections, being all the railroad land in two townships. W. A. Hedges has also secured some valuable railroad land.

L. Davis, of Lafontaine, Ind., had a freak in the form of a lamb which weighed twenty-one pounds at birth. The ewe gave birth to twin lambs, one of which was the normal weight—six pounds—and the other was the monstrosity, which weighed at its birth more than one-fourth the average weight of a grown sheep. Both the lambs died.

The total number of sheep in the State is now estimated at more than 1,000,000 above last year's figures, and the average price is placed at $2.50 per head, against $1.95 in 1897 and $1.60 in 1896. The highest average price of sheep per head since 1890 was reported January 1, 1893, at $2.66.

On the 9th inst. an agent of Miller & Lux drove 700 mutton sheep from Alexander Valley, Sonoma county, purchased of Young, Gird & Jacobs, and from L. J. Hall another hundred or so was taken. The price paid is said to be $4 per head. On the 10th inst., a man from Humboldt county came into Alexander Valley to buy sheep. He wanted 6,000, but probably the price asked was too steep, as he passed further south.

Sheep men in Northern California are busy sheering. It is reported the season is fully fifteen days earlier than usual.

The Examiner, Lake County, Org., says: Alex. and Geo. Reid are in from the desert. They report the sheep in fine condition and no loss during the winter.

The Examiner, Lakeview, Org., says: Douglas Cone of Red Bluff bought 20,000 head of sheep in Southern California at 25 cents per head. There is a drouth in California, and stock of all kinds are perishing.

[We have yet failed to receive news of any sheep selling in California at 25 cents per head, drought or no drought, and suggest that the above item was printed through an oversight by our esteemed contemporary—Ed. B. & S.]

A train of 25 car loads of sheep passed through Reno on the evening of the 11th inst. en route East.

Mr. C. E. Sherlock is one of Lake County's (Oregon) enterprising stockmen who believes the sheep industry will continue to be a profitable one and that the wool sales this spring will be up to the average of last season, if not better. Mr. Sherlock has purchased from E. O. Lamb 2,000 head of sheep, paying for them $3.50 per head. The band is to be delivered before lambing.

Poultry Notes.

A large red comb on a hen is nearly always an indication that she is a good layer.

As a general rule a hen that is inclined to fatten readily is not a profitable layer.

Very few male birds can fertilize every egg from a pen of good and steady layers.

The safest plan is to keep ducks away from the water until they are reasonably well feathered.

There would be less complaint of infertile eggs if the breeding fowls were given more exercise.

A close sitter can generally be depended upon to take good care of her brood when they hatch.

You can usually depend upon the hardness of all fowls that feather slowly especially after moulting.

Guineas have the dark meat and the peculiar richness and gamey flavor that many like so well in fowls.

The rooster should be low, especially for all heavy breeds and be put in the warmest part of the house.

Old hens lay but little if any in winter, and sparingly at any time. Keep only such as are wanted for mothers.

With all young fowl if a good growth is secured it is very essential to give them good nourishment from the start.

Ducks are easily hatched and if properly managed are easily raised usually much more so than chickens or turkeys.

To get uniform chicks the fowls themselves should possess uniformity of regards color, plumage and age, as well as size and markings.

In order to secure the best success with geese it is very essential to give them a house which is large and airy enough with plenty of clean bedding.

There are said to be more Leghorn poultry breeders within twenty-five miles of Petaluma, Cal., than in any other spot of equal size in the country.

A few good hens, well cared for, will raise more chickens next summer than if a great flock is crowded closely in a filthy and unhealthy poultry house. Weed out from them all the old hens and all the young stock that is sickly, unthrifty, or in any way undesirable. This is the only way to keep up a steady improvement in the quality and profitableness of your poultry.

Dairy Notes.

An experienced milk farmer gives the following as the correct way to milk a cow: Milk the two fore teats first, but not quite finishing them, then take the hind ones and nearly finish them. Next finish the fore teats. It will be found there is practically none left in the hind ones. The bag should be emptied as soon as possible. Quick milking saves time and is better for the cow.

There is always some restless adventurer in search of some plan to cheat nature, which must always prove a worthless experiment. We now hear of the "Bearden patent for butter making" by which butter recharged with cream or milk will produce a combination as valuable as as butter and of a greatly increased quantity. This process has been investigated by the department of agriculture, and has not proved a success, as the process itself breaks up the butter granules and incorporates material which furnishes food for injurious bacteria and results necessarily in rancid and salty butter not fit for table use. The solids other than the butter fat in the milk can be taken from the skim milk and butter milk in other product much better suited for food. Better give each article simple and pure, and allow the consumer to do his own mixing.

Hard on San Joaquin Stock.

Henry Miller, the stockman, in an interview on the quarantine regulations, recently exposed by the State of Nevada, says: "It is no exaggeration to say that 75,000 head of stock ought to be moved immediately to the northern part of the State and into Oregon and Nevada to prevent danger of their starving because of the dry spell and lack of feed in the central and southern parts of the State. We find we cannot move the stock because of a foolish quarantine law which holds that from January 15th to November 15th of each year, two-thirds of the State is effected with splenic fever. This law is absolutely stupid. California is one of the healthiest places in the world for stock. We have no Texas, or splenic fever here to speak of, and should have no quarantine law, save proper inspection by county and State boards of health. No place in the world has had less of this fever than the country comprising Oregon, Nevada and this State."

Good Prices for Nevada Cattle.

A bunch of Nevada cattle shipped by Keogh Bros. was sold for a good price in Denver on the 4th inst. There were 1,043 cattle in the shipment and they were mostly steers, yearlings, twos and threes, with some cows in the bunch. The figures on the sale were not made public, but amounted to nearly $30,000, and is the largest single bunch sold in the stockyards this season. The prompt manner in which this large shipment was disposed of in the open market speaks more than columns of words for the strength of this market.

Diseased Cattle Will Not Be Shipped.

Instructions have been issued by the Executive Department at Sacramento, this week, to the district attorneys of southern counties from which cattle heretofore in quarantine, are about to be transported to northern ranges, calling their attention to the statute of 1893, which makes it a criminal offense to transfer an infected beast to a locality where the disease may be communicated to healthy animals. This was done in view of the general protest made by the northern cattlemen against the migration of southern herds which they claim are affected with the Texas fever. The Executive fully realizes this, but considers that it would be an injustice to compel the owners of healthy herd to keep them in the south, and at the same time a crime, to permit infected cattle to come north. With this in view he is determined that the law shall be enforced and every animal shipped from the south shall be thoroughly examined before leaving the ranges. He believes that in this way and with the assistance of the district attorneys, to whom instructions were issued, justice will be done the southern cattlemen and at the same time northern ranges will be protected from the disease.

Cattle Notes.

A special train of thirty cars loaded with cattle passed through Napa on the 9th inst. The cattle were taken to Calistoga, thence to be driven over to the green pastures of Lake county. They were brought from the counties from near the State line of Nevada. Each car held about twenty cattle and the train contained six hundred head.

The movements of cattle and sheep from the dry south to the northern pastures of Lake and Mendocino counties still continue. A band of 4,000 sheep came through Santa Rosa on the 10th inst; on their way north.

Our Salinas correspondent writes as follows: Over a hundred and fifty carloads of cattle have been shipped north by this point during the past ten days, the owners taking advantage of the "Starvation Rate" given by the S. P. Cor for transporting their herds to pasture in the northern part of the State.

It is apparent, says the Telegram, that California will have a very dull year, owing to the short rainfall. Feed for cattle is very scarce, and grain and hay will be high. Oregon will have its usual good crops, from the present outlook, and will naturally reap a benefit from California's misfortune.

The result of the meeting called by the Governor of Nevada at Carson, Nev., on Tuesday last, is that the quarantine regulations, as previously imposed upon all cattle coming from California, shall be strictly enforced. This means the exclusion of our stock from that State and our growers will have to look to other States to feed their cattle.

J. W. Browning, of Grand Island, who recently rented 12,000 acres of tule land in Yuba County, is now in the southern part of the State buying cattle to stock the range.

THE MARKETS.

Reports of Butchertown, Western Meat Company Refrigerated Meats, Local Wool, Hides, Tallow, Butter and Cheese, and Eastern Cattle Markets by Telegraph.

EASTERN LIVESTOCK MARKETS.

CHICAGO, April 15.—Prices average about 10 cents lower except for prime fat cattle. Sheep—Receipts, none. Market unchanged.

BUTCHERTOWN.

The local beef market has ruled very steady throughout the week and we have no change to report in prices. Towards the early part of the week, owing to the unexpected warm weather, wholesalers were inclined to somewhat shade prices, but this only lasted long enough to work off their surplus killing. Anticipating a continuance, they were very conservative in their slaughtering and just killed sufficient for their customers' requirements. This resulted in the market quickly recovering itself and prices have ruled much the same as reported in our issue of the 9th inst. There is plenty of cattle coming to market of all grades for the present, but dealers are of the opinion that with the large amount of our grass cattle leaving the State that a shortage of good beef is what will confront them very shortly.

CALVES—There is a good demand all around for calves and prices have been well sustained all along the line; dairy stock has not been as plentiful and prices for this grade is quite firm. Our quotations, however, are same as reported last week.

MUTTON—The market for good mutton continues firm with every indication of an advance. Several thousand head of sheep are leaving the State weekly for Arizona, Wyoming and Montana, where good pasturage is assured, which means that we may be forced to draw our supplies this year from those States and territories, and with freights to be added both ways means that mutton will most assuredly advance in the near future.

LAMBS—Have arrived plentifully this week and though no reduction in prices are noticeable the market has the appearance of being slightly easier.

HOGS—The market has been dragging throughout the week. Buyers show no disposition whatever to do business except in a hand to mouth style. Packers and dealers would like to command the market but are unable to have any large amount of stock to feed on their hands at the prevailing price of feed. Our advice to raisers in the interior is to hold their hogs at home for the present or not ship any more than they can help. This will undoubtedly have a tendency to strengthen the market, or if nothing else keep prices at present figures. We quote the following, which are rates from slaughterers to retailers:

Steers—First quality, very choice, 7c; Steers, No. 1, 6½ to 6¾c; Steers, No. 2, 6 to 6¼c; Steers, No. 3, 5 to 5¼c. Extra choice Cows and Heifers 6c; Good to Fair, 5½ to 5¾c; Bulls, stags and old Cows, 4 to 5c; Calves, choice range, large, 6 to 6½c; Dairy, 6½ to 7½c; Wethers, first quality, 8 to 8½c; Wethers, second quality, 7 to 7½c; Ewes, first quality, 8 to 8½c; Ewes, second quality, 7 to 7½c; Lamb, yearling, 8½ to 9c; Lamb, (this Spring), 10 to 12c; Hogs, dressed hard, 6½ to 7c; Hogs, live, hard, medium, 4½ to 4¾c; Hogs, live, hard, heavy, 3½ to 4c.

REFRIGERATED DRESSED MEATS.

Wholesale market, Sixth and Townsend, S. F.
Beef carcasses, prime, 6½ to 6¾c; beef carcasses, second quality 6 to 6¼c; No. 1 Cows and Heifers, 5½ to 6c; No. 2 Cows and Heifers, 5¼ to 5½c; Mutton, Wethers, carcasses, 8½c; Mutton, Wethers, carcasses, No. 2, 8c; Mutton Ewes, carcasses, No. 1, 8c; Mutton, Ewes, carcasses, No. 2, 7½c; Lamb, (this year's Spring), 10c; Veal, light, 6 to 7c; Veal, heavy, 5½ to 6½c; Pork, carcasses, 6½c.

HIDES AND SKINS.

There is nothing of any note to report as regards the local hide and skin market, only the select grades of hides are bringing our full figures and there appears to be every indication on behalf of tanners to break prices. Pelt is in moderate demand at quotations.

TALLOW.—Is finding sale at our figures with a moderate demand.
WET SALTED HIDE—Heavy Steers, over 56 lbs, 10c, culis, 9c; Medium, 48 to 56 lbs, 9c, culis 8c; Light Steer, under 48 lbs, 9c, culis 8c; Heavy Cows, over 50 lbs, 9c, culis 8c; Light Cows, 30 to 50 lbs, 9c, culis 8c; Sags, 6c, culis 5c; Kips, 3c, culis 2c; Veal, 3c, culis 2c; Calf, 10c, culis 9c; Dry Hides, 16c, culis 13c; Dry Kip and Veal, 14 to 15c, culis 11c; Dry Calf, 18 to 20c, culis 15 to 16c.

TAILS—Large size 35 cents per dozen.
PEITS AND SHEARLINGS—20 to 30c each; do, short, 40 to 70c each; do, medium, 70 to 90c each; do, long wool, 90 to 110c each; Deer Skins, summer, 2 to 30c; do, good medium, 20c; do, winter, 10c per lb; Goat Skins, 20 to 37½c apiece for prime to perfect; 10 to 20c for damaged and 10 to 15c for kids.
TALLOW.—We quote: No. 1, Rendered, 30 to 35c per lb; No. 2, 20 to 25c; Grease, 2c per lb.

WOOL REPORT.

Our home market has every appearance of dragging and advices from the East report trade as inactive on the Atlantic seaboard. Spring wool is coming forward more liberally, but receipts are not as heavy compared with the same time last year. Up to date no actual values on this year's clip have been established, and the bulk of dealers are waiting to make price quotations as there are more and more an indication as to what prices are at the present writing than actual market quotations.

FALL WOOLS—Southern Coast Lambs, 7 to 8c; San Joaquin Lambs, 7 to 8c; Humboldt and Mendocino, 14 to 15c.

SPRING WOOL—Nevada Spring—Light and choice, 11 to 13c. Oregon Spring—Eastern, choice, 11 to 14c; Eastern, poor, 9 to 11c; Valley, choice, 11 to 16c; Valley, low grade, 12 to 13c.

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

Trading in the local butter market has been rather slow throughout the week, but as the supply has in no way exceeded the demand, values have been well sustained. The late warm weather has caused quite a quantity of soft butter to arrive, and as this stock cannot be packed, this quality has gone off at shaded rates. Dairy butter has been selling well, and closely followed by creamery in price. A few small sales of extra stock are reported at a fraction above our quotations, but this cannot be said to constitute market values. We quote as follows:
Butter, 17 to 18c.

CHEESE—There is every indication of a better tone in the market, though values have not advanced. The demand has been fairly good throughout the week, and prospects look better for an advance in prices. We quote: California per lb, Cheddars, 10 to 11c; Flats, mild, new, 9½ to 10c; fair to good, 8½ to 9c; Young America, 10 to 11c; Eastern, New York Cream, Cheddars and Flats 11 to 13½c; Western, 11½ to 12½c.

EGGS—The egg market has been over supplied throughout the week, which has had a tendency to somewhat weaken prices. The large quantities of the Eastern product now on hand will have to be worked off and until these accumulations are disposed of there is every likelihood of our home product being neglected and weak. We quote: California Ranch, 13½ to 14c; California store, 12½ to 13c; Eastern 13c; Duck eggs 16.

POULTRY.—Arrivals of several carloads of Eastern poultry have in no way interfered with the California article and prices have been well sustained for nearly all grades of poultry, the only weakness noticeable was for broilers. We quote: Old Roosters, per doz, $3.75 to $4; young, $2 to $3; Fryers, $6.50 to $7; Broilers, large, $1 to $1.50; small, $1.50 to $2; Hens, $1 to $1.50; Ducks, old, doz, $3.50 to $4.50; young, $6 to $7; Turkeys, live, Hens, per lb, 12 to 13c; Gobblers, 10 to 11c; dressed, per lb, 12 to 15c; Geese, pair, $1.50 to $1.75; Goslings, pair, $2 to $2.50; Pigeons, young, $1.75 to $2; do, old, $1.25.

Game—Per doz: Young Roosters, $8; Ducks, $5; Turkeys, per lb, 11 to 13c; Geese, pair, $2.

GAME—Per doz: Brant, $1 to $1.25; Fray Geese, $1.50 to $1.75; White, 50c; Hare, 75c to $1; Rabbits 75c to $1.

WHEAT—The rise in prices has completely stopped the demand for shipping, and the only inquiry is for local consumptive account. Tides water quotations are as follows: 1.57½ to 1.60 for No. 1, 1.52½ for choice and 1.55 to 1.70 for extra choice for milling.

HAY—Oat Hay has gone up again. There is no longer any Stock Hay on the market. (Ex-car in round lots)—Wheat, $21 to $25 per ton; Wheat and Oat, $20 to $25; Oat, $18 to $20; Barley, $18 to $21; compressed Wheat, $21 to $25; compressed Oat, $18 to $21; Alfalfa, $14 to $16.25; Clover, $14 to $15.

STRAW has made a sharp advance, it now being used for feed in the country. 60 to 70c per bale.

BRAN—$21 to $25 per ton.

MIDDLINGS—$23 to $25 per ton.

FEEDSTUFFS—Rolled Barley, $30 to $31 per ton; Oatmeal Meal at the mill, $31 to $35; Jobbing, $32 to $35; Oatmeal Cake, $34 to $35; Cottonseed Meal, $28 to 30 per ton; Cornmeal, $24; Cracked Corn, $24 to $25.

FLOUR—Net cash prices are: Family extras, $5.25 to $5.35; Bakers' extras, $5 to $5.10 per barrel. Superfine nominal.

MILLSTUFFS—Prices in sack are follows, usual discount to the trade: Graham Flour, $3 per 100 lbs.; Rye Flour, $2.75 per 100; Rice Flour, $6; Cornmeal, $2.50; extra cream Cornmeal, $4.25; Oatmeal, $4; Oat Groats, $4.25; Hominy, $3.25 to $3.50; Buckwheat Flour, $4 to $4.25; Cracked Wheat, $3.75; Farina, $4.75; Whole Wheat Flour, $3.25; Rolled Oats (barrels), $5.80 to $6.20; In sacks, $5.60 to $6; Pearl Barley, $4.75; Split Peas, $4.25; Green Peas, $4.50 per 100 lbs.

BEANS—Bays, $2.90 to $2.95; Small Whites, $1.50 to $1.60; Large Whites, $1.50 to $1.60; Pinks, $2.50 to $2.65; Reds, $2.50; Blackeye, $2.75 to $2.85; Butters, $1.40 to $1.60; Limas, $2.35 to $2.40; Pea, $1.50 to $1.60; Red Kidneys, $2 to $3 per cwt.

SEEDS—Brown Mustard, $2 to $3 per cwt.; Yellow Mustard, $3 to $3.15; Flax, 2.35; Canary Seed, 2½ to 2¾c per lb; Alfalfa, 3 to 6c; Rape, 2½ to 3c; Hemp, 2½ to 3c; Timothy, 10 to 15c.

DRIED PEAS—Niles, $1.60 to $1.85; Green, $1.75 to $2.00 per cwt.

POTATOES—Early Rose, 30 to 35c; River Reds, 50 to 60c; River Burbanks, 50 to 60c per sack; Oregon Burbanks, 55 to 65c; Petaluma Burbanks, 50 to 70c; Sweet Potatoes, 75 to $1.10 for Merced; new Potatoes, 10 to 12c per cwt.

ONIONS—Common, $1.75 to $2.25; choice, $2.50 to $2.85 per cwt; cut onions 50c to $1.25 per sack.

VEGETABLES—Asparagus, $1.75 for extra large, $1.25 to $1.50 per box for No. 1 and 60c to $1.00 for No. 2; Rhubarb, 25c to 30c per box for good, and 85 to $1.00 for extra choice; Alameda Green Peas, 75 to $1.25 per sack; Dried Peppers, 6 to 7c per lb; Dried Okra 12½c; Cabbage, 65 to 75c per cwt; Carrots, 25 to 50c per sack; Garlic, 8 to 10c per lb; Cucumbers, 40c to $1 per dozen; Mexican Tomatoes, 75 to $1.50 per box.

EVAPORATED VEGETABLES—Potatoes, sliced raw, 12c per lb in lots of 25 lbs; sliced dehydrated, 16 to 18c; granulated raw, 13c; Onions, 60c; Carrots, old, 13c; new, 18c; Cabbage, 30c; Sweet Potatoes, 30c; Turnips, 25c; String Beans, 30c; Tomatoes, 50c.

DRIED FRUIT—Prunes, carload lots, 3¼ to 4¼c for 40 to 50's, 3¼ to 3½c for 50 to 60's, 2¼ to 3¼c for 60 to 70's, 2¼ to 2½c for 70 to 80's, 2¼ to 2½c for 80 to 90's, ¼ to ¾c for 90 to 100's; Peaches, 3 to 5c; fancy, 5¼ to 6c; peeled, 10 to 12½c; Apricots, 5 to 6c for Royals and 4 to 5c for good to fancy Markets; Evaporated Apples, 6 to 7c; sun-dried, 4 to 5c; Black Figs, in sacks, 2 to 2½c; Plums, 4 to 4½c for pitted and 10 to 12c for unpitted; bleached Plums, 5 to 5½c; Nectarines, 4 to 5c for prime to fancy; Peas, 2½ to 4½c for quarters and 3 to 5½c for halves, according to color, etc.

Arizona Laws for California Sheep.

There seems to be considerable inquiry as to the likelihood of California being able to ship part of her sheep to Arizona this spring. It is made absolutely necessary owing to the drouth there, to relieve the ranges of that state, and Arizona is looked upon as the most likely outlet for her flocks, says the Southwestern Stockman.

A large owner near Hollister, Santa Barbara county, has made inquiries as to the Arizona laws on the subject, stating that he can obtain, or has obtained the necessary range in Cochise county near Benson, and would like to ship his flock there, but before doing so he wants to know just what will be required of him.

He frankly acknowledges that their sheep are troubled to some extent with the scab, but they do not contemplate moving until after the spring clip, and after which the sheep will be dipped, he does not consider that the matter of disease will be a barrier to their admission to Arizona.

We are also informed that Messrs. Sullivan & Mills, of Seligman have purchased 10,000 head of sheep in California, for shipment to their range in the vicinity of Seligman. These will be shipped in this spring.

Bearing on this subject, it is given out that a sanitary board will stand flatly on the law as it appears on our statute books, which is sufficiently clear, and at the same time sufficiently strict to successfully keep disease from being brought into the territory by the introduction of flocks from California or elsewhere.

The statute governing such cases says that on entering any country a flock will have to be inspected by the sheep inspector of that county, which inspection is made at the expense of the person bringing in the sheep. The charge for an inspection of the flock and the granting of the certificate by the inspector, is $5, and fifteen cents per mile for every mile traveled in making the inspection. Should the band, or any part of them be found to be infected by any contagious or infectious disease the inspector will direct what to do with them; the directions of the inspector must be carried out, under heavy penalty.

In addition to the above, we believe the regulations to be such that no transportation company can enter the territory with stock of any kind until first inspected, or released by the territorial veterinary surgeon.

The total amount of butter manufactured at the Oakdale Creamery last month was 2536 pounds.

Curing Changes in Cheese.

Another scientific discovery of much interest to students of dairy problems is reported from the Wisconsin Agricultural Experiment Station at Madison. For something like two years Dr. Babcock and Prof. Russell of that station have been working upon the question of what causes the changes that take place in the ripening of cheese. For a long time they worked upon the hypothesis that rennet and bacteria wrought these modifications of the product during the curing process, but finding that sort of an inquiry barren of results they were forced to abandon it. They were then led by a chain of circumstances to pursue a bio-chemic investigation, which has finally resulted in proving that the ripening process is due to ferments and not to bacteria.

A chemical analysis of cheese reveals the fact that the casein or green curd, which is insoluble at first, is gradually converted in the curing process into soluble substances. In this soluble condition the constituents of the cheese can be readily digested and its value as a food consists largely in this change, which is also accompanied by the development of peculiar flavors that are so characteristic of different kinds of cheese. The production of these characteristic flavors is probably due to the action of bacteria, but the fundamental change in the casein has now been shown to be brought about purely by chemical changes dissociated from living organisms. The discovery of these ferments in milk is itself a subject of considerable scientific importance, but when considered in relation to cheese ripening it has a practical bearing that materially enhances its theoretical value.

The Trotting Horse.

BY CHARLES MARVIN.

This great practical horse book is a handsome, three hundred page octavo, bound in cloth, elegantly printed, superbly illustrated, and explains in every detail the remarkable success of CHAS. MARVIN and the whole plans and methods pursued at Palo Alto as to breaking, training, shoeing, gaiting, driving, keeping, racing and breeding trotters.

Read what J. C. Silby, the owner of St. Bel, says of this book: "In this work Marvin has let out all the mysteries of the craft, and it is so simple and plain that any breeder, owner, trainer or rubber who has any wish for his business can take a colt as a yearling and develop to the highest and fullest extent that colt's capacity as a trotter. The work impressed me so strongly that I have ordered twenty copies, and shall place one in the hands of every rubber on our farm. Mailed postpaid for $3.50. Address

The Greatest Trotter in America,

Has trotted 40 heats as a three-year old better than 2:27 1-2, 31 in 2:20 or better and 12 in 2:15 or better. Won 13 races out of 17 starts as a three-year-old, and a total of $5,400 in his three-year-old form.

ZOMBRO, 2:11 (Registered No. 28,029), brown stallion, foaled in 1892, stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds, and is one of the most perfect formed horses in America. His career on the turf in 1895 stamps him as one of the greatest three-year-olds the world has ever seen.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, sired by McKinney, 2:11 1/4, son of Aleyone, by George Wilkes.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, first dam Whisper, by Almont Lightning, son of Almont 33, dam by Mambrino Pilot 29. Patchen and Lady Thorne, 2:18 1/4.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, second dam May Berry, by Kentucky Clay 194, whose dam is also the dam of Mambrino

Patchen and Lady Thorne, 2:18 1/4.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, third dam by Edwin Forest 49.

Whisper, the dam of Zombro, was bred and raised by Gen. W. T. Withers, of Lexington, Ky., and is a handsome brown mare, 16 hands high, weighing 1,150 pounds. She has never been beaten in the show ring, always carrying off first prize.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, won the first prize over all three-year-old stallions at the Horse Show in San Francisco in 1895.

This grand stallion will make the SEASON of 1898 at SACRAMENTO RACE TRACK, from FEBRUARY 1st to JUNE 1st, 1898. Terms, $30 cash at the time of service.

Address,

SEYMOUR WILKES, 2:08 1/2

(REGISTERED 0232)

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

J. H. White's Stock Farm, Lakeville, Cal.

TERMS—$25 FOR THE SEASON

SEYMOUR WILKES was sired by the King of the Wilkes family, Guy Wilkes, 2:15 1/4, dam Early Bird, by Playmall (brother to Barney, 2:25 1/4); second dam Lucy, by Odd Fellow (son of Chloroform); third dam by a son of Williamson's Belmont; fourth dam by Blackhawk 767. Playmail was by Mike 2408 (he by Vermont 322, out of the Peniger mare), out of Kate McDonough (dam of Ella Lewis 2:27, and granddam of Saladin, 2:05 1/4).

SEYMOUR WILKES stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds. He is a seal brown in color, and in conformation is one of the most symmetrical of any in California. His qualities as a level-headed, game and speedy race horse are known to all horsemen. He is the fastest son of the mighty Guy Wilkes, and on his maternal side traces to the very best of sires and dams. He has an iron constitution, and all owners of good mares that want horses that will have breeding, size, bone, quality, good disposition and extreme speed should not overlook this horse. His service fee is placed at a very low figure considering his merits. He never was bred but to a few mares, and his progeny are models of perfection. Mares can be shipped direct to the ranch via steamer "Gold." The best of care taken of them on the farm, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Pasturage $3 per month. 				Orlando
				Flight

Torso sired the following winners: Torsina, Joe Roger, Torello, True Love II., Tortosa, Una Que Amo, Torsion, Torsoler e, Myrtle H., Tortenson, Sister Ella, Solution, Hearso, Torsida, Sculptor, Torchdance, The Shrew, Vana, Odds On, Cosina, Caricia, Restless, Our Johnny, Sweet Liberty, Tessa, Finanza (dead) and Merry Lass (dead).

During his two years of turf career, Torso won nearly $45,000. His full sister, Aurelia, was one of the best mares of her day, winning $20,385, and her first foal was last season's capital two-year-old performer, Aurelian. Their dam, imp. Santa Lucia, also threw the winners, Tasso and Aureole. She is a daughter of the triple event winner, Lord Lyon, and through him obtains the potent blood of Paradigm, who produced Achievement, and two of whose granddaughters are the dams of Ladas and Glare, two of the best two-year-olds in England in 1892.

Algerine, the sire of Torso, was a superior race horse, winner of the Belmont Stakes, etc., and is by Abd-el-Kader, out of Nina, by Boston. Abd-el-Kader (a full brother to the good four-miler, Abd-el-Koree), although badly hiped, was a fine race horse at all distances. He won a dash of four miles at Saratoga, in 1869, in 7:31 3/4, a very creditable performance. Nina, the dam of Algerine, was one of the best race mares of her day. She was a winner at all distances, from one to four-mile heats, in good time, and produced Planet, one of the best horses in the country at all distances, and a successful sire, also Echequer, Ninette, Eclipse, etc.

Torso was a brilliant two-year-old. He won the first of the Double Events from a field of nine and also the second Double Event with a five-pound penalty, making his weight 123 pounds. In the Surf Stakes he beat Cayuga, St. James and four others, and in the Flatbush he defeated Reclare, Onaway, Burlington and three others.

At three years of age he won the Lorillard Stakes, 1 1/2 miles in 2:36 1/4, from Tournament, Banquet, Badisha, Devotee, St. John, Burlington and Protection, a high-class field; was second to Burlington for the Brooklyn Derby, in front of Tournament, Padisha, Lisimov, Kenwood and four others; was second for the Equinoctial Stakes to Reclare, beating Tournament and others, and carrying nine pounds more than he winner, and was third for the Omnibus Stakes, 1 1/2 miles, carrying a penalty of five pounds.

TERMS $50 THE SEASON.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898. All bills payable not later than that date. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Address all letters to

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

Alameda, at $100 the Season.

(WITH USUAL RETURN PRIVILEGES.)

LIMITED TO TWENTY-FIVE MARES.

ALTAMONT shares championship honors with Baron Wilkes, a horse of great opportunities, in having six 2:10 performers to his credit. He has taken a leading position among the foremost trotting sires of the country under such conditions that phenomenal ability alone has saved him from oblivion. A very small proportion of his progeny has been trained, and an extremely small number of these by competent men. As a partial illustration of his meagre advantages, it may be stated that he has never produced a colt from a pacing-bred mare or from one with a fast record. Nor until 1897 had he ever been crossed with a descendant of George Wilkes, Electioneer, Dictator, Sidney or Dexter Prince. Oregon and Washington have produced seven 2:10 performers, and EVERY ONE of these are ALTAMONTs.

ALTAMONT is a horse of iron constitution, and at twenty-three years of age is in the full vigor of his prime, a sure foal-getter, and, except for his blindness—the result of an accident—is without blemish. He has never sired a sorrel, all of his colts having been solid colors—bays, browns or blacks.

NOTE—Besie Rank n, by Altamont, sold November, 1897, brought the highest price obtained for a harness horse at public auction in California during the year. Address

		Monterey	2:13 3/4
		Montana	2:16 1/4

If MONTEREY begets colts like himself he will prove to be the poor man's friend, for it will cost but little to bring them to the races.

MONTEREY had but five months' training before making his record of 2:13 3/4, last half in 1:03 1/4. Last season I had no idea of getting him beaten, but his foot was injured in the blacksmith shop, consequently he had to be let up in his training. Previous to this unfortunate accident, I drove him a mile in 2:11 1/4, last half in 1:02 1/2, last quarter in 30 seconds. This was done in the presence of 3,000 people about July 10th. I could have driven him better than 2:10, as he seems to be all right. I look for him to get the harness record this year, which ought to make his produce very salable.

MONTEREY is a thorough race horse, as he is level-headed and game as a pebble. He has a fine, resolute way of going a gait so much admired by all. A glance at his pedigree will convince any horseman that he is bred in the purple and is justly entitled to his extra speed. Every one of his family are producers of early and extreme speed.

MONTEREY is one of the gamest horses I ever drove, and, like his full brother, Montana, 2:16 1/4, the races are never too long for him. Montana won the Occident Stake in seven heats and many a hard-fought race since.

Hattie, dam of Montana and Monterey, is a grand-looking bay mare, and I consider her one of the very strongest, as well as one of the best-bred mares in America. Her sire is strongly bred, and sires speed. To his credit may be mentioned Meteor, 2:17 1/4; Carrie Bell, 2:23 1/4; the dams of Iago, 2:11; Fell-fare, 2:10 3/4; Galette, 2:12 1/2, and thirteen others in the list.

I have every reason to expect that Monterey will be the "King of all Trotters." In color he is a rich chestnut, and in conformation he has strong loins and back, good shoulders, fine head and neck, and the best of feet and legs. He weighs 1,200 pounds and stands 15 3/8 hands.

I will have Monterey at my ranch at Milpitas any time mares are sent there.

TERMS, $50, With Usual Return Privileges.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898, as Monterey will then be prepared for the races. All bills payable not later than that date. Address all letters to

A Typical Specimen of the English Shire Horse.

SIRE OF THE WINNERS OF ENGLAND'S THREE GREAT CLASSIC RACES UP TO DATE.

In tabular form below will be found the names of the sires of the Epsom Derby, The Oaks, and Doncaster St. Leger from the inception of the great turf events up to date, with the successful ones these horses begot, the year they won the race or races, and on the right the number of winners of these events sired by the various stallions. The late C. Bruce Lowe of Australia based his figure system upon the winners of these classic stakes and traced those winners to some thirty-four "tap-root" mares, of native English, Arabian and Barb origin. The relative worth of the various strains of blood were thus established, and it is to most persons' minds a very fair test. The only improvement we could suggest would be to figure on the real recognized champions of the turf, and trace their origin to the "tap root." This would be better than the method adopted by our departed friend, for many horses that have afterward shown anything but first class form were lucky enough to win the Derby, Oaks or St. Leger.

The St. Leger was run first in 1776, the Oaks in 1779 and the Derby, named in honor of the Earl of Derby, in 1780. The Doncaster Derby is one mile six furlongs and 132 yards, for colts and fillies three years old, and was named after a great lover of equine sport named Col. St. Leger. The Derby, for three-year-old colts and fillies, and The Oaks, for fillies three years old, are both at about one and a half miles. Diomed, the first winner of the St. Leger, was brought to America when an old horse, but founded a great family, the best representative and the horse doing the most to keep the family name before the world being Sir Archy, known as "the Godolphin Arabian of America." Many years thereafter the One Thousand Guineas, for fillies three years old, and the Two Thousand Guineas, for colts of the same age, were founded by The Jockey Club of England, and they now rank among England's "classics." On account, however, of these latter races not being run until 1809 and 1814, in comparing the various sires we shall only take the victories of their sons and daughters in the Derby, Oaks and St. Leger into account.

Sir Peter and Stockwell are tied for first honors as sires, with ten classic state winners to their credit, but Stockwell was wonderful at begetting "stayers," siring no less than six winners of the St. Leger. Melbourne, Highflyer and St. Simon sired eight winners each of the three classics, and the daughters of Melbourne and St. Simon were better than the sons. Touchstone sired seven winners of the Derby, Oaks or St. Leger, Waxy the same, Isonomy six. These are the most wonderful sires, by the records, ever known in Great Britain. As St. Simon is but seventeen years of age, there is a chance of his eclipsing the record of Sir Peter and Stockwell, for he has an average of one winner of England's great stake event ever since 1890.

Many winners of the Derby and St. Leger were brought to America, the Derby-winners being imp. Diomed (winner of 1780), Saltram (1783), John Bull (1792), Spread Eagle (1795), Sir Harry (1798), Archduke (1799), Lapdog (1826), Priam (1830), George Frederick (1874), Iroquois (1881, bred here), St. Blaise (1883) and Ormonde (1886). Blue Gown (1868) died on the way over. Not a winner of the Oaks ever came to our shores. The St. Leger-winners brought to America were Barefoot (1823), Rowton (1829), Margrave (1832), Knight of St. George (1854), Rayon d'Or (1879), Iroquois (1881, bred here) and Ormonde (1886).

The Derby-winners will be marked (d), those of the Oaks (o), of the St. Leger (s). It is arranged alphabetically, and takes in all the sires of winners of these three great stakes up to and including the year 1897:

CARE AND FEEDING OF YOUNG STOCK—SUCCESS AND FAILURE IN GETTING MARES IN FOAL.

We have recently had our attention called to an essay on the treatment of brood mares and foals, and the care of breeding young stock, written by William Hallin, Fellow of the Royal College of Veterinary College Surgeons, Athgarvan Lodge Stud, Carragh, County Kildare. This essay won first prize offered by the Royal Dublin Society. It is one of the most valuable papers on the subjects mentioned that we have yet met with, says the Breeder and Horseman of Nashville, and in order that our readers may have opportunity to judge of its merits we herewith append a few excerpts for their benefit:

Nature cannot stand two violent extremes, and consequently corrections in conformation can seldom be accomplished by union of them. A horse's back is most important, especially in an animal to be used for the saddle, but even for draught purposes the whole leverage of the body comes from the spine, and hence the importance of having it truly formed. In a hunter a true formation of the back is of the greatest importance, seeing the animal is called upon to carry weight over fences.

It is an acknowledged fact that external qualification, such as color, physique, shape and conformation follow the male parent, while internal qualities, temperament, vices, action, and, to a great extent, speed, follow the female, and these are most important points for the consideration of the breeder, as faults may to a certain extent be corrected, lessened or avoided by weighing these matters before mating animals.

One of the mistakes with regard to breeding for size is to expect an animal of fourteen hands by crossing a sixteen hands horse with a twelve hands pony. In many cases the result is disappointing, most probably an unequally formed animal, with the head of one parent and the body of the other. A medium mare should be selected, one with depth of chest and width of body, so that she may have, as is commonly expressed, "room for a foal."

Temper and temperament come next, and the broodmare with one and without the other is useless. In the experience of a lifetime I have only met one or two naturally vicious horses. In nearly every case temper can be traced to the treatment an animal has received either during colthood or training. Some horses learn quicker than others, and will not submit to punishment, and consequently every horse requires different treatment, and, above all, patience.

Constitution should always be a matter of great consideration—a weakly-constituted, unhealthy mare cannot be expected to produce strong foals.

Mares may have bad constitutions from imperfect conformation, or not unfrequently the result of severe debilitating illness, or even poverty in early life. A mare starved in her youth, if ever she pulls up, takes years to do so, and in the same way mares which have suffered from severe attacks of catarrhal fever or bad strangles are years before their constitution becomes restored or become capable of giving strength to their offspring. Long waisted, bad feeders have no stamina and less recuperative powers, and their foals have generally the same fault.

Quality in the sire is more essential than in the mare, and therefore the breeders should make this a special point in his selection, as far as possible, to counteract any plainness in the mare, which in half-breeds is more common than in thoroughbreds.

Color in the sire is a matter of selection. Taking thoroughbreds generally, we find a large number of chestnuts, although there are families, like that of Galopin, where dark browns are prevalent. The Stockwell line, which is largely represented in Ireland, favors chestnuts.

Having selected the mare and the sire, the next thing to consider is the best age and time to commence to breed from a mare. I have had much experience in breeding from two year olds. In thoroughbreds it is certainly not advisable, as it tends to retard the future growth of the animal, while the produce is generally small and not unfrequently debilitated.

It is a generally accepted fact that three-year-old fillies are more difficult to get in foal than two year olds, but I fail to see why it should be so, unless from the fact that in many cases, being unhandled, they are more powerful and more likely to resist being hobbled if suddenly let to a horse. One of the most common errors made with young mares is forcing the horse on them at a time they are not fully in season or even when they may be, but are of a nervous temperament. I have seen mares quite spoiled by this treatment, while mares covered under those unfavorable circumstances are very apt not to get in foal either from fright or temper; therefore a young mare requires to be carefully handled and made used to the horse by being as much as possible brought in contact with him beforehand. Older and broken mares are different; but I cannot impress too much on breeders the mistakes that are being made in covering mares not in use, and to this cause can be traced more than half the mares which miss, for which too often the horse gets the credit for being unfruitful, and thereby is seriously injured in the estimation of the public. The over anxious stallion owner or stud groom who fears unless the service is booked the fee is unsafe, seeing the owner may change his mind, is too often at the bottom of the trouble. When the parents are in perfect health, and the proper period of oestrus is on, and a proper connection takes place, there should be little difficulty in a successful issue. There are differences as to the truthfulness in both stallions and mares, which in the former may arise from ill use or bad management or from having too many mares or too many services in a short time, while, of course, age plays a most important part in the horse's power of reproduction.

The period a mare goes with foal is eleven calendar months, but this is often exceeded, and I have had several mares go full twelve months. I have remarked, and it is an important thing, that mares adopt a certain time, as it were—thus if they may go, say eight days over their time one year, the same time is usually observed the following year, even although there is a change of sire or other circumstances, and for this reason I keep a careful account of the variation of times, either beyond or under the proper period. When the latter the foal is often weak, and the proper supply of milk does not come on until the actual time that the mare should foal has arrived, and many foals are lost during this period, either from want of strength to suck the mare or from the milk itself not being in a proper condition to use. And it not unfrequently happens that constipation follows, when the milk does not contain the proper elements which should act as a natural purgative to relieve the bowels, which are full of foetal excrement collected in the intestines.

The ordinary half-bred mare requires little more than good care before foaling and some mashes if in the stable, avoiding strains or heavy loads, and always having plenty of water within her reach. Mares really do better on grass than in the stable, but when foaling it is advisable to take them in at night so that they may be watched; young mares especially during their first or second foaling, often require assistance. The symptoms of approaching foaling vary considerably, and seldom do two mares show the same signs, as a general rule; however, the first indication is the waxing of the teats, which may occur two or three days before, more generally twenty-four hours. The udder itself becomes full and hard, and not unfrequently the springing extends in front along the abdomen. The position of the foal alters, and the abdomen becomes more pendant, the point of the hips fall while the ischia or prominence under the tail becomes more so, and the bearing itself is elongated and ready for the passage of the foal. As the time approaches for parturition the mare looks anxious, walks around the box, the wax usually drops off the teats and gives way to milk; the mare looks around at her flanks repeatedly, gets up and lies down with care, breaks out into a perspiration, and ultimately lies down when labor comes on, and in the ordinary course the foal is born in about ten or fifteen minutes. It occasionally happens that mares foal standing up, but there is always great risk of the foal being injured in the fall, and more than once I have had foals killed in this way.

Mares are most anxious to foal alone, and for this reason as few people as possible should be about them. If they foal naturally, without help, so much better, but if there is any difficulty, which often occurs from the presentation not being perfect, then assistance is needed. It must be most carefully given, and force should be avoided, first seeing that the two forelegs are straight and equal in the passage and the head coming between them.

The usual time to send a mare for service after foaling is the ninth day; this, however, varies, and there are some mares, in fact families of mares, which come in use on the eighth, while others go on till the tenth or eleventh day. I am of the opinion that a good many of those changes are really due to climatic influences. From a carefully kept record of my stud, extending over several years, I seldom find the period the same. In the season of 1882 nearly half the mares came round on the tenth or eleventh day, and I found more than the average number of mares barren that year. In ordinary cases we take it that the proper day to send a mare is the ninth after the foals—if she is not in good use the horse should not be forced upon her simply because it is the ninth day. The season may be passing off or it may be coming on—if the former, the mare will run to her twenty-first day after foaling. Many mares never get in foal till their twenty-first day; and it is such mares, through being forced on the ninth day, that too often prove barren, as their periods become wrong. A second trial on the fifteenth day I do not consider of much importance, as not unfrequently, with mares in milk, it is the continuance of the ninth day season which has not passed off.

There is no doubt that the most important day is the twenty-first day after foaling, not only as a trial day but as a service day. Regular breeding mares, in full health, if served on the ninth day, may be considered in foal when they successfully pass the twenty-first day. In delicate mares, or those having a severe or difficult foaling, the twenty-first day really seems to be the proper one, as the generative organs have had time to recover tone, and if there has been any abrasion of the mucous membrane of the parts they have opportunity to become healed and restored.

Mares which are not stunted when served on the ninth day usually come well in season on the twenty-first day, and stand to their service. There is much importance to be placed on trying young mares on the twenty-fifth day, and mares which remain at the stud here are usually tried at that date. The twenty first may be looked upon as the next important day on which mares should always be tried. It is a strong indication if the mare passes the thirty-first day that she is in foal, but the trial should again take place on the forty-second day. If a mare passes this successfully she may be considered safe in foal. Many mares break at sixty days, but in such cases the service has probably been cast at her first service.

THE TWO-YEAR OLD RACERS IN CALIFORNIA.

The crop of two-year-olds in California this season has not set the oaf on fire. They keep beating each other with wonderful regularity. When the distance was very short Buena Ventura was a warm article. Then they got to beating her and Magdalenas was looked upon as a coming "clinker." It's true she has a world of speed, but she also has a bad temper, and it offsets her ability to run fast, for she almost invariably gets away so poorly that her chances of winning go glimmering through the extra efforts to get up with the leaders. After Magdalenas was beaten a few times Formero came to the front, and he ran very consistently and well too. But Lobos with a big pull in the weights beat Formero a block in 0:47 for four furlongs, and Formero therefore had to have the "phenom" label taken off. The light weight carried by Lobos leaves room for considerable doubt as to whether he is the best of the two-year-old colt division, and when Olinthus went along and won two or three stakes he came to be mentioned as the crack two-year-old of the season. But Humidity and Sevens beat Olinthus by the block from Third to Fourth street, in a stake race too, and so Olinthus don't cut a great deal of ice. Now comes along Rainier and defeats Humidity and Sevens in a good stake event, and the thought arises, when will they ever get through beating each other? Sainly has won the most races of the two-year-olds, but as Sweet Cakes took his measure the other day, he's no Hindoo. Yet he beat Maude Ferguson in easy fashion, and Maudie ran a couple of very fast races previous to that. Ojai, the brother to Hueneme and Satcoy, is a pretty shifty youngster, but he hasn't picked his full weight and beaten any of the erstwhile cracks as yet, so that he must be put down as an unknown quantity.

There's one two-year old, however, that shines out pretty conspicuously. We had almost overlooked her. Reference is made to the black filly, Sombre, daughter of imp. Midlothian and ex-turf queen Miss Woodford. She has made her fields look very common and broke a track record at Ingleside when carrying a three-pound penalty. Therefore, Sombre is the best two-year-old shown in California this far in the season of 1898, and we suspect that this wee filly will win some good stakes at the far East for W. B. Jennings & Co. before the snow flies. Any youngster that can take up 118 lbs. and run four and a half furlongs in 0:51½ over the rather slow Ingleside course will bother any man's baby racer when it comes to sprinting, and the way Sombre finishes leads good judges to believe she will "go on." By the time and weight test, then, it looks like Sombre first and the rest nowhere, so far as the youngsters out this way are concerned, though we have a suspicion that Harry Mason's charge, Lobos, a strapping bay fellow by imp. Golden Garter, can pack weight as well as run fast. When another real fast one shows up it would be a good idea for one of the clubs to bring the trio together for say a thousand dollar purse, settling the two-year-old championship of California as well as letting the patrons of the sport of kings see a warm horse race.

TYREE'S VETO AND THE MISSOURI VETO.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., April 15, 1898.—I saw in your last paper something in the way of an inquiry about Tyree's Veto. He was by Belmont. I saw the horse when he was a yearling at Stockton in 1863, when Henry Blum (deceased) and myself kept the track at that place. He was a reddish sorrel with a hind leg more like that of a camel than a horse. Tyree asked me to name him and I said, "Give him the name of Dromedary," which he felt inclined to resent, so he said he would call him Veto. He got a mare called Carrie Miller, which won several races.

Tyree lived at Suisun from 1858 to 1862 and had two mares, one being the dam of Contraband, who got the trotter Gold Note. He was by Belmont. He afterwards bred her to Langford and got Compromise, the first horse to run mile heats below 1:47 in each heat. About the time he came to Stockton he bought another mare and bred her to Owen Dals. From this union came a horse called Kyrat, the fastest horse for six furlongs that I had ever seen up to that date. But there were no races then at less than a mile and few at less than mile heats, so Kyrat never won anything worthy of mention.

I am not sure whether Kyrat and Tyree's Veto were from the same mare or not, but think they were. They were very different horses, both in color and shape. Veto was as ragged a horse as I ever saw, full of 'dips, angles and spurs' as a Nevada mining deed, while Kyrat was a deep, liver-colored chestnut, like his sire, and as round and smoothly turned a horse as old Three Cheers himself.

I am under the impression that Tyree told me that the Missouri Veto was by Laplander and he by Flagellator, which runs into the same male line (Expedition) as Belmont did, but on that point I will not be positive. That was thirty-five years ago, and the wonder is, not that I remember the matter imperfectly, but that I remember it at all.

Yours respectfully, THOS. B. MERRY.

MERRIWA STOCK FARM FOALS OF 1898.

Imp. Utter, by Martini Henry—Uralla, foaled on the 17th inst. a bay colt by imp. St. Andrew (sire of Caspar). As Utter was a grand race mare this should be a rare good one.

Imp. Lady Grace, by First Water—imp. Camilla, foaled a chestnut colt by imp. Clieleden on the 15th of April.

Minnie B, by Prince of Norfolk—Lizzie Idle, foaled a bay colt on April 16th by imp. Clieleden (brother to Chester).

About two weeks ago imp. Lady Jess, own sister to Lady Grace had a filly foal by imp. Merriwa.

THE Supervisors of San Francisco, at their meeting Monday, voted unanimously not to restrict racing in this city, an action altogether unexpected by even the most sanguine friends of the sport of kings in this city. The Examiner had the following to say about the matter: "Racing will continue as usual at the Ingleside track, because the Board of Supervisors by unanimous vote Monday postponed indefinitely the consideration of the subject of limiting racing days. When Dr. Clinton's resolution to limit the time to sixty consecutive days was announced the author of the resolution spoke in its defense; but even those who deprecated gambling at the track admitted that if the time were curtailed at the Ingleside track, it would be extended at the Oakland track. On the adoption of the resolution the vote stood 10 to 2, only Supervisor Rivers voting with Dr. Clinton. Supervisor Smith subsequently put a quietus on the whole subject by moving its indefinite postponement. This motion was seconded by Dr. Clinton, who explained: 'From this moment I cease to be a reformer.' Then the unanimous vote was cast."

TRAVERSER won the $2,000 Palace Hotel Handicap in hollow style, going into the lead at once and retaining it to the finish. Buckwa, who would have undoubtedly have carried Traverser had he gotten away, was going sideways when the barrier raised, and by the time he had described a semi-circle was a bad last and out of the race. It was clearly all over bar the whooping when a mile had been traversed, for Traverser was three lengths in front of Fonsovannah, who was leading Ostler Joe two lengths. Candelaria was the best horse in the race, though, and was going great guns at the wind-up.

Saddle Notes.

It is more than likely that Sam Hildredth will race a colt in Montana.

CHARLES BOOTS has entered Borgia and several two-year-olds in the stakes at Anaconda and Butte.

CAPTAIN REES, the old son of George Kinney who figured in many a hard-fought contest at the old Bay District track, is dead.

PRIMATE, a half-brother to O'Connell and Mahogany, but by Prince Royal, won a five-furlong race at Memphis, Tenn. April 12th.

TOMMY LOTTRIDGE will turn out Scarborough in a few days and take the rest of the Atkin-Lottridge string to Chicago.

JOHNNY WOODS had his first mount for his new employers (Burns & Waterhouse) on Miss Rowena, and landed her a very clever winner.

TYR SHENA, a recent two-year-old race winner at the Washington meeting, is by Tyrant, out of Shena Van, and belongs to Green Morris.

DOLLIE REGENT, a winner at Newport last week, is by Montana Regent (winner of the Louisville Cup, etc.), out of Dollikens, a very fair race mare.

GALEN BROWN has made I. P. Diggs' son a handsome present—the racehorse Durward—which arrived in the city yesterday.—Woodland Mail, April 13.

BEAUCHAMP, who started in the business of riding in B. C. Holly's stable, piloted two winners at Memphis on April 11th, dividing honors with Tommy Burns.

MATT BYRNES scored a moderate success as starter the opening day of the Bennings meeting. The first field at the post bothered the ex-trainer considerably.

CATHEDRAL, one of the best youngsters shown in the South thus far, is by imp. Candelmas out of Semper Paratus, latter by Stratford from the dam of Leonatus.

IMP. BITTER ROOT, who has been running well here, is by Royal Hampton, from Buttermere, dam of Bathampton. He was imported with his dam by Marcus Daly.

AT Memphis, Tenn., April 15th, Czarowitz (by imp. Martenburst—Mabel F.) and Salvage (by Salvador—Lydia) won races at six furlongs and at a mile. It is a good showing for California.

AT Elmendorf Stud, Kentucky (now the property of J. B. Haggin), on March 31st, Victorine (dam of Ornament, Method, etc.), by Onondaga, foaled a brown filly (sister to Ornament) by imp. Order.

CANACE's easy five furlongs in 1:02 with 107 pounds up Monday speaks pretty well for the Crighton's and they will be in good demand when Mr. Spreckels sells his yearlings, if we are not greatly mistaken.

H. L. FRANK's stable will take in the Montana circuit this season. Probably some of the best horses will be sent to the East in the autumn and may, possibly, spring another Ogden on the New Yorkers.

AT the A. J. C. meeting, March 5th, the Stewards' Stakes was won by Mirella, the Alexandra Stakes by Raven's Plume. They are respectively daughters of Nordenfeldt and Carbine, who are sons of Musket.

J. LEE, a colored boy generally known as Jacobin, was ruled off the Oakland track Apr. 15th. The boy was found in Gold Bug's stall with the material for an injection, and was said to have given the horse a shot.

AT Washington, D. C. (Bennings track), April 11th, the second and third races were won by Filigrane and Her Own, respectively, daughter and son of imp. Galore, who is by Galopin out of Lady Maura, by Macaroni.

JOHN SPLAN has purchased for J. E. Madden, of Messrs. Geo. Hinkle and B. B. Wilson, Lexington, Ky., the chestnut colt Newberger, 2, by Donatello—Eliza Hindoo. The price was $2,000, and the colt is said to be an extra good one.

CHARLES W. MOORE has had the misfortune to lose the bay mare Elsinore (dam of Derfargilla, Calvert, Mohawk, Opponent, etc.), seventeen years old, by imp. Buckden, out of Ethel Sprague by Jack Malone.—Thoroughbred Record.

TOD SLOAN ought to consider himself very lucky that Ed Corrigan did not let him have Satyr for the $1,200 he offered for the horse, for the son of Lew Weir broke down very badly Monday near the half-mile in the mile and a quarter race.

THE Owen Bros.' good horse Wernberg will be bred to about twenty mares this season. Besides those of the Owens Brothers, M. F. Tarpey and Lee Blasingame send several stud matrons to be mated with the son of imp. Muscovy and Holmdel.

J. E. MADDEN has sold to T. H. Griffin the bay colt Jolly Roger, 2, by imp. Order, dam imp. Happy Sally II, on private terms. T. H. Griffin sold all his horses except Allie Belle and Martha II. while in California and took them to Louisville with him.

THE Sacramento race meeting, given under the auspices of the California Jockey Club, begins on May 25th. If the patronage extended is good the club will lengthen the meeting two weeks, making it a month in all. The same course will be taken at Los Angeles.

THE famous English stallion Springfield, foaled 1873 by St. Albans, dam Viridis, by Marsyas, the property of Mr. J. H. Houldsworth, died at Green Lodge, Newmarket. He was a good race horse, and a successful sire, having to his credit Sainfoin, a Derby winner, imp. Watercross and other good horses.

PETER WEBER now owns the black three-year-old colt, Jim Brownell, by imp. Midlothian out of Nana, by Virgil. Nana is the dam of Milton, Marie Lovell, Burnside, The Coon and other good ones. Brownell has speed, but has heretofore stopped pretty badly. From his breeding he shouldn't be a stopper.

It is expected that there will be a field of ten in the Kentucky derby to be run on May 4th. The starters will be picked from the following bunch: Plaudit, Lieber Karl, Bannockburn, Dr. Black, Isabay, Han d'Or, Gallivant, Don Quixote, Frank Thompson, Marcato, Pacemaker, Sackett, Judge Quigley, Teucer.

HENRY BYRNES left Wednesday for Sacramento with a carload of horses. The most prominent are Gold Scratch, Himera, Al Koran, Briar Hill, Tea Rose, Saintly and Maximo, a brother to Maxello. The horses will be given a rest at Rancho del Paso and possibly the best will be sent East later in the season.

THE charge of battery against Arthur Hinrichs, the outlawed jockey, has been dropped from the records of the Recorder's Court at Emeryville. Hinrichs was arrested for assaulting President Tom Williams of the California Jockey Club and was tried twice. The jury disagreed both times and a third trial was deemed futile.

BONIBEL, winner of the first race Monday, is by Take Notice out of Tallada, by Enquirer. The latter, owned for years by E. F. Fallon, of Hollister, is now the property of Burns & Waterhouse, and is a half-sister to Bribery (dam of Miss Ford), Blithesome, Bonnie Meade (dam of Reporter and N. wegatherer), Termagant, Tally-Ho and Bettina.

THE following dispatch was received at the Daily Racing Form office from Ed. Tipton, Hamilton, Mont., on the 14th of April: "Lady Reel, at the Bitter Root Stud, foaled to-day a full brother to Hamburg. The youngster is a dark bay with a star and a grand looker." In consequence there is much joy in the hearts of Mr. Daly and his friends.

MR. J. J. MADDEN requests The Record to correct the report first published in this paper that he had sold Hippoburg. He still owns him, but sold the filly Frances Reed, by Hanover, out of Extra, to Mr. C. M. Reed, of Erie, Pa. This purchase being by Hanover started the report that he had sold a brother to Hamburg.—Thoroughbred Record.

RICHARD CROKER is authority for the statement that his horse Dobbins, which is being trained in England, is showing the high rate of speed which enabled him to win the Brooklyn Derby in 1894, and that he will start in the English City and Suburban on Wednesday of next week. Dobbins has been in the stud for two years, and Mr. Croker has about forty colts and fillies by him.

RAINIER's win in the Candelaria Handicap was an exceedingly lucky one, for had Humidity not swung wide on the last turn the son of Orizaba and Nadavis could not have won. As it was, he got through against the inner rails and won staggering by a length from Humidity. By the way, Rainier and Humidity are closely related, Rainier's dam, Nadavis, being an own sister to Humidity, also incidentally to Mabel Glenn, Catalpa and Dunganven.

JIMMY MICHAEL, the Welsh middle-distance champion cyclist, is investing some of his hard-earned savings in race horses. Michael will ride the bicycle this year, and his trainer says he will ride faster than he ever has, but it cannot be denied that the little Welshman is becoming an enthusiast over thoroughbreds, and the idea of becoming a jockey when he can no longer be a cycle champion has taken strong hold of him.—N. Y. dispatch, April 15th.

TRAVERSER has during his career here this winter won five rich stakes, the California Derby at Ingleside, value $4,000 to the winner; the Baldwin Handicap, $1,100 to the winner; Rancho del Paso Handicap, $900 to the winner; Lissack Stakes, value $950 to the winner and the Palace Hotel Handicap, value $1,600 to the winner. The last four were at the California Jockey Club track. He has also picked up a couple of purses and third money a couple of times in purse events.

CAPT. BEN HARRIS has invented a racing bridle with a spring blind attachment, to be used on bad actors at the starting gate. When lined up, the bad actor is placed in position at the gate, the starter pulls the lever to the barrier, the jockey pulls a string to the bridle, which makes the blinds fly backward, and the horse darts away. It worked to a charm on Pescador and twenty or more others that are anything but angelic at the post, and the chances are Capt. Harris has invented a contrivance of great value to owners of bad-tempered horses.

JOHNNY WOODS, the clever lightweight, has been secured to do the light riding for Burns & Waterhouse for the balance of the season. Barney Schreiber will in all likelihood retire from the turf ere long, hence his transfer of the contract for the boy's services. Schreiber also sold to Burns & Waterhouse his good Rossington colt, Marplot, the consideration being private, but $1,750 cash and $500 the first time he wins is not far from the mark. The big California racing firm thus in one day secured a good lightweight rider and a good colt over a distance of ground.

AT the second day's racing of the Nottingham spring meeting to-day, says a London dispatch of April 6th, Lord William Beresford's three-year-old chestnut filly Libra, by Sensation, out of Lima, won the Bentinck Stakes for all ages, maidens at time of naming. There were nine starters, over the five-furlong straight course. The following was the result in detail: Lord William Beresford's three-year-old ch f, Libra, by Sensation, out of Lima, first; Sir J. Blundell Maple's three-year-old blk c Fire Arm second; Mr. N. C. Cockburn's three-year-old Avon filly, third.

OF the owner of the grand colt Traverser the Spirit of the Times says: "Virginia" Bradley, who varies the excitement of the turf with the quiet and ease of farm life, is at the Washington race meeting with a string of horses. When at home Mr. Bradley presides over a farm of a thousand acres, stocked with something more than one hundred head of horses. While his loyalty to the get of Blitzen, even to the tenth generation, must be regarded as a thing never to be doubted, just now he grows very enthusiastic when talking of his yearlings, of which he has a dozen or more at the farm.

THE horses of Messrs. Sharp & Co were sold in the paddock at the Newport track on Saturday, April 9, to close the partnership in consequence of the death of the late Sol Sharp. Rome Respass, the other partner, bought all the horses, twelve in number. The best prices were: Goose Liver, bay colt, 4, cy Favor, dam Florence M., $600; Elusive, bay mare, 5, by Sir Dixon, dam Vego, $2,000; and Covington, Ky., chestnut gelding, 4, by El Rio Rey, dam Hypatia, $300.

PRIVATE advices from New Orleans tell of a sensational two-year-old in Fred Foster's string. The colt is by Julien, and is credited with more than phenomenal trials. It is said an agent of an Eastern turfman made arrangements to purchase the colt at a price said to be $15,000. The stipulations were that the colt was to carry 135 pounds and work five furlongs in one minute or less over a fast track. The night before the day of the trial a heavy rainstorm set in, consequently the trial did not occur. In the meantime Foster changed his mind, and said that he would not part with the colt at all.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

AT the last V. R. C. meeting the Hopeful Stakes were won by Safety (by Padlock—Mona), the St. Leger Stakes by Aurum (Trenton—Aur), the Newmarket Handicap by Amiable (Lochiel—Affection), the V. R. C. Sires' Produce Stakes by Cordite (Zuluski—Nacy Till), the Brunswick Stakes (once captured by imp. Loyalist in 2:08) by The Parisienne (Trenton—Marie Louise), the Hurdle Race by Clon-dakin with ease; the Ascot Vale Stakes by the St. Alban's colt, Bobadil, (who swerved into Cordite), the Australian Cup by Ayrshire (Dunlop—Hinnomingle), the steeplechase by Whernside (Glorious—Mildura), the Junior Handicap by Ormuz (Bill of Portland—Cooya) and the Bourke Handicap by Resolute (Trenton—Umilta).

ONE of the most remarkable handicappers in the United States is an invalid gentleman who resides in the Mission and who has never seen a horse race in all his life. For years he has been wheeled about in a chair, for he is unable to walk. The first of his handicaps that we ever saw was last week, when they were racing at Oakland. That day he called Octuruck (12 to 1) and three others that finished first. He seldom has less than three winners in an afternoon's racing, and yesterday he had four—Owyhee (8 to 5), Satsuma (3 to 1), Lady Ashley (60 to 1) and Paul Pry (9 to 5). This handicapper figures for some five or six race-players, furnishing the figures by noon each day, and from what we have observed he is a gold mine; furthermore, it would appear advantageous in handicapping never to have seen a horse race. The figurer is certainly not biased, but deals with cold facts.

ED A. TIPTON, in a personal letter to Editor Frank Brunell of Daily Racing Form from San Francisco under date of April 4th, says: "No man ever saw as many first-class yearlings as I saw at Rancho del Paso yesterday. The place itself is just a marvel in the quality of the stallions and broodmares now in use. The failures have been thrown out, and it looks as if Mr. Haggin is now bent only on breeding horses that the world cannot beat. I believe that he will succeed in the undertaking. I never saw anything or place that so surprised me as the domain and the quality of the stock at Rancho del Paso. When a man puts down—or up—the money that Mr. Haggin has and keeps weeding out the worst and buying the best, I think every horseman should give him credit. He can never get back his investment. He don't expect to do it. But he can enjoy the glory of possession of such a noble breeding establishment. I wish I could take his place and sustain the ranch. It will pay you to tab Rancho del Paso's production from date."

GOODWIN'S GUIDE is considered an authority on running records, but although great care has been exhibited in the compilation of the world's records, mistakes will creep in. The three-mile race recently captured at Ingleside by Ace attracted attention to the record at that particular distance. In Goodwin's Guide, Drake Carter is credited with holding the world's record with a mark of 5:24, made at Sheepshead Bay in 1884. This has appeared in all the recent guides, notwithstanding the fact that in 1894 Portsea won the champion race at Flemington, Melbourne, with 131 pounds in the saddle as against Drake Carter's 115 pounds, in 5:23. Then again, in 1896, the record was further reduced in Australia, when Quiver, with 123 pounds up, ran a dead heat with Wallace, with 110 pounds in the saddle, in 5:23 for the Champion stake. Wallace was only a three-year-old at the time and therefore marks a sensational performance. It is to be hoped that these corrections will be incorporated in the next Goodwin's Guide, as the publishers aim to be accurate.—Chronicle.

THE celebrated plunger, Riley Grannan, who, in addition to his famous plunging operations, achieved distinction (if so it might be called) by bringing an action against the Jockey Club after he had been ruled off for violating one of the most important rules of racing, has returned to town, and declares his intention of remaining East, hoping that the Jockey Club will reinstate him. Mr. Grannan fought boldly and carried his case to the Court of Appeals, but in every instance he was beaten. He now expects mercy. Concerning his case, I quote the parts of the third annual report of the State Racing Commission, which is composed of August Belmont, E. D. Morgan and John Sanford, relating to Grannan's case: The decision of the Court of Appeals, rendered during the past year in the case of Charles R. Grannan against the Stewards of the Jockey Club and the Westchester Racing Association, forms a fitting end to the series of litigation, all decided in favor of honest practices, and of the permanent establishment of racing upon secure and enduring foundations. That decision will enable the Jockey Club to promulgate and enforce, under the supervision of your Commission, such reasonable rules and regulations as, in its opinion, are necessary for the maintenance of the sport up to the standard contemplated by the Legislature of 1895, in the enactment of the Racing Code. The decision, apart from its unquestioned standing as the ruling of a court famed throughout the nation alike for its learning and the integrity of its members, has the approval of general public sentiment. The press of the State was unanimous in its expression of satisfaction that not only the moral right but the law of the State upheld the Jockey Club in the action it had taken." Mr. Grannan, it seems, is hopeful of being reinstated. But, in view of the statements made by the State Racing Commission, it does not seem he can afford to feel sanguine over his prospects.—"Centaur" in N. Y. Advertiser.

The New Rules.

If one had relied upon the reports and opinions published in the Eastern press, no other conclusion could have been reached than a belief that the amendments to the rules of the National Trotting Association adopted at the recent Congress had aroused the opposition of those interested in harness horse matters from the Atlantic to the Pacific. When therefore President P. P. Johnston called a special meeting of the Board of Review for the purpose of considering the objections raised, the report of the meeting was awaited with great interest. The report as printed in the New York daily papers is before us, and it is a real pleasure to know that of the numerous amendments and new rules made by the Congress, but one has excited opposition that amounts to anything—viz., the rule compelling drivers to take out a license. That this rule has objectionable features there can be no denying. The most objectionable is that which requires a driver when applying for a license to accompany the same with two photographs of himself. Without taking into consideration the fact that at least fifty per cent of the photographs made are utterly unlike the faces they are intended to portray and therefore useless as a means of identification, the rule seems to pre-suppose that there are so many trotting horse drivers in the business of "ringing" that identification by means of technical description and photographs is an absolute necessity. This is a supposition which has no foundation in fact whatever, and while the originators of the new rule are certainly actuated by the best of motives, the fact remains that honest drivers all over the country take offense at it as a reflection upon them and a very large proportion will absolutely refuse to drive on tracks that insist upon the rule. The result will be that many associations will make no attempt to enforce the rule and it will be a dead letter, and undoubtedly be repealed at the next Congress. The licensing of professional drivers is an excellent idea, and will tend to elevate the profession of driving and training horses, but the present rule is utterly inadequate to bring about the desired result.

Of the other new rules which have received attention from the editors and correspondents, the one prohibiting hoppers has caused the most comment, but it has been almost unanimously favorable. The rule does not go into effect until next year, and when the first race of 1899 is called there will probably not be a trainer or driver who will dare do the hopple reverence. The National Trotting Association has for one of its prime objects the improvement of the breed of light harness horses, and if after years of effort in that direction a breeder has not succeeded in producing a horse that can trot or pace unless his legs are tied up so he can do nothing else, then that breeder has made a failure, and the sooner he realizes his mistake the better.

The only other amendment which excited any opposition is the one which struck out Section 3 of Rule 43, which reads: "Any public race at a less distance than one mile and exceeding a half mile, shall be regarded as irregular, and time made in such race shall create a bar."

It was held by those who were unfamiliar with the rules of the National Association that the abrogation of this section would permit horses to be raced on short tracks without getting bar records and then allow them to start in regular races in slower classes.

Those who took the trouble, however, to carefully read Rule 43 saw that Sections 1 and 2 fully covered the case of short distance trotting, and that the time made at any distance less than a mile does, under said rule, constitute a bar.

After the Board of Review had spent several hours in discussing the objections to the new rules, and had heard expressions of opinion from a large number of horsemen, it was decided to call no special meeting of the Congress, but to delegate that power to President Johnston. The new rules will be given a trial this season, and if it shall appear that they are harmful to the trotting interests then the Congress will be convened and every member of the National Trotting Association can rest assured that this organization, which has from its inception done grand and good work for the best interests of honest breeders, owners, trainers and drivers of harness horses will continue in that line, maintaining with its full power everything that is good for the cause, and ready and willing to set aside or amend any rule or regulation that is shown to be detrimental in any degree to honest and high-class racing.

Samuel Gamble Attends a Horse Fair.

LEXINGTON, KY., April 12, 1896.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Next to the grand ovation given to one of America's greatest citizens (Gen. Fitzhugh Lee) was to me the Kentucky Annual Spring Stallion Show, and it attracted a large crowd of the lovers of God's noblest animal—the handsome, high-bred horse—from all parts of the globe. This is a great day here, and is what they call Court Day. The exhibit of high-class stallions was indeed a reminder of old times to me. It was a pleasure, such a grand display as that made yesterday at the Fair Grounds. While in number there were not so many as I have seen on former Court Days, the stallions exhibited were among the finest in the land.

First among the equines led out for inspection was, as I am in duty bound to say, the king of the Electioneer tribe, the great Bow Bells, 2:19½, sire of that great two-year-old race mare, Janie T., 2:14, and I was surprised to find in this great young stallion such a grand, all-round, good individual. I believe I can see in Bow Bells, and I now predict for him, a place as one of America's greatest producing stallions for trotting speed. He was exhibited by Hon. W. W. Estill, and is making the season at that gentleman's beautiful farm near this city, at the very low fee of $50.

The next on exhibition was the handsome Guardsman, 2:23, a good son of Alcyone, and sire of Nicola, 2:14½, and others.

T. C. Anglin sent the fine-looking Sternberg, 2:15 by Wilkes Boy, dam Fanny Allen, by Black's Allen.

W. S. Young, of Lexington, showed Suono (21,309), by Bow Bells, dam Red Letter, by Nutwood 600, also Escort, a brown saddle stallion, 16 hands high, that has never been beaten but once in the show ring and then by the famous saddle stallion, Monte Christo. The next was Rex McDonald, a beautiful black, 16 hands and a model in form.

Dr. Norwood showed Enquirer Wilkes, a grand looker that will some day make his mark in the stud.

The next horse led past was the California bred stallion Regal Wilkes, 2:11½, by Guy Wilkes. He was exhibited by J. Miller Ward of Paris, Ky. Had some of our California lovers of the horse seen Regal Wilkes yesterday they would have been as surprised as I was myself. "Do my eyes deceive me?" He has improved in every way and is a superbly grand looking horse now.

That handsome, as well as genial, horseman, Jerry Tarlton, had on exhibition Betterton, the great son of George Wilkes and sire of Prima Donna, 2:09½ and sixteen others from 2:16 to 2:27.

Richmond Squirrel, one of the prize saddle stallions, was the center of attraction with those who admire the handsome saddler in his natural state.

Wilkes Boy, 2:24½, one of America's leading sires was shown. He holds his age remarkably well and will be of service for a few years to come.

Time Onward, by the great Onward, sire of Beuzetta, 2:06½, and forty-nine others in the 2:20 list, was exhibited and is a handsome horse. The Patchen Stock Farm did not bring Onward to the show, as they did not care to take the chance of injuring him on the trip, but they exhibited the handsome black Patchen Wilkes, 2:29½, sire of Joe Patchen 2:01½, and four handsome speedy-shaped yearlings by him. This farm exhibited another stallion whose beauty attracted unusual attention. This was the chestnut horse, J. J. Audubon, 2:19, sire of Miss Rita (3), 2:09½. He is a perfectly proportioned horse of great substance, style and high action, and had this been an exhibit for prizes I think he and Patchen Wilkes would have been unanimously voted the blue ribbons. I never saw horses that produced a grander impression, and I look for the blood of George Wilkes and Kitty Patchen to be pure silver in the female line for breeders. I want the world from now on to appreciate the blood of Patchen Wilkes.

My genial friend Brook Curry exhibited Ashland Wilkes, 2:17½, sire of John R. Gentry, 2:00½, and also showed Silent Brook (4), 2:16½, by the great Darknight. Mr. Curry says that Silent Brook is the highest type of all-round trotting horse that lives, and I must say for this horse that no more perfect-gaited one ever marked the earth, and he has a world of speed. I predict that he will be a very great sire and will attain a very low trotting record.

C. W. Williams showed the great Allerton, 2:09½. He looks well and will make a very long season here. I have booked a mare by Baron Wilkes to him for this season. She is now heavy in foal to him. I also bred a producing daughter of William L. to Bow Bells.

The great producing son of Electioneer, Hummer, the property of that adventurous breeder, William Simpson of New York, will make the season at Versailles, Ky. Neither Hummer or that other great prospective sire, Oakland Baron, 2:09½, were at the stallion show.

Your readers may ask about the many public sales of the last few months. I have attended them all and very closely watched the class of horses offered. With a very few exceptions the sales were good and all stock sold high. High class and sound stock is very scarce, and it is my opinion that it will be a few years yet before the lovers of light harness horses will see another Hanks, Alix, Azote or Directum. Any nag that approaches them will have a gold standard clasp upon the turf. I attended the Moore sale at Philadelphia, and with the exception of Red Wilkes all others sold very high. I was quite sick at that sale, but bid upon a few, and as the prince of auctioneers, Geo. Bain, was crying to get another bid, he saw that I was likely to fall dead on some that went over me, so he let up on me and found a better game. George and my good friend Fasig had them all, as a rule, mesmerized, and as they were mostly new buyers in the field, it was a rare good sale. Nearly all the stock was either too old or too young for several good buyers that were present. I saw the great old mare Nancy Lee sold for $350. She looked very badly, but there never was a time in my life that I so wished to have $400 that I could spare. I would have bought that old mare whose blood has three times held world's records, that I might give her a good home during the rest of her life upon this earth.

The trainers here think they have some great prospects in the youngsters they are now training. The weather has been so changeable that many tracks have not felt the print of a hoof yet. John Splann told me that he has two very fair prospects in two green ones—one by Baron Wilkes, 2:18, and the other by the great Axtell, 2:12.

I am yet of the same opinion that I have always held that there are but two leading horse producing states—Kentucky and California. All others look outclassed to me.

Yours very truly, SAMUEL GAMBLE.

The Year Book Reviewed.

Gurney Ghu, of the New York Sun, one of the leading turf writers and turf statisticians in the country, writes as follows in that paper:

"For the first time since 1894 statistics show an increase in the volume of harness racing. During the three years following the financial panic in 1893 each season was marked by a falling off of the number of meetings held and the number of races decided. But the record books of 1897 present evidence of returning turf prosperity in the fact that 800 pages are required to contain statistics which filled only 754 pages in 1896, 761 in 1895, and 777 in 1894. Members of the National Trotting Association and the American Trotting Association held last year 1,389 meetings, at which there was something like 7,000 races for purses and prizes amounting to $2,607,220. Upward of 11,000 different horses started for the money. Large as these figures are, however, they do not represent the full extent of harness racing operations in 1897, no account being taken of the hundreds of minor meetings which are annually held independent of either the N. T. A. or the A. T. A.

The 2:30 list, which was started when Lady Suffolk trotted in 2:29½ over the Beacon course at Hoboken in 1845, comprises 14,091 trotters. Nearly 60 per cent of these have entered the list since the pneumatic sulky came into use in 1892. Before that day only 5,909 horses had gained records of 2:30 or better, but the easy running bike enabled 1,586 new comers to get inside the breastworks in a single season. This number was increased to 1,608 in 1893, but the slump in turf affairs which followed the panic brought the number of newcomers down to 1,248 in 1894. Thirteen hundred and fifty trotters entered the list in 1895, 1,056 in 1896, and 1,146 in 1897. Rapid as the growth of the 2:30 list has been, it has not kept pace with the astonishing rate at which pacers of standard speed have multiplied during the last few years.

At the close of 1891 the total number of pacers in the 2:25 list was only 894, or about 15 per cent. of the number of trotters in the 2:30 list. Each campaign during the last six years has seen a steady and surprising increase in the ranks of the sidewheelers.

The 2:25 list was more than doubled between 1891 and 1893, the addition for the latter year numbering 562, while here were 415 newcomers in 1882. In 1894 the list was increased by 734, in 1895 by 749, in 1896 by 847 and in 1897 by 908, bringing the present total up to 5,210, or more than 37 per cent. of the total of the 2:30 trotters. At this ratio of increase it is plain that the pacers will in a very few years be in the lead both as to the number of early record makers and the total number of performers in the standard list. And when the standard of speed is raised to 2:10 the increasing prominence of the pacer is still more noticeable. From a quintet of performers made up of Direct, 2:05½, Johnston, 2:06½, Roy Wilkes, 2:08½, Hal Pointer, 2:09½ and Cricket, 2:10, the list of pacers has grown since 1891 until now it comprises 185 names. During the six campaigns since the advent of the pneumatic sulky, the list of 2:10 trotters which included at the close of 1891 Sunol, 2:08½, Maud S., 2:08½, Palo Alto, 2:08½, Nancy Hanks, 2:09, Allerton, 2:09½, Jay-Eve See, 2:10 and Nelson, 2:10, has received only 63 additions.

Judged by the number of his get that gained new records, Allerton, 2:09½, the first stallion to beat 2:10, ranks as the leading trotting sire of 1897, twenty-five of his offspring having gained records ranging from 2:13½ to 2:30. Under the higher standard of extreme speed, Chimes leads all other trotting sires of the year, having to his credit the three crack campaigners, The Monk, 2:08½; The Abbott, 2:11½, and King Chimes, 2:14, together with the dams of Daredevil, 2:09½, and American Belle, 2:12½. Still another test of merit places Wilkes Boy at the head, the get of this horse having won $21,040 last year; but these figures include the winnings of both trotters and pacers. As a straight out trotting sire Chimes excels Wilkes Boy on this score, horses of orthodox gait by the son of Electioneer having earned $20,450. The old Long Island stallion, King Wilkes, is a close second to Chimes, eight trotters by him having won $18,863. Of these King Wagner, 2:14½; Philonides, 2:11½, and Rilla, 2:10, entered the 2:15 list, while the last-named trotter earned more money than any other performer on the turf, placing to her credit $14,406.

A Novel Plan.

An Eastern correspondent suggests the following plan of organization among harness horse owners that is novel to say the least. He suggests that the owners incorporate a company, issue capital stock, and subscribe for the same in amounts to suit.

Then let this company lease the use of a number of tracks in the State, agreeing to give meetings of say from three to six days each year, offering purses as the location may justify, and in accordance with classes and rules same as now used, with the following changes: All stockholders may enter free any horse that they own eligible under the present rules; all purses paid pro rata, if gate receipts and other privileges do not afford enough to pay in full. If more than enough is received, declare dividends to all stockholders who have participated in the races and won no money.

Of course no one can participate in races unless he is a stockholder. Then if a man enters several horses he makes a better entertainment, and more money is taken in at the gate, and if he wins no money at all, he may get a dividend to help pay his expenses. This is far better for the horse-men and will please the people, for they go to races to witness a contest of speed.

This plan will stimulate horsemen, and will create more interest and demand for this class of horses. The company can divide and arrange circuits to suit horsemen and breeders, employ starters or other officers and help to go around the different circuits, and everything can be run in first-class shape without any cheating or societies falling.

News From the North.

[Portland Rural Spirit.]

J. H. Leonard will have Argoreate and Argotine at the Denver meeting.

Dr. Powell Reeves writes that there are about 30 horses in training at Spokane.

Five cars of horses have recently been shipped from Montana points to Edmonton, N. W. T. They are intended for use on the overland route to the Klondike.

J. W. Wisdom of Point Breeze Farm, Baker City, Oregon, has a full brother to Challenger Chief, 2:15. He is 6 years old and will make a great stallion for some one.

Since leasing the Irvington track for a race meeting, horsemen have taken on new life in these parts. Some of the boys are getting their old clothes dyed up for colors, and enquiring the price of photographs.

Patents of Interest to Horsemen.

The following list of patents for the week ending April 12th was granted:

Henry Beach, London, England, Tire Lever, 612,252.
John A. G. Becker, Hays Mts., Pa., Dumping Wagon, 602,151.
Henry A. Bierley, Portsmouth, Ohio, Shaft Tug, 602,050.
Albert L. Crandall, Rochester, N. Y., Thrill Coupling, 602,309.
Thomas N. Crook, York, Pa., Safety Axle, 602,308.
Wm. S. Enslow, Jackson, Pa., Hitching or Unhitching Device, 602,313.
Joseph A. Gilley, Springfield, Oregon, Wagon Brake, 602,819.
Walter C. Halley, Halley, Ark., Cattle Guard, 602,075.
Matthew Harcourt, Detroit, Mich., Hanger for Fire Harness, 602,322.
Peter Krumschield, Boston, Mass., Cushioned Horseshoe, 602,387.
Finis E. Lack, Paducah, Ky., Whiffletree Hook, 602,136.
Arthur Maxwell, Ludlow Falls, Ohio, Dumpcart, 602,225.
Charles A. Maynard, Springfield, Mass., Rubber-tired Wheel, 602,318.
Thomas M. Miller, Bethlehem, Pa., Elastic Horseshoe, 602,236.
Reuben C. Patterson, Summit, Ga., Axle Bearing for Vehicle Wheels, 602,100.

Veterinary Department.

THIS DEPARTMENT is edited by Dr. A. F. Buzard, M. R. C. V. S., 2128 Market Street, San Francisco. Subscribers can have gratuitous advice in cases of sick or injured animals by sending full particulars of the ailment. Communications must reach this office not later than Tuesday to insure an answer in that week's issue. Communications that require answering by mail must be accompanied by $1.00 and addressed to DR. ### Navicular Lameness in the Horse.

I have been requested to treat on this important lameness in the column of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Fifty years ago navicular disease was unknown, not because it did not exist, for probably it has been a source of lameness since the horse's domestication, but because it was not recognized until Prof. Turner of the London Veterinary College made the discovery that the mischief lay in the deep-seated structure of the foot. Prior to this, any obscure lameness, for which there was no appearance, was relegated to "the shoulder," especially when the foot was good and open, and presented no appearance of disease, as is frequently the case, while when small and mishapen it was referred to as "contraction." Now we know that contraction is rather the effect than the cause of navicular disease, but "the shoulder" is still a favorite spot for fixing the seat for lameness, and many are the rubbings and blisterings that the unfortunate animal is subject to before some one a little wiser points to the foot as the correct situation of the disease. The foot of the horse is something more than a lump of horn to which an iron shoe may be nailed. This horny box is nature's shoe, and the true foot structures are contained within it, the principal one being the coffin bone. Behind this is a small wedge-shaped bone, called the navicular or "shuttle" bone, and over it the tendon plays as it runs to its insertion into the inferior surface of the coffin bone. Navicular disease commences in an inflammatory process in this bone, or in the cartilage lining the inner surface. The disease is progressive, carries of the bone takes place, the tendon playing over it becomes involved, and in extreme cases ruptured, so that the toe of the animal is cocked up, and the back part of the fetlock touches the ground.

CAUSES.

1.—HEREDITARY.—When we say a disease is hereditary, it is not necessary that it should be congenital, or present at birth; what is meant is that certain structures are predisposed to take on the diseased state, and only require exposure to favorable conditions to insure its development, i. e., the feet of an animal bred from parents, or a parent, lame from navicular disease, would not stand the "hammer, hammer, on the 'ard, 'igh road," like those of an animal that had not the hereditary taint. The feet might remain healthy doing slow work on the soft ground, but fail when fast work on hard roads is demanded. There is no sure way of propagating this disease than breeding from unsound parents. There is a greater tendency to this perhaps, where navicular disease is concerned than there is with other hereditary unsoundness, and for this reason it is rare to find bad horse suffering from this form of lameness. They are generally good, all round, well-bred, well-shaped, good-bearded, good workers and fast; they get lamer and lamer, change owners, until they fall into the hands of some one with an "eye for the beautiful," so far as a mare is concerned, and he perhaps thinks she would throw a good foal. She is cheap, because useless for work, being incurably lame, she is, therefore, put to the horse to earn her keep, and the result is a good looking colt, but one with a predisposition to the same disease.

2.—STABLE MANAGEMENT has something to do with it. Horses are frequently kept standing in the stall for days together. During these periods of rest there is a deficiency of synovial secretions; then the animal is taken out, put to hard, fast work, which, but for its irregular character, it could have done very well, and the result is bruising or injury, inflammation and navicular disease.

3.—WORK.—Light horses are more subject to navicular disease than the heavy breeds used in slow draught, although it is sometimes found in those that are "high steppers" and work on stone-paved roads, but the rule is that draught animals are more prone to laminitis than navicular lameness. A very large proportion of horses suffering from lameness in front in San Francisco and other large cities are lame from this disease.

The forefeet receive the whole weight of the body, or rather of the head, neck and half the trunk; behind, the hocks receive the greater portion of this weight. Therefore we look principally for foot lameness in front, and hock lameness behind. Added to this weight on the fore feet we have the dashing and banging on hard roads, and it is reasonable to expect that inflammation of structures on which this stress is laid would be excited. Occasionally it may occur suddenly without reference to work, from a slip or stumble, or from concussion in jumping. The horse may be ridden from home sound enough, and fall dead lame so suddenly as to cause one to think it had picked up a stone, but no stone is to be found, or indeed any other apparent cause of lameness, and then the usual tale is that the horse has "sprained its shoulder."

SYMPTOMS.

The first symptoms is generally "pointing," an almost infallible test for navicular disease, although there may occasionally occur a case that does not point. It is often possible to foretell it from this symptom alone, when to all appearance the horse is quite sound, and certainly works so. Horses sometimes point from habit and weariness, but this differs from the pointing of navicular disease. In the former there is a careless, lounging attitude, one hind and one fore foot being rested simultaneously. In the latter only one foot is pointed at a time, and that in a manner that shows the horse is in earnest about it; when both feet are affected he will advance them alternately. The next symptom, and, from want of observation on the part of the owner often the first noticed is a shortness of step, perhaps without positive lameness, the animal going worse down hill from the weight being thrown on the heels, thus placing the stress on the affected parts. In coming out of the stable the horse seems stiff and declined to move, but when he has gone some distance, especially if the ground is soft, the movement is freer and the step longer. A look at the shoes will show a deal. The horse lame from navicular disease always throws as much weight as possible on his toes, thus the shoe is worn at the toe. When both feet are affected the step is short and stilted, and the muscles of the shoulder seem stiff and rigid, giving rise to the ridiculous term "chest founder." This is easily accounted for, the step is short because the pain in the foot on the ground causes the horse to bring the other up quickly to relieve it, and the stiffness arises because the flexion of the foot causes pain in the joint, and he does not pick up his feet freely because he knows that the further they have to come down again the greater will be the shock of the concussion; hence the painful "dot" of groggy horses. There is negative evidence of navicular disease when no other possible cause of lameness can be found, but the pointing, the peculiar gait, the wear of the shoe, and the varied temperature of the foot are generally positive enough to enable an experienced veterinary surgeon to pronounce on the seat of disorder.

TREATMENT.

For navicular disease there is no cure. A measure of relief may be given in the early stages, and the horse kept working for a time, but sooner or later the lameness becomes so great as to render this out of the question. Frog setons, blisters and firing at the coronet and bleeding at the toe have all been tried but in vain. Sometimes the treatment adopted for contraction, viz., a dose of physic, cold poultices, a blister to the coronet and a run at grass seems to give relief, but it is only temporary; the lameness grows gradually worse, there is ulceration of the navicular bone or adhesion, and presently rupture of the flexor tendon, and the horse becomes useless. Rest does not seem to help the animal, indeed, it has been frequently remarked that "the longer they stand in the worse they come out." If the lame animal is put to slow work on soft ground, the disease is found to make slower progress than if it is retained at road work.

UN-NEURING.

The grand remedy in cases of navicular disease is the operation of neurotomy. This does not cure the diseased structure, but it takes away all pain and consequent lameness, and makes the horse useful for a period, depending on the care in selection of cases, and the carefulness of the shoeing smith. Neurotomy is an operation that requires scientific training on the part of the operator. It consists in removing about an inch of the nerves that supply the foot with sensation. The horse is cast, the foot to be operated upon released from the hobbles, the hair closely clipped, and a transverse incision made through the skin just above the pastern, the nerve searched for, freed from connective tissue, cut through and about an inch removed from the side most remote from the nerve-center.

There are several ways of performing the operation which need not be entered into. The high operation just described is the best, the nerve being divided above its bifurcation, ALL sensation is then removed from the foot. The want of judgment in selecting subjects for the operation has brought it into disrepute. But for horses incurably lame, either from ring-bone, side-bone or navicular disease, it becomes a question of this sort.

I have an animal that is absolutely worthless, because it is cruel to work it. If I have it unnerved, and it only lasts six months, its labors will have repaid me for the cost of the operation. But instead of only lasting six or eight months, it may, with judicious treatment, last eight or ten years, or until the horse meets its end from some other cause, so that, instead of being passed from hand to hand until it goes from bad to worse, not only in disease, but as to owner, the animal is usefully performing all the work that we can ask a horse to do. The success of the operation is immediate. The horse gets up sound, but about three weeks, often less, are necessary for the wounds to heal. Instead of a cripple, we have an animal that steps as freely as on the day it was foaled, no blundering or stumbling, as some suppose. It may be ridden down hill, over rough roads, with perfect security. I have seen unnerved horses used for every purpose, and out of some scores of cases which I have operated upon have only known two that went wrong from causes other than preventable ones and these were from disintegration of the tendon, which causes the heel to bulge out and the toe to turn up.

Sometimes nerve-tumors form on the cut end of the nerve, and this happens when taken too soon to work after the operation is performed, but the removing of a neuroma is a simple affair. Pricks from shoeing or other injuries that with feeling in the foot would cause the animal to go lame, and so receive treatment, in the unnerved animal pass unnoticed, there being no sensation; these suppurate and cause the hoof to drop off. This is one of the drawbacks to the operation, but in everything connected with horseflesh luck is a great element. In any case, we have an incurably lame horse; with neurotomy we have a possibly useful servant.

The Duty of Members.

On Tuesday next, April 26th, the annual meeting of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association will be held in this city. It is an imperative duty that every member of this Association owes to it, to the harness horse interests of the Coast, and to himself, to be present at this meeting. There never has been a time since the breeding of the light harness horse began in California, when so much depended upon the action of the breeders of the State. The P. C. T. H. B. A., as the representative organization of the interest on this Coast, has a duty to perform this year, and it devolves upon the individual members to decide whether that duty shall be performed. Since the programme for the summer meeting at Oakland was announced, and the list of dash races perused by owners and trainers, there has been a decided revival in the interest taken in harness horse events on this Coast, and every one seems anxious to see the new plan given a trial. But there are many things to do besides announcing a programme, and every member of the Association has a portion of the work to perform before he can say that he has done his duty in the matter. The first task that devolves upon each and every member is to attend the annual meeting if it is possible for him to get there. It will be held Tuesday evening at 8 o'clock, in the office of the secretary of the Association, at No. 22½ Geary street in this city.

The National Trotting Association.

By order of the President a Special Meeting of the Board of Review was held at the Murray Hill Hotel, New York, N. Y., commencing at 2 P. M., Monday, April 11, 1898. The following officers and members were present: P. P. Johnston, President; David Bonner, First Vice-President; member for Eastern District, Morgan G. Bulkeley; member for Atlantic District, Geo. W. Archer; member for Central District, Wm. Russell Allen, and W. H. Gocher, Secretary. Frank Bowers of Philadelphia, Pa., a member of the Atlantic District Board was also present. The following resolutions were adopted:

"The rules passed by the last Congress not having been tested, it is not deemed wise by this Board to call a special meeting to reconsider them. We believe those now in force should have an honest, fair, and impartial test this season, after which, if it should appear to the satisfaction of the President that the continued enforcement of any one of them would be hurtful to the trotting interests of the country, he is authorized to call a special Congress to take such action as it may deem needful and proper."

"Owing to an apparent misapprehension as to the effect of the repeal of section 3 of Rule 43, the Board of Review hereby declares that Sections 1 and 2 of Rule 43 are in full force and time made at any distance less than a full mile does under said rule constitute a bar."

THE Chicago, Union Pacific and Northwestern line, with its daily service of through Pullman and Tourist Sleeping Cars, to all Eastern points, and all meals served "a la carte" in dining cars, offers "comforts in travel" nowhere reached in a higher degree of perfection. Passengers leaving San Francisco on the 6 P. M. train arrive in Chicago in 3½ days, and avoid the necessity of changing cars en route. For tickets and sleeping car reservations call on or address R. R. Ritchie, General Agent, No. 2 New Montgomery street, Palace Hotel, San Francisco, Cal.

PITTSFIELD, Vt., Dec. 7, 1896.

W. F. YOUNG, P. D. F., Dear Sir:—I received two bottles of AB ORINE and I am using it on Wind Puffs with best results.

Yours truly,
FRANK DUBKEE.

Sulky Notes.

DON'T fail making an entry for the Breeder's meeting.

IT is said that Trinket, 2:14, carried her last foal 375 days.

C. H. NELSON's horses will be trained this year by George Dustin.

THERE is a report that Eastern horsemen are dickering for the purchase of Zombro, 2:11.

THE new rule books of the National Trotting Association will be ready for delivery early in May.

DON'T forget to go to Pleasanton next Saturday. Those who enjoy good clean sport cannot afford to stay away.

Thirty thousand will be hung up for winners at the Breeders' meeting. If you want some of it make your entries.

THE Denver colt, Success, 2:24½, owned by Du Bois Bros, is regarded as the coming trotting champion of Colorado.

HAMILTON BUSBEY, New York, has been chosen judge of trotter and roadster classes at the Washington, D. C., horse show.

JOHN R. GENTRY and Guinette, who have been matched for $10,000 a side are both nine years old and by sons of Geo. Wilkes.

THE treasurer's report of the American Trotting Register Association shows an income above expenditures. Registration is increasing.

GUY WILKES has had nearly one hundred mares booked to him already at his home, the Two-Minute Stock Farm, near Cleveland, Ohio.

MARLBOROUGH is probably the youngest son of Hambletonian 10 living. He is located at Freedomia, New York, and was foaled in 1875.

C. W. WILLIAMS has not lost faith in the trotters. At the recent Lexington sale he purchased twenty mares to mate to his horse Allerton.

VOLUME 13 of the Year Book shows that up to January, 1898, 14,091 trotters had taken records of 2:30 or better and 5,210 pacers records of 2:25 or better.

BETHEL 2:16, the mare that caused Bob Kneeb's all his trouble, and made a case celebrated on two continents, will be seen on the German tracks this year.

OLD Nancy Lee, the dam of Nancy Hanks, 2:04, is to be bred to Pilator, a son of Pilot Medium. The produce of this union will be closely inbred to Happy Medium.

A TWO-YEAR-OLD daughter of Joe Patchen, 2:01½, is to be bred to Star Pointer, 1:59½ this year. If speed produces speed in this instance, how fast will the prospective foal pace? It may be a trotter.

A FOUR days race meeting will be given during the first week in July by the Agricultural Association of Lakeview, Oregon. A thousand dollars in purses will be offered for runners, trotters and pacers.

IN view of the prospective dearth of fast trotters on account of growing demands for export, breeding should be active. Bear in mind that colts bred this year will, as a rule, not come in use before 1903.

SARAH JANE, who weighs only 650 pounds and has a record of 2:18½, will be in the string of John Kervick, of Worcester, Mass., during the coming season. She has been timed halves in races in 1:04.

LOOK over the advertisements of the races to be given during the first two weeks of the Breeders' meeting beginning at Oakland, June 25th, and make as many entries as you possibly can. It will pay you.

SAN BERNARDINO will have a day of harness races, Saturday, April 30th. Four races for trotters and pacers are advertised. The meeting is to be given by James Poole, manager of the San Bernardino track.

GENERAL NELSON A. MILES, Commander in Chief of the United States army evidently does not mean to go to war without a good horse to ride in the field. He recently paid $1,500 for a gaited Kentucky saddler.

DAN WILLIAMS a well-known Eastern driver, is not certain whether he favors the new license rule or not. He applied for a license and got it, but it was numbered 13, and Williams is afraid the number will act as a hoodoo.

UMAHALIS 2:21, the bay filly by Chehalis 2:07½, will not be raced this year. She is thought to be able to beat 2:10, but as she will be compelled to go in very fast company if taken east with Chehalis, Mr. Frazier thinks it best to let her rest this year.

IF Monterey, 2:13½, goes along all right this year and meets with no accidents, we believe he will be able to lower the California trotting record. He is making quite a season in the stud, looks as fine as a fiddle and has his speed with him all the time.

MR. BOYD, of the Oakwood Park Stock Farm has sent a number of his fine mares to be bred to R. E. de B. Lopez' grand horse, James Madison, 2:17½. The colts and fillies by Madison meet with ready sale, as they not only have speed but size and good looks.

HON. JESSE D. CARR lost last week by death a fine imported Percheron stallion weighing 2000 pounds. The cause of death was rupture of the stomach produced by gastric trouble. Mr. Carr purchased the horse about one year ago from Henry Miller.

ON and after November 1st of this year the fees charged for the registration of trotters and pacers over two years old will be double what they now are. The age of animals is to be computed from the first day in January in the year in which they were foaled.

AN adjourned meeting of the Board of Review of the National Trotting Association will be held at the Palmer House, Chicago, at 11 A. M., on Tuesday, May 10, 1898.

AT Rose Dale Breeding Farm near Santa Rosa, there are many fine foals arriving, mostly by Daly 2:15. Hazel Turk, by Silas Skinner has a colt by Daly that stood 42 inches high the day he was foaled.

PROSPECTS are that the horse show to be held in Washington, D. C., May 4th to 7th next, will be a brilliant success. The enquiry for good boxes among the fashionables is so keen that it looks as though a handsome sum would be realized when they are sold.

THERE will be $30,000 given in purses at the Breeders' meeting to open in Oakland, June 25. Every trotter and pacer in training in California ought to be entered in these races. Never before has there been such an opportunity for so many of them to win money.

UNCLE SAM is a good buyer of horses these troublesome times. It is said at Washington that within the past six weeks options on nearly 8,000 horses have been taken, and the stock is being held for quick delivery—this in addition to about 1,500 purchased outright.

THE eighteen-year-old stallion, trotting bred, Warlock, by Belmont—Waterwitch, by Pilot, Jr., which Chas. Bates recently purchased and docked for park purposes, was the leader of the tandem which won the red ribbon in the Durland Horse Show, New York, recently.

MARCUS DALY's stable of trotters and pacers now in training at the Bitter Root ranch, Hamilton, Montana, will be shipped to the track at Wheaton, Ill., about May 15 and there prepare for their engagements. The stable will, of course, be in charge of Ben Kenney.

C. J. HAMLIN says that after Vermont Black Hawk, who weighed but 900 pounds, had died, in 1856, his skeleton was placed on the scales with that of a draft horse of 1300 pounds, and it weighed the most. The quality of the bone of Black Hawk was finer and denser.

THERE are to be trotting and pacing contests on the Hollister track one week from today. Mr. H. H. Hellman, the lessee of the track, is managing the affair and will have everything done according to rule and in first-class shape. There are a number of good horses in training at the Hollister track.

IT might be a good idea for the secretaries of the various fair associations in the State, some of whom are so seriously afflicted with that tired feeling, to attend the Pleasanton meeting next Saturday just to see how many people can be got together, by a little rustling, to enjoy a day's sport in a little country town in California in a dry year.

THE question to be agitated in Russia of excluding all native horses from participating in races that are not of full Russian breeding. Should this go into effect it would certainly curtail the importation of American breeding stock, which would hardly be of benefit to Russian breeders, as the Russian trotter is very much in need of fresh blood.

THERE is talk of a splendid half mile track being made near the Union Park Club's grounds in San Mateo county. This track is to be used exclusively for light harness horse racing. The Golden Gate Driving Club has long been wishing for just such a place and should it be fitted up there is no doubt immense crowds would gather there every Sunday.

A GREAT heat race, two out of three, to take place during the coming autumn meeting in Vienna, Austria, has been arranged. Two thousand dollars are given away in purses, of which the winner gets about $1,200. Also a premium of $800 is added if the winner beats the best European mile record, which was performed last year by Colonel Kuser, who went in 2:14½.

LOOK over the Year Book and note the stables that win money year after year, and you will find those whose custom it is to enter their horses early and often and try for first money in every race in which they start regardless of fast records that may be secured. The money lost each year by the "cute" ones who hold back for a "big killing," would build a battle ship.

THE grey pacing mare Phenol 2:11½, by Judge Waller, a son of Speculation, has dropped a fine colt by Charles Derby. The mare is the property of L. C. Ruble of Rio Vista. In 1895 there were two grey mares called Phenol in the pacing ranks, the one above mentioned, and one by Jersey Wilkes, owned in the East. Both mares got a record of 2:11½ during the month of August that year.

BONNER N. B., 2:17, has been purchased by Mr. Chris. Simpson, of Helix, Oregon, who will place him in stud. Bonner N. B. is just ten years old. He stands 16½ hands high, weighs nearly 1,200 pounds and made his record in a race. He is by Daly, 2:15, son of Gen. Benton, and his dam is by Gen. McClellan. With his size, style and speed he should make a sire of colts that will sell.

JUST because a District Association with a board of fossilized directors cannot make a success of a race meeting in a country town, it is not reasonable to argue that the town or the trotting interest is dead. A good man who knows his business and hasn't forgotten that he is alive, can make not only a success of a week's meeting in almost every town in California, but he can make some money as well.

THERE will be great sport at Honolulu during the trotting and pacing matinees to be given there during May and June this year. W. W. Wood, 2:07, Our Dick, 2:10½, Creole, 2:15, and other fast ones are now owned in the Islands, and great interest is manifested in the light harness horse there. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has made arrangements for reports of all the races that come off over the island tracks.

THE Fair Association at Bethlehem, Pa., is the most remarkable association of its kind in America. It is as prominent and successful as the biggest mile track trotting association in the country, and the time usually made (half-mile considered) is the equal of any Grand Circuit meet. The daily attendance at its meetings varies from 40,000 to 60,000 people, and the harness races are one of the leading features. —Philadelphia Enquirer.

ALCYONE, 2:27, who died when ten years old, has to his credit 60 performers that have taken records of 2:30 or better, 43 that have records of 2:25 or better, 24 of 2:20 or better, 11 of 2:15 or better, and 4 from 2:10 to 2:08. No sire that lived to be but 10 years old ever accomplished such results as this. It will be recollected that his sire was George Wilkes and his dam that wonderful brood mare Almamater.

IT is the intention of Owens Bros. to enter their horse Joe Wheeler, 2:07½, in the pacing classes to which he is eligible in California this year. The son of Sidney Arnett is suffering from a bad leg and may not be able to stand the work to fit him for a campaign this year, but his owners have strong hopes that he will round to all right and will take the chances and make the entries. It is to be hoped they will not be disappointed.

HON. JAS. W. REA, the progressive and popular politician, all-around business man and proprietor of the Vendome Stock Farm of San Jose, has bred his three favorite mares to Boodle 2:12½, viz: Nettie Nutwood (dam of Hillsdale 2:16), by Nutwood; Laura R. 2:21½ (dam of Minnie B. 2:23½), by Electioneer and Magdallah 2:22 by Primus. All of these mares have Boodle colts by their side and Mr. Rea is shrewd enough to want some more just like them.

THE owner of Lynne Bel 2:10½ has decided to breed the grandson of Electioneer to Miss Bleu, a daughter of Sir Modred and Bas Bleu, by Duke of Magenta. This mare was bred at Rancho del Paso and was sold at their 1894 sale. She started three times in 1897, but never showed any speed in a race though she did some fair running in her work. She has good trotting action and it is thought a fast trotter may result from her mating with Lynne Bel.

GOOD looks and good manners are great money bringing virtues nowadays, and they are more cheaply acquired than developed speed. Fat is a great concealer of homeliness, and "knee action" is as profitable as the "foam" on soda water. Fat and knee action are more cheaply made than speed. Many horses can be taught to step high quite a bit more readily than they can be taught to step fast, and a moderately high stepper, if fat and sleek, will sell for a great deal more than a moderately fast stepper that is lacking in road manners.

EVERY county in California that makes any pretensions to horse breeding should have a stallion show every spring on the plan so long followed in Eastern localities. The horses are not shown for prizes, but on a day set are taken to the county seat and paraded on the streets or in the public square for the edification and benefit of farmers and others who have mares to breed. All sorts, thoroughbred, trotters, pacers, coach, draft and other stallions are shown with results profitable to their owners and breeders as well.

JAMES MACK has in training at the Hueneme race track five green trotters belonging to Mr. Pennel of Santa Barbara. The list is as follows: Bay stallion, 5, by Guy Wilkes, 2:15½—Veronica, 3, 2:29, by Almont; black filly, 3, by McKinney, 2:11½—Maggie E., 2:19½, by Nutwood, 2:18; bay filly, 3, by McKinney, 2:11½—Hambletonian Mambrino; Belle Wilson, black mare by Cyrus R., 2:17½. This mare started in several races two years ago, but did not get a record.

THE Alameda Driving Association claims to have the fastest and best track on the coast, and its claim will not be disputed by those who know the track. The officers extend a general invitation to horsemen to join the association, use the track and help to keep it in condition for trotting and pacing horses. The grounds are not enclosed by a fence and meetings held there are given without an admission fee. Mr. H. D. Brown has been engaged to keep the track in order, and from a personal inspection of the same we can say that the work is well done. The only income of the association is from monthly dues, and the members certainly deserve credit for the manner in which they have maintained and conducted the track in the past. No better place can be selected at which to train horses for the coming Breeders' meeting, as there is less danger of a horse going lame there than at any track on the Coast, owing to the springy nature of the soil.

CHEHALIS, 2:07½, is now at the Frazier track, near Pendleton, Oregon, and is in fine form. He has not stepped a mile faster than 2:15 this year, but he did this so easily on the slow track after being worked two heats in 2:20 that Mr. Frazier is certain the horse has all his old-time speed and will be able to lower his record when he is asked to do it. Chehalis will be in swift company this year. He will contest against the best horses of the East on the "grand circuit," his prospective rivals being all in the 2:08 class. It is believed that Chehalis will give a good account of himself on the fast and well-kept Eastern tracks, in view of his remarkable performances in the West. Undoubtedly he will be a drawing-card, as the Easterners want to see him. Chehalis will be taken East about June 1st next. He first goes to Denver and then to Omaha. Other places on the route are Glenn's Falls, N. Y.; Fort Wayne, Ind.; Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo and Columbus. Chehalis has already been entered for events at Glenn's Falls and Fort Wayne, and entries for the remainder of the circuit will follow.

IT may well be doubted whether there is any branch of horse breeding equally as promising and profitable now as the production of high-stepping carriage horses, and generally high-class road horses. The best of these of course never equal in value a great trotter, but only now and then do we get a successful trotter, while from the right stock you can breed carriage horses of size, style, action, and beauty with great uniformity thus drawing few blanks in the lottery. Mr. M. W. Dunham, proprietor of the famous Oaklawn Farm, Wayne, Ill., has demonstrated that from finely bred stallions of the French Coach and trotting breeds. High-stepping stylish carriage horses can be produced from trotting-bred mares without materially diminishing the speed capacity while increasing size, finish, and substance. Mr. Dunham has over one hundred French Coach and French trotting stallions and mares both record-holders and prize winners. He also deals largely in Percherons. Separate catalogues are issued for the French coaches and trotters and for the Percherons. See announcement elsewhere and send for catalogue, specifying what you want, to M. W. Dunham, Wayne, Du Page County, Ill.

Summaries of Races at Oakland.

THURSDAY, APRIL 14.

First Race—Seven furlongs, selling, four-year-olds and upward. Purse $500.
D. M. Hanlon's b f Sly, 4, by Racine—Aurelia II..... (Thorpe, 108) 1

Stuart's Texas Winter Racing Circuit.

DALLAS (Tex.), April 19.—Dan A. Stuart, the enterprising ex-Dallasite, now living in New York, is here, and today perfected a sporting event that he has been promoting more or less for seven years. He has established a Southern winter racing circuit, embracing three points in Texas and one in Arkansas. The climate in the Lone Star State in winter, he says, is as fair as there is in the world, and the distance of Texas from the racing center is not great.

Stuart will establish one race course at San Antonio, another at the grounds of Dickinson, midway between Galveston and Houston, a third at a point half way between Dallas and Fort Worth, and the fourth at Hot Springs, Ark. In addition to the outlay for an electric railway between Dallas and Fort Worth, Stuart will put $200,000 in the buildings and grounds at the Dallas, Fort Worth track.

Stuart says that the races on his circuit will not begin until the State Fair closes. He will have his circuit ready for the coming winter races to begin at Hot Springs about December 1st.

From the Millionaire Horseman.

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 20, 1895.

After giving the Speed Sustaining Elixir a trial on three horses that were troubled with defective respiration, I find in case a marked improvement. I drove one of them a quarter in 40 seconds, and the result was a well defined case of thumps. I administered a dose of the Elixir at once and two hours after drove the same horse three consecutive quarters without a rest between in 35 1/2, 35, and 34 1/2 seconds. I believe it to be a great benefit to respiration.

FORTUNATE. If all were agreed that certain lines of blood were the only ones from which to expect great race horses; if there were a general consensus of opinion in that, or allied questions, the breeding of race horses would lose a great deal of interest. Just so sure, that if race horses could be turned out with the same certainty of following the mold as in bricks, or even the more intricate mechanism in watches and locomotives, the greatest of all the charms connected with the pursuit would be destroyed.

There is an element which can never be thrown aside and that is LUCK. The controversies continually arising lead to better information, it is true, but when there is a decided success give Dame Fortune her proper praise.

The "figure system" of the late C. Bruce Lowe has elicited a great deal of discussion, in the main a difference of opinion, a determination to oppose the grounds on which he bases his formula. That he adopted it after careful consideration, and after an amount of study that only an intensely enthusiastic individual would bestow is beyond a question, and that it is also founded on as nearly mathematical grounds as can be secured is equally as well assured. A simple groundwork. The "classic races" for over a century forming the test and the winners traced to the founders of the tribes, dams as well as sires.

But that part of the subject will be reserved for future consideration, and in the mean time another of the mooted questions briefly reviewed. A friend, and by the way, another of these devoted inquirers into the mysteries of breeding, has fully accepted the theory that the first progeny of a mare is likely to be the best and likewise that it is a mistake to keep breeding her to the same sire. No matter how "happy the nick" that should not govern in the future and another strain be substituted.

There has been an unfounded prejudice against first foals. So firmly established that after the study that has been given to the problems attending on breeding, it is surely safe to say that a large proportion of breeders are still inimical to first foals.

And rightly so, the opinion of my esteemed friend to the contrary. For one example of the first foal being the best there are at least twenty on the other side. That might be expected when a mare was trained to run many races before being relegated to the breeding stud. But even in that case the records will not prove the assertion.

Betsey Malone, foaled in 1829, ran 22 races, 21 of which she won. Her first foal, 1838, little good, her succeeding foals Jenny Lind, 1843, was a fair race mare, he filly Charmer, in 1844, by far the best of the get of her sire Glencoe. Sleeping Maggie, 1842, was also by Glencoe, so was Jenny Lind, and again the next best Glencoe mare; Reel, comes to the support of the theory that the first foal is not the best. A great race mare, so good that she scarcely ever met defeat. Foaled in 1838, her first foal Lincoln, by Leviathan—a great sire—two more Leviathans, one of them Captain Elgee, a good horse, Bob Green, by imp. Ambassador, and Anna Dunne, by imp. Sovereign, and the great race horse Lecompte, the only horse that ever beat Lexington. Ashland, by Wagner, then came Prioreess, by imp. Sovereign, the winner of the Cæsarawitch, then Calvit, then Starke, by Wagner, also a winner in England, then Dentley, by imp. Yorkshire, and then Fanny Wells, a right good mare. Every succeeding foal an improvement, culminating, perhaps, in Lecompte. Captain Minor, a capable authority, always insisting, a better horse than Lexington.

Alice Carneal, foaled 1836, had several foals, Miss Trustee, Fance by Chorister, Grey Alice, by Chorister, Maid of Orleans, by Berthune, then Lexington, nothing in the family to be compared to him, unless it was Umpire, by Lecompte, who went amiss in England after the Englishmen howled that he was a year older than represented.

Charmer, as before represented, was by Glencoe, and with out much question the best of the get of that famous sire, the next best representative being Reel. Her daughter, Maggie Mitchell, neither raced nor her progeny, from untoward causes, never raced to any extent. But the greatest of the family, after allowing all favoritism on my part to have a fair share in the discussion, is Marion. In all probability, if a hundred students of breeding race horses were asked, which do you consider the greatest broodmare of America? a large percentage of them would answer, Marion. More "stake horses" to her credit than any other mare, and those of a class which marked them at the very top of the ladder. Which the best? A difficult question to answer.

* * *

Emperor of Norfolk, The Czar, El Rio Rey, Yo Tambien, all would find advocates, and when some one came in with the question: What else? The public records, calendars, and form books, would have to be thrown aside and the question could only say I have fancies outside of direct proofs. Some one would say, perhaps, Duchess of Norfolk, but that could only be substantiated from private opinions. Rey del Rey, I know one man, at least, who will be ready to make affidavit that he was the "pick of the basket," and then another who is ready to swear that all mentioned were not to be compared to Rey del Sieras. Another will swear that Yo El Rey was the boss, and one who claimed that her first horse foal was the choice of the big family would be troubled to substantiate his position.

The only authority recognized in these sort of discussions, the record. Quite evident that other testimony cannot be admitted, inasmuch as the opening the door to "private trials," etc., would lead to endless complications. Were a person to follow the example of Mr. Lowe and take the winners of Derby, Oaks and St. Leger and the proportion of first foals among them, that would be valuable testimony.

THE NEW HOME OF ADBELL—The following interesting letter will attract attention from California as well as Eastern people as it is more than assured that the champion yearling will have a good home and a good chance to secure still greater distinction at his new home on the banks of the great river. There will also be a strong desire to have Adbell given an opportunity of showing that his early promise was not a vain hope and that there is yet capacity to take very high rank among trotting stallions, and that measured by record as well as the performances of his progeny. Those who saw him trot in his yearling form are fully justified in the belief, that without further disturbing influences, he will make a mark very nearly, if not quite, in the top notch. Bred to the mares with which he will be mated at Suburban Farm and under the management of adepts it will be singular, indeed, if this famous son of a superlatively famous dam, does not come up to the most sanguine expectations of his most ardent admirers.

SAN FRANCISCO, April 1898.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Thinking some among the army of readers of your excellent paper may be interested to learn something of Adbell's new owner and new home over east the river, I will pen a short letter which, space permitting and the inclination attendant, you are privileged to use.

Mr. W. Spier has done much to stimulate interest in the trotter in his home at Glenn Falls, N. Y., for more than a decade and being a gentleman of means can well afford to gratify his tastes in any direction. He has also proven that necessarily a fast horse does not lead to ruin, for he manipulates his legitimate business—The Glenn Falls Paper Manufacturing Plant (of which he is president); The Morgan Lumber Co. (of which he is vice-president)—with even more vigor than he did in the long ago when he was building up his fortune by hard work night and days.

He neither uses tobacco nor liquor, and has yet to buy his first pool-ticket, so does what racing the stable engages in more for the glory of racing and to bring out those of his breeding he knows to be fast, than aught else. His driver, Chas. H. Baldwin, made a reputation with the Lamberts and is always out to win and to mark his horses when they are right, and this attracted Mr. Spier to him about ten years ago. The salary he receives is a first-class one and pays him entirely to his satisfaction, besides affording an excellent home in the delightful town—25,000 inhabitants—on the Hudson, where all city advantages are to be enjoyed.

Everything is at hand for speed-making and the mile track has a record, 2:01½, given it by John R. Gentry in '96. Stables are first-class and adjacent roads first-class, while the water cannot be surpassed for purity, coming from Adirondack springs in the hills. Feed is unusually low there and it is a favorable stock raising section. Vermont is only about thirty miles distant and furnishes much patronage to the Suburban Farm stallions, and, too, has produced winners in years passed.

Mr. Spier leases several farms merged into one, and calls it all Suburban Farm—just outside the town and but three miles from his elegant residence, where the stallions are kept, also the campaigning outfit. The broodmares and youngsters being kept at the farm and seen every day by Mr. Baldwin, who is one of the painstaking trainers, ever on the safe side, and knows every hoof on the place thoroughly. Suburban Farm loses few animals and rarely knows sickness or accident, so it is a source of unbounded pleasure to its owner and indeed the entire township, for Glenn Falls people are as one interested in fine horses, and years ago was the home of that Grand Circuit celebrity, Judge Davis, 2:18½, by Joe Brown.

Adbell will occupy Robert McGregor's spacious box, I fancy, and have as stable-mates Jefferson Wilkes, 2:14½, and the great Amboy (2) 2:16½, both purchased since last season. Robert McGregor was sold in 1892 to Geo. H. Ketchum, and Autograph, 2:16½, the writer sold in 1894 to James Golden for Mr. Litchfield, a wealthy Bostonian, it being then Mr. Spier's intention to quit breeding. But as we all know there is a fascination about it all, keeping one enthusiastic if he sees his youngsters trot to creditable records, and so after demonstrating Del Mar (2:16½) worth as a sire by trotting Copeland to a record of 2:11½, Miss Delmar (2) to a record of 2:27½, and some others, all from his favorite broodmares, it was a disappointment to lose the great son of Electioneer, only healed over by purchasing great prospective sires to breed to mares which give promise of producing stakewinners. Among those of Suburban mares, I recall, writing from memory, are: Miss McGregor, 2:13, (I timed her 2:11½ at Chicago in

'95, being second to Annine, a fifth heat in 2:11½, and trotting equally fast); Sappho, 2:15½, by Robert McGregor also; Peony, 2:22, by Happy Medium, from Kentucky Union's dam; Lady Winslip, 2:23½, (dam of Leicester, 2:17½, the famous "Temple Bar incident" horse of some years ago at Cleveland); Etiquette, 2:18, (sister to Autograph, 2:16½, by Alcantara, dam Flaxie (dam of Blondine, 2:24½, White Wings, 2:24½, etc.); Kate Franklin, from Pamlico's second dam; Miss Fanny Jackson, 2:30 (sister in blood to Aristos, 2:27½, and dam of Jacksonian, 2:13½, last year's successful campaigner); and a few others.

Last week Nellie A., 2:13, the famous Wilkes Boy stake filly, was added and what a nick for Adbell! There are fillies out of Pamlico's dam by Del Mar and Robert McGregor to breed to Adbell also Autograph mares from producing dams. The same mares producing so well to Del Mar will be mated with Adbell so his chances are excellent to become a successful sire. Everything having speed is trained, too, and raced to records, thus bringing to the front speed by the farm stallions whether other owners raced theirs or otherwise.

May King, 2:20, was owned at Suburban but seemed lame, so was traded for some broodmare, but he got some speed in and about Glen Falls, Chestnut King, 2:20½, being among his earlier foals and may yet sire another Bingen. Some of his daughters are in the stud and their fillies may be bred to Adbell this season.

The climate of the new home of Adbell differs materially from sunny Palo Alto. In winter there is usually continuous sleighing from Dec. 1st to nearly the middle of April. While there I saw it below freezing almost a month and frequently way below zero yet one doesn't feel so cold as when it is ten degrees above in Boston or Chicago so dry is it. Ice racing is the winter sport of all and tracks are laid out on every pond or lake and speed developed that way. When the mile track is surfaced evenly the water is turned on, then a roller put on to pack it all and there is high carnival I assure you for everyone owns "a little speed" and racing sleighs can be seen under every wagon shed in the town.

It is great sport, too, trotting a good gaited one on a track like a billiard table the cutter seemingly "pushing him out" and they can put in some lightning homestretch moves but a mile in it with air so cold and all is apt to knock one out.

The town is but eighteen miles from Saratoga and sixty-one from Albany, right at the entrance to the Adirondack country and while jogging the Suburban trotters I used to see deer within two or three miles of the town. "Alta" McDonald, the Albany trainer, was born there and Jerome Jenkins, once a famous York State reinsman still lives in the town, tho' on the retired list now.

In 1893 the track was built—there was always a fast half-mile track there—and thirty days from the turning of the first furrow I saw Bryan McGregor, 2:23½, step a repeat on its soft bed in 2:30. Robert J. and Gentry took their world's pole record—2:08—there last autumn, so it seems likely we may hear of a very low record there by Adbell this season, and in the years to come, something sensational by his get. Being in correspondence at all times with his owner and others there, should he work anything fast I will be pleased to let the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN readers know full particulars.

Mr. Spier deserves to succeed having always looked on his horses simply as a practical dissipation—rather better than that word would, I say "variation" from the confines of immense business requirement upon his time and physical resources. Would there were more who looked on it that way and went in to stay. Yours very truly,

EVERETT L. SMITH,
"PERCY,"

PLEASANTON HOLIDAY. A week from to-day, Saturday April 30th, there will be the usual annual "function" at the Pleasanton track. Well worth seeing, apart from the racing, and that is likely to be good, as the whole population of the country, thereabouts, is sure to be in attendance. There is a great deal of gratification in watching the gratification of others, and to one who is somewhat blase over racing affairs, the satisfaction of watching the delight of people who only look at racing for the pleasure of witnessing the contests, is, to say the least, a novel spectacle to metropolitan racegoers. Exhilarating to witness the genuine pleasure of those who are merely stimulated by the strife, apart from the sordid motive of pecuniary gain.

In these days, when the racing season opens at any time and never closes until the same dates roll around again there necessarily comes a feeling of satiety, a sort of notion that the feast is altogether too far prolonged. But to the thousands who attend at Pleasanton there is the charm of novelty, that another spectacle of the same kind will not be on the bills until a period of twelve months intervenes. Therefore there is a general gathering of the clans, a sort of harvest home, an anxiety to be one of the multitude congregated to enjoy themselves, participants in a gala day that cannot have other than beneficial influences.

The entries are as follows:

PLEASANTON ENTRIES FOR NEXT SATURDAY.

Verona Stake, $250; trotting, free for all, 2 in 3—Caryle Carne, Dione, Monterey.

Ruby Hill Stake, $250; pacing, free for all, 2 in 3—Lena L., Anaconda, Diablo, Miss Margaret.

Pleasanton Mercantile Stake, $100; harness race, trotting and pacing, free for all, three minute class—Prince C., Madera, Little Miss, Stella Maroin, Verona.

Pleasanton Hop Company Stake, $200; running, three-quarter mile dash, free for all, weight for age—Wild Robin, Green Leaf, Jim Bozeman, Jack Atkins, Tempse, Charlotte M., McFarlane, Nuncomar, Little T. G., Alcatraz, Mt. Roy.

Merriwa Stake, $200; free for all, running, mile dash, handicap—Wild Robin, Spry Lark, Pleasanton, Green Leaf, Lady Hurst, imp. Devil's Dream, Dick Behan, Florimel, George Palmer, Apto.

A big day at any track that list would ensure. Racing folk, proper, will admit that it will be a good guesser that can pick the winner of the running events, and to see the advent of Caryle Carne, Dione, Monterey, Lena L., Anaconda, Diablo and Miss Margaret for the season of 1898 well worth a long trip.

A grand day is assured, and even unfortunates who lose likely to be pleased with this outing.

JOS. CAIRN SIMPSON.

The Racing Season in California and the Outlook.

The winter-spring racing season here is rapidly drawing to a close, and as one looks back at the racing the thought arises that there was no improvement over the previous season, if indeed the racing was as satisfactory, taken all in all. There were not so many of the plungers of the Grannan or Pittsburg Phil stripe as in years ago, and the betting was therefore not as lively. But the absence of "plungers" is not at all hurtful. Plungers are not "producers," for as a general thing they are men that have run a shoestring up to a tannery and in reality invest no money in the business of racing. The bookmakers now operating at the track are about as hard propositions as one could find in a week's journey. They nearly all "figure" or have some one "figure" for them, and when a man comes up and wants to bet $100 they answer him by "wiping" the odds off their slates. This is the signal for a general cut around the ring in the price of that particular horse, notwithstanding $20 all told may not have been wagered on the beast. It has been the one argument of bookmakers, the only one that really amounted to anything, that the book-making system was better for race-players in that large sums could be wagered on a horse without such a material cut being made in the price as would be noticed were the Paris mutuel or totalizator system of wagering money in vogue. Now that bookmakers often cut the price down after the making of a $20 bet, this argument cannot be advanced sensibly. The lack of courage evinced by bookmakers here drove several of the plungers that did come out to California back to the East with feelings of disgust possessing their souls. Therefore, looking at the betting part of the racing game here, reforms will have to come in that direction, and the introduction of a totalizator, similar to those used in Australia, will solve the problem. Totalizators do not talk to dishonest horse pilots, and it is certain that with the abolition of book-making would come very much cleaner sport, an increase in the popularity of racing, larger dividends for the stockholders and increased purses for the horsemen—that is, if a spirit of fairness possessed those owning the stock.

Now that we have touched upon the speculative side of racing, it might be well to speak of the system in vogue west of the Alleghenies of running race tracks owned by interested turfmen. That it is not as satisfactory to the masses that support racing is clearly evident.

The plan followed out in the far East is much more popular, and that in the Colonies, where the race courses and equipments are owned by the Government and under its supervision, to a certain extent, even more so. Individual ownership of race tracks by turfmen racing horses over such courses, is not to be deplored, only where the owners are officials themselves and have a say in the management, the appointment of employees in particular. Turf officials should not be placed in such a position that they have to account to any track-owning turfman for their actions or have to possess any sort of a "pull" in order to "hold their jobs." When a "pull" comes in at the door justice too often flies out of the window. In Australia the starter, Mr. Watson, has been dispatching fields for more than twenty-five years, and in all that time the breath of dishonor has never touched his name. The same can be said of the judge that presides. The Secretaries and handicappers have also spent a life time at their work, and no one ever questions their honesty. The clubs (members of the two governing turf bodies of this country) should select men for the various positions of trust, qualifying after a thorough examination, and, once installed, they should remain in the position until impeached or until extreme old age overtakes them and they are no longer capable of filling, with credit to themselves and the club, the position assigned them. There are too many changes in the official staffs of turf organizations in this country, and changes mean in many cases that the new appointees, securing the places through "pulls," are less capable, through inexperience. With long, honorable service of turf officials will come a greater feeling of confidence in the race-going public that every endeavor is being used to have "square sport," and that means largely increased gate receipts as the years roll around, greater interest in racing, better prices for thoroughbreds, happiness for breeders, more coin for turfmen and many other things that brings joy to the hearts of men and women.

The racing just drawing to a close has been well patronized, and the clubs have made more money than during any season in the past six years. There have been a larger number of bookmakers transacting business and better attendance. The weather god has been more generous with his smiles, and that has helped the gate receipts. But the lack of rain has injured the stock-breeding interest greatly throughout the State, and feed was never held at such a premium as at present.

The declaring off of the Sacramento and Los Angeles meetings by the California Jockey Club means an exodus of our turfmen to Montana, and much disappointment is felt at the club's action. However, the prospect for financial success was anything but a pleasant one, and with certain loss facing them, no sensible person can blame the C. J. C. for doing as they did.

The outlook for a successful winter meeting here next season is not of the most flattering description, with the black wings of war outstretched before us, with such scarcity of feed for horses throughout the State and the likelihood of money being tied up or held so tightly that no one can borrow a cent to carry on any enterprise.

Still Hoping.

It may be that before the "Merry Month of May" comes in that there will be rain enough to do some good to crops which now are threatened. An inch or two of rain this coming week will be of vast service to the hay crop. Should it fail to come many fields which were sown for the purpose of growing grain will be valueless. And then there is a counterbalance that many acres designed for grain growing will be cut for hay, and while at the best the crop will be light, even a small return of hay will be better than loss of both hay and grain. The bearing this dry year has on the question of harness-racing and the success of the autumnal fairs, may not be as momentous as many imagine. The expense of training will be largely increased by the high prices of hay and grain which now prevail.

Under these circumstances owners will have to discriminate closely and reduce the number of horses trained. Not far from the truth when the statement is that "strings" could be reduced in any year with advantage to those who have to pay the bills, and when the cost is so greatly increased far greater the necessity for retrenchment.

The substitution of dash races for heats, that is when so large a majority of the races embodied in programmes, as there is in that of the P. C. T. H. B. A. will aid greatly in making a few horses do the work of many. Well within bounds to claim that a horse can trot four races during the week when engaged in dashes more easily than one three-in-five race, and hence there will be a better chance for a small stable, or one of moderate proportions, than when with the old system in vogue a dozen or more horses to rely upon.

Change in the conditions, differences in the classifications and distances will give horses that are beaten in some of the races an opportunity to retrieve their fortunes. While practically untried, there are good reasons for the belief that the "new departure" will meet the approval of all connected with harness racing, one of the benefits, and that a decided one, being that a few horses can do the work of many, and in a year like this encourage the cutting down of expenses.

Annual Meeting P. C. T. H. B. A.

The meeting to be held at the office of the Secretary, 22½ Geary street, Tuesday evening, April 26th, at 8 P. M., is of great importance, and every member of the association should attend if in his power to do so without too much trouble.

Questions of vast importance to everyone connected with racing or breeding harness horses will come up as under the call the constitution can be entirely changed, if such is the desire of the required majority of the members. Then should the resolution be to incorporate be carried, by-laws must be adopted, but apart from these considerations there are questions of such vital bearing that much pertaining to the future well doing of harness racing in California may depend upon the action of the assembled members.

Manifestly out of place to speculate now on what changes may be proposed or the course that it will be best to pursue. With anything like a full attendance there is little hazard in predicting that satisfactory results will follow, the only danger being the absence of a quorum.

The duty of everyone who hold membership should prompt guarding against such a contingency as the meeting lapsing from lack of the constitutional number to do the work.

Washington Park Club Stakes.

The Washington Park Club, one of the foremost social and racing organizations of America, has brought joy to the hearts of turfmen throughout the country by the announcement that it would give a summer race meeting over its superb track in 1898. It is not only a gratifying fact that they will resume racing, but the stakes are so liberal as to make all admirers of liberality enthuse. The glory that has gone to the winner of the American Derby, Sheridan Stakes, Hyde Park Stakes, Great Western and Wheeler Handicaps will go to them again, and we hope to see a large entry list from California to the stakes offered by this club, conditions to which appear in another column. Entries to these events close with Secretary James Howard at Parlor V, Wellington Hotel, May 3, 1898. The announcement is made that over $100,000 will be hung up in added money to stakes and purses. The stake events for the summer meeting are as follows:

The American Derby—$10,000 added. A sweepstake for three-year-olds. One mile and a half.

The Lakeside Stakes—$1,500 added. A sweepstakes for fillies, two-year-olds. Five furlongs.

The Kenwood Stakes—$1,500 added. A sweepstakes for colts, two year-olds. Five furlongs.

The Edgewater Stakes—$1,500 added. A sweepstakes for two-year-olds. Five and a half furlongs.

The Hyde Park Stakes—$2,000 added. A sweepstakes for two-year-olds. Four furlongs.

The Sheridan Stakes—$2,000 added. A sweepstakes for three-year-olds. One and a quarter miles.

The Drexel Stakes—$1,500 added. A sweepstakes for three-year-olds. One mile.

The Englewood Stakes—$1,500 added. A sweepstakes for fillies, three-year-olds. One mile.

The Midway Stakes—$1,500 added. A selling sweepstakes for three-year-olds and upward. One mile and a half furlong.

The Oakwood Handicap—$1,500 added. A sweepstakes for three-year-olds and upward. One mile and a furlong.

The Great Western Handicap—$2,000 added. A sweepstakes for three-year-olds and upward. One mile and a half.

The Wheeler Handicap—$4,000 added. A sweepstakes for three-year-olds and upward. One mile and a quarter.

The Harlem Club's Stakes

In another part of this paper will be found the conditions to the very liberal stakes offered by the Harlem Jockey Club of Chicago, of which Martin Nathanson is the Secretary, with office in Room 1, 130 Adams street, Chicago, Ill. It will be noted that the stakes are not the guaranteed affairs that caused so much trouble between turfmen and racing clubs, but the amounts are ADDED to the stakes. Entries to the events spoken of below close Tuesday, May 3, 1898. The spring meeting at Harlem (one of the best tracks in America) is from May 24th to June 24th, and there will be six races every day, with purses of from $400 upward. Last year's racing at Harlem was made memorable by the close contests, the lively betting and the freedom from scandal of running. Col. M. Lewis Clark was the presiding judge and will be again this season, we believe. Following are the stakes offered for the consideration of turfmen:

The Harlem Handicap—$2,000 added. For three-year-olds and upwards. One and one-quarter miles.

The Memorial Handicap—$1,500 added. For three-year-olds and upward. One and one-sixteenth miles.

The Prairie State Stake—$1,000 added. For three-year-olds and upward. One and one-eighth miles.

The Chicago Stake—$1,000 added. For three-year-olds and upward. One mile.

The Garden City Handicap—$1,000 added. For three-year-olds and upward. Six furlongs.

The Illinois Stake—$750 added. For three-year-olds and upward. Six and one-half furlongs.

The Senior Stakes—$1,000 added. For three-year-olds. One and one-eighth miles.

The Oak Park Stakes—$1,000 added. For three-year-olds. One mile.

The Riverside Stakes—$750 added. For three-year-olds. Seven furlongs.

The Petite Stakes—$1,000 added. For two-year-old fillies. Four and one-half furlongs.

The Graduate Stakes—$1,000 added. For two-year-olds and geldings. Five furlongs.

The Youngster Stakes—$1,000 added. For two-year-olds. Five furlongs.

The Proviso Stakes—$1,000 added. For two-year-olds. Four and one-half furlongs.

The Junior Stakes—$1,000 added. For two-year-olds. Six furlongs.

The La Grande Stakes—$1,000 added. For two-year-olds. Six furlongs.

THOS. SMITH of Vallejo has some choice trotting stock for sale. During all the years Mr. Smith has entered trotters at the California meetings he has never been seen driving anything but large, fine, good-looking horses, and some very valuable stakes have been won by him with colts of his own breeding. If anyone wants a fine looking road horse or a stallion or mare that it will pay to breed from, Mr. Smith has the article, and he has also a few that can win in almost any company if put in training. Read his advertisement.

In less than three weeks from now the big Mason's Festival will have opened. San Francisco is looking forward with eagerness to the event, for it promises to be a most attractive fete, and it will give good ground for a big display of hospitality amongst the members of the craft. All classes in the city are alike interested in its success, and the most public spirited men are either giving their time, their money or their merchandise in support of the excellent charity, as well as their goodwill.

WITHIN the next few months Killip & Co. will in all probability have two or three sales of trotting stock. The Corbett sale will likely take place by the first week in June, and at it some grandly-bred mares, colts, and fillies will be offered. The sales in the East this year show a vast improvement over those of 1897, and there is a growing demand for well-bred trotters and pacers.

DON'T let the date slip your memory for closing the Stanford Stakes for 1900, and the two and three-year-old trotting and pacing stakes to be given this year by the California State Agricultural Society. The stakes close May 2d, which is one week from Monday next. Full particulars will be found in our advertising columns. Entry blanks can be had at this office.

THE many friends of Edwin F. Smith, the efficient Secretary of the State Agricultural Society will be pleased to learn that he is recovering from his recent severe illness. Mr. Smith has been confined to his bed with malarial fever for several weeks, but is now on the mend.

ENTRIES for the Denver meeting close May 15th. The purses for trotters and pacers are from $500 to $1,000. See the advertisement.

Our New York Letter.

NEW YORK, April 16, 1898.

The very pronounced improvement in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN which is so manifest in the last few numbers, has been very emphatically approved by the horsemen and others of the East. It is no flattery to say it has now no superior in this country, and is an exhibit of what capital and enterprise can do, and will be appreciated.

The new Year Book makes the total number of standard trotters 14,091 and pacers 5,210.

At the dispersal sale of the Cloverdell Stock Farm, Philadelphia, J. R. Rosenderga purchased the property for $30,500. It is valued at over $100,000. The total receipts from the sale was over $90,000.

Vermont Black Hawk when alive weighed 900 pounds, his skeleton when dead weighed more than that of a draft horse that weighed when alive 1,300 pounds.

The young stallion Day Bell, by Palo Alto—Beautiful Bells, died on the 4th. He was purchased at a recent Fasig sale for $650, since which $2,500 was offered for him by a North Carolina gentleman.

Beuzatta, 2:06½, has been bred to Patchen Wilkes.

We doubt the story that John Splan is going on the running turf.

Twenty women, some in silk, were arrested in a pool-room in Chicago last week. Two carried babies in their arms.

That New York will have a track to succeed Fleetwood is assured. A committee has been appointed to select the site and will report this week; probably the selection will be a short distance from Morris Park.

"The Bride Elect" was given its first New York production on Monday evening at the Knickerbocker. Music is good, but the libretto needs sharpening.

"The Moth and the Flame" was produced at the Lyceum. Having been written for Mr. Kelsey of course the hero had to be the villain. The play is an effort to exhibit life among the "Four Hundred."

Mrs. Fiske is certainly an actress of extraordinary talent. She appeared in two new plays at the Fifth Avenue and won plaudits and the admiration of the audience.

"Love Finds the Way" is a literary success.

After a long time, the glory of Olympia has returned, and Hammerstein was himself again. He will remain "himself" if there is a strong syndicate behind him—and plenty of cash—as long as the latter endures.

Mrs. Grace Wallace Belasco was reported to have inherited $250,000 from her father, Calvin D. Tower, who recently died at Chicago. The entire estate is now valued at $79,000.

The different play houses are taking advantage of the war fever and exhibitions of Old Glory and the faces of prominent men are nightly vociferously applauded. Sunday evening at the Metropolitan Opera House, the Star Spangled Banner was sung by the entire audience and the flag cheered repeatedly.

A presentation of $500 souvenirs every evening might improve the houses at Garden where Henry Miller has confined himself to the lines of "The Master" for a week.

Bettina Garand is occupying a cot at Bellevue Hospital, having resumed her old habit of intemperance and become destitute. Her father was once Chief of the Ordinance Department of the United States. She has had five husbands in succession, her first was Arthur Padelford of the British Embassy.

Buffalo Bill gave a free exhibition on Monday last for the inmates of the orphanage institutions of this city.

Miss Mather's funeral took place on Sunday from Plymouth Church, Brooklyn. She left very little beside her wardrobe. During her lifetime she contributed to the support of her aged father who occupied a small room in a boarding house in Detroit.

Julia Arthur was secretly married some time ago to Mr. Benjamin P. Cheney, a Boston millionaire. He was her financial backer for the last season.

The Giants are practicing daily and are said to be in fine form. Last season their best work was shown at the commencement.

MacAlester defeated Fulford at Baltimore last Saturday, killing twenty-five birds straight (twenty-nine yards), $25 entrance, with $500 guaranteed.

The first annual show of the Bulldog Club was held on Wednesday at the Loggert Gardens.

The Giants won easily on Sunday from the Rochester. The Ontario and Western Railway have distributed a million trout fry in the streams adjoining the line of the road in Sullivan county.

George Stout was killed by Oscar Gardner at Columbus Friday last, in a ring contest. This is the nineteenth pugilist that has been killed in this manner since 1890.

Has Never Seen Its Equal.

Mr. W. H. Minor, General Manager of the Valley Grain Co. at Brattleboro, Vt., writes under date of April 11th as follows: "Please find enclosed check for $3 for two packages of Quinn's Ointment. You may send me two more. I have never seen its equal." Mr. Minor is prominently known all through New England, and his experience is one of the many who are using this reliable remedy. For curbs, splints, spavins, windpuffs and all bunches use Quinn's Ointment. Regular size, $1.50. If you cannot obtain it at your druggist, address W. B. Eddy & Co., Whitehall, N. Y.

HOOF-BEATS.

GEYSER made it nine straight by his win of April 22, and the way he beat May W. stamps him undoubtedly the best horse in California this season—at least up to a mile.

THE California Jockey Club will give five extra days' racing at the conclusion of their next meeting. One day out of the five will be conceded to the Pacific Coast Jockey Club, who will donate the proceeds to the San Francisco orphan asylums.

JOCKEY TOMMY BUTLER will now endeavor to have Capt. Rees look with favor on his reinstatement. The lightweight was suspended for a ride on one or two very bad "skates" and when the fact is taken into consideration that good riders have put up some very hazy rides on skate horses, it does look as though Butler had been severely punished.

THE City and Suburban Handicap of 2,000 sovereigns which was run at Epsom Wednesday, was won by L. Eraskey's five-year old bay horse Bay Ronald. New Haven II (the Australian colt by Newminster) was second and Craftsman was third. Eighteen horses started, including James R. Keene's St. Cloud II, and Pierre Lorillard's Sandia. The distance was about a mile and a quarter.

THE clever young rider, Spencer, has departed for New York, whither he goes to ride for the brothers Thompson, former owners of the celebrated Brookdale stud. Jimmy Rowe is trainer for the Thompsons, who have twenty-five or thirty horses at work, among them Reprisal. Spencer was recommended by Jimmy McCormick, and he will now have a chance to acquire fortune and fame.

THE defalcation of City Treasurer Widber is laid at the door of racing, but it is a settled fact that dollars went into mining where cents were invested in tickets on gallopers. When a person goes wrong it makes one thing of the old gag: "Who did it?" and the answer, "Why, Tom Collins." Whether the defaulting city official had any interest in race horses or not, it is known that those he is alleged to have owned won a lot of money lately, so that he couldn't be out much on the deal.

THE Pacific Coast Horsemen who will take their strings of trotters and pacers East this year (and there are quite a number of them) should not miss reading the announcement of the Minnesota State Fair meeting which appears in our columns to day. The date of this meeting is September 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th, and there is the splendid sum of $20,000 to be competed for in the four days. Two purses of $5,000 each, with easy payments of entrance money, are offered for trotters and pacers. The meeting will be held at Hamline, Minnesota, and will be one of the best held on the other side of the Rocky Mountains. The entries close July 2d, and American Trotting Association rules are to govern. Send your entries to E. W. Randall, Secretary.

D. M. BURNS, the well-known mining man and politician, has purchased the Lucas Home ranch, comprising over 1,000 acres. Burns will convert the property into a fine stock farm, and it will be one of the great show sights in Marin county. A race track will be built on the place.—San Rafael dispatch, April 18th. Burns & Waterhouse owns Take Notice, Fellowcharm, Mt. McGregor, Altamax and other good stallions and among his brood mares are the famous Picnic (dam of Recreation, etc.), Cosette (dam of Candelaria) and imp. Paloma (dam of Miss Rowena, Palomacita and Don Clarencio). The firm paid as high as $7,500 for their stud matrons. Such men are welcome additions to the ranks of breeders on a large scale.

JUSTICE OF THE PEACE BARRY April 22 gave judgment of $100 and costs in favor of the plaintiff in the suit of Dr. Fuller against Tod Sloan, the jockey. Sloan went East a few days ago. His deposition was read to the Court, denying that he was indebted to Dr. Fuller. He claimed he saw Dr. Fuller at the race track at various times and that the physician was charging him $2.50 for the different times he met him at the races. Dr. Fuller testified that he first met Sloan three years ago. He treated the jockey for tonsillitis and other ailments. The visits were at the doctor's office, at the Baldwin Hotel or at Delmonico's. There were forty visits, for which he charged Sloan the minimum price, $2.50 for each visit. He denied that he had charged meetings at the track as visits. In the latter part of 1896 he wrote to Sloan, who was then East, congratulating him on his success, and inclosed his bill, demanding $100 for services rendered. Witness admitted that he had owned a half interest in Torpedo with Dr. Parent and also a half interest in Eventide with Dr. Hunt.

It is a settled thing now that Jimmy Michael will ride both bicycles and horses this year. His chief mount during July and August will be a bicycle, but before that he will ride as a jockey a couple of times at the Baltimore races. His manager, Dave Shafer, would like to have him stick to the wheel, but Michael is hard hit with the idea of taking to the turf. As a matter of fact, Jimmy's chief idea is money-making, and he would ride on a merry-go-round or any other old thing that paid him well. He is fearful that the cycle racing game may lose its popularity, or that he may be defeated and become a back number, and accordingly he is getting ready to change his calling at the proper time. Shafer has signed with the American Cycle Racing Association to have Michael ride in six races under the auspices of the association during July and August, and not to ride any other races during that time. The arrangement is one for a percentage of the gate receipts, with a guarantee of $15,000 for the six races. Michael has also been engaged to give four exhibitions for the National cyclodrome during those months. From the fact of all his cycle riding engagements being made for not later than August, it looks as if the midget may be contemplating taking a shy at the horses again in September.

Sausalito a Sporting Center.

Sausalito is now the sporting town of the State.

The furniture and contents of the "El Monte" Hotel is offered for sale. Anyone looking for an investment in that line of business should call and examine the place, as the pool-rooms will open in Sausalito next month.

This is a chance seldom offered. The place must be sold and good terms can be had if necessary. See ad in another column.

NOTICE TO ANGLERS.

Every angler is invited to drop us a line occasionally, telling us of the condition of the streams they have visited and the killing lure of the number and size of the fish caught, or any other item of interest to anglers.

The Fly-Casters.

Under unfavorable weather conditions last Saturday, W. D. Mansfield made a new record in long-distance casting at the fourth of the series of regular competitions of the San Francisco Fly-Casting Club. At Chicago, in August, 1897, Mansfield won the world's championship and established a new record of 111½ feet. In September of the same year, in an open tournament held at Stow Lake, in Golden Gate Park, he established a new record of 113 feet. Since then, in club competition, he has reached a distance of 117 feet. This record was exceeded Saturday by the remarkable cast of 120½ feet, exceeding not only all of his own past records, but surpassing also an indoor record of 120 feet made by R. C. Leonard at a great tournament held in Madison-square Garden, New York, last January.

Dr. E. N. Lowry casting under the name of "Walton" gave some splendid evidences of increased skill in long-distance work, 114 feet is a mark that has never been reached by any caster outside of the San Francisco club.

On Sunday the contests were resumed and Mansfield again placed the longest line for high score during the day, 119 feet is the longest competitive record for casting excepting his own great score of the day preceding. "Walton" again had second honors and H. C. Golcher third with ninety-nine feet. Smyth won the distance and accuracy honors for the day with a per centage of 93 1-3. Mansfield was a good second with a per centage of 91 2-3. The highest score in accuracy and delicacy was by H. F. Muller, who piled up 82 1-6 per cent. Smyth was second with a per centage of 81½. Charles F. Grant was first in line casting with 85 per cent. Golcher was a good second with 80 3-5 per cent. The scores of all the events in detail were as follows:

The next series of Saturday and Sunday contests, No. 5, will take place at Stow Lake on Saturday, April 30th, and Sunday, May 1st.

Rods.

When a novice asks advice about the kind of an outfit he should purchase, I quote to him from Polonius' advice to his son: "Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy." And this means that an angler should have the best tackle that he can afford, for the best is all that the term implies. It is when the struggle comes with a desperate fish that the angler has the supreme satisfaction of knowing that he has the best material to fight with, and only an accident may lose him the fight, if he has confidence in his own skill in not overstraining his tackle by injudicious strikes, checking a vigorous run too suddenly, or by letting a fish get into weeds or a treetop, when it might have been steered away from these things. All this is generalship, and cannot be taught by books, but the purchase of tackle can be taught in this manner. The first question which I ask of a novice is: "What do you care to spend on an outfit?"

If he answers, "Twenty dollars," I say, "Get a wooden rod, a click reel, line, leaders, flies, creel, and waders." If he thinks he can afford a more expensive outfit I advise him that he will be better satisfied, and will give him reasons for it as we proceed. In England there are some old-fashioned anglers who think that trouting with an angle worm is an art that ranks as high as fly-fishing. They were brought up in that belief, and a man's religious belief is most often the result of birth and early influences.

There is no question that the trout will take the worm in places where it will not rise freely to the fly, and there are places where the fly, in expert hands, will take more trout than the drowned worm. But, when it comes to a question of angling for pleasure and fishing for meat, I would rather take one trout with the fly than a hundred with bait. The newspapers have delighted in picturing the rural youth, with a "letter in the postoffice," selling his catch to "the city angler with a $40 pole," the inference being that fine tackle is useless. Fine tackle will beat coarse in the same hands, even in the hands of the barefooted boy.

There is no rod equal to a good split-bamboo. I say good, because there are most miserable ones on the market; if you want one of the latter you can get it for a dollar in a department store. A set of nicely drawn ferules is worth more than that. Do not think of buying a split-bamboo rod anywhere but in the store of a reputable dealer in fishing tackle, and paying not less than $8, and from that up to $40 for it. I have a $40 rod that has been in use for fifteen years; it has been cast with in tournaments, which is severe work, and it is as straight, springy, and as good to-day as ever. If the split-bamboo is beyond your purse, get a good combination of ash and lancewood, a greenheart, or bethabara; greenheart is rather heavy wood, and of wooden rods I prefer two joints of second growth ash and a lancewood tip. See that the ferules are well drawn and fit all the way snug. If there is a tendency to throw apart, try another rod. I do not care for dowels or very limber rods, such as "kick back," and are known as "double action."

A 10 ft. rod is long enough, and the weight may be from 5 to 10 oz., as one likes. Metal reel seats are a matter of taste, and I like them. The weight of a rod is no indication of its muscle-tiring power, as that depends largely on where the rod balances, i. e., whether it is topheavy or is light at the butt. See that the grip is not a blister teaser, wound with cord or other abomination. Often at the beginning of the season have I had to wrap a handkerchief about the grip at the first intimation of a blister. A large hand will cramp on a small grip, therefore the grip should fill the hand. Cork makes a good grip, and I have a felt covering which I use on a grip that is wound with rattan, but my hands are very tender.

A rod put together in a store and "tried" is not fairly tried. With a reel of more or less weight below the hand and 40 ft. of line to lift from the water there is a different feeling. Test your rod in this way, by all means, before buying; then and then only can you decide if the rod is what you want. A rod may be an excellent one and yet not suit you and your style of casting; yet a man may get used to any rod in time, but will not do as good work, and as easily, as if he was better fitted in the first place. There has been imported recently a close-grained reddish African wood, called asagai, which is used by the Zulus for their spears, which are called by the same name; and this is said to be superior to lancewood for the springy shafts of golf sticks, and may come into use for rods. Ironwood, or hornbeam, is too heavy and will warp.

A jointed rod is merely a convenience; a one-piece rod is the ideal rod for the man who always fishes in one place and keeps his rod there. I once saw such a rod made of red cedar, and its action was fine, but it was so fragile that its owner would not allow another to handle it. Three joints are better than two, for there is no ferule in the middle; but beware of the "trunk rod," a thing of four or five joints. Have none of it. There is another sort of rod to be avoided, and that is the "general rod;" it can be by many combinations be made into a fly rod, a trolling rod, a deep sea rod, and a striped bass rod for casting a bait far into the surf. It is as useless for any one of these purposes as a saw-log would be. I own one, presented as a prize in a poultry show some twenty-five years ago by a Boston firm, and I put it together every year, admire its ingeniously contrived uselessness, and return it to its case.—Fred Mather in Forest and Stream.

Fish Commission Notes.

On Wednesday, April 13th, defendants Bishop, Walker and Ogden were convicted in the Superior Court at Ukiah. They were arrested last December for maintaining a set net at the mouth of Garcia river. The fine in these cases will not be less than $200 each.

Signor Paladini (La pescador grande) was arrested last Saturday for illegally having striped bass in his possession which were of smaller size than the law countenances—Holy horrors! just think of that—He was convicted in the Police Court on Thursday morning. The fine for this offense is $20 (?). Paladini can stand that, he is reported to have an elastic sack and furthermore he will consider it a good investment for the regulation of his digestion when he hides a few gross of selected grins up his capacious sleeve. The daily press didn't notice this case to any great extent.

Deputy John Davis arrested two men in Suisun Bay, last Tuesday, for using a small sized mesh net in the taking of striped bass. They were held for trial by a Justice of the Peace at Suisun.

The Lake Tahoe hatchery have taken 1,500,000 eggs at the hatchery since the season opened.

At the Shovel Creek hatchery they have taken 500,000 rainbow eggs up to date.

Lloyd Eaton and F. W. S. Van Slyke tried the Big Sulphur last Sunday with but fair success.

Fred Johnson fished the San Gregorio Sunday last; his creel held seventy nice trout when he returned.

Ed. Pyburn and Harry Hay, have been fishing in the trout streams of the Cachagua district recently. They report plenty of fish.

G. W. Sill, George Sornborger, M. A. Hudson and R. P. Quinn of Watsonville spent several days recently fishing the headwaters of the Carmel and other coast streams. They had excellent luck.

F. S. Butler and W. S. Kittle caught forty fine brook trout and sixteen elegant "cutthroats" in the Country Club streams last Sunday. Bob Woodward caught a lot of brook trout and a four and one-half pound steelhead.

Los Angeles Traps.

The shoot of the Los Angeles Gun Club last Sunday was well attended. Thirteen events, at fifteen targets each, were shot out during the day. A schedule of per centage shows the following averages:

	Shot at	Broke	Per cent
Breer	180	159	.883
Vaughn	195	118	.874
May	185	170	.871
Fleming	180	166	.866

Peyton	185	115	.851
Alexander	165	139	.842
Bradley	135	117	.866
O. Freytag	75	64	.853

To day and to morrow the tournament in Los Angeles will no doubt have a large attendance of cracks not only from the Southern counties, but it is strongly suspected that several of our local experts have quietly gone down to Los Angeles with a determination to be in the money, as the purses amount to $500.

Coming Events.

April 24—South End Gun Club (blue-rocks). Colma.
April 24—Olympic Gun Club (blue-rocks). Ingleside.
May 1—California Wing Club (live birds). Ingleside.
May 1—Reliance Gun Club, Webster street, Alameda.
May 8—Olympic Gun Club (live birds). Ingleside.
May 8—Empire Gun Club (blue-rocks). Alameda Point.
May 15—Lincoln Gun Club (blue-rocks). Alameda Point.
May 29—California Inanimate Target Association. Annual tournament. Ingleside.

A live bird handicap shoot will be held in Bakersfield to morrow.

Deer are reported to be very numerous on the Country Club's preserve.

The San Luis Obispo Breeze says that R. J. Phillips of Cambria, who was accompanying the San Simeon otter crew at Point Gorda, killed a large California lion the other day. The animal measured 7 feet 11 inches in length from tip to tip and weighed 184 pounds.

The Porterville Gun Club was organized on April 11th. The following officers were elected: President, J. W. Moomaw; Vice-President, A. G. Schulz; Secretary, G. R. Lumley; Treasurer, J. N. Larson, who serve as directors with J. F. Bolter and Dr. W. C. Brumfield. Dr. J. H. Hatcher was elected Captain. F. W. Velie, J. H. Hatcher and P. C. Montgomery were appointed a committee on constitution and by-laws, and Dr. J. L. Hardeman, P. C. Montgomery and J. W. Moomaw a committee to choose suitable location of grounds, make necessary purchases, etc. There are twenty-four signatures to the roll.

Collies in New Zealand.

Regarding show type collies at Agricultural Shows in New Zealand, the Stockkeeper of recent date says: "The passing over by the Canterbury, N. Z., judges of all the collies of the show type at the agricultural shows of the district has, of course, provoked a great deal of discussion down under. The question, we admit, is a very thorny one to handle, especially as the opinion of collie exhibitors themselves are somewhat divided regarding the amount of brain power possessed by some leading show dogs. It is, moreover, a fact beyond the possibility of contradiction that the majority of collie trial winners are scarcely up to the standard of beauty which is expected by the show animal; and therefore the difficulties which surround any discussion upon the actions of the Canterbury judges are almost insurmountable. Perhaps if, upon future occasions, the promoters of agricultural shows were to state explicitly whether the collies were to be judged by their apparent capacity for work or upon the exhibition type, there would be less trouble afterwards. Even under such conditions, however, it would not be easy to judge the working dogs unless those most closely approaching the show type were to be selected for prizes, and this might not satisfy all. Meanwhile the show collie is being paid a very poor compliment by those who decline to admit its competency to be awarded prizes at agricultural exhibitions, inasmuch as thereby his intelligence and stamina—the two great features of the breed—are seriously questioned.

It is expected that a number of Eastern dogs will be seen at the coming bench shows. Among others will be entries by F. Jay Gould, the Swiss Mountain Kennels and a big team in charge of Mr. L. A. Klein.

Standards.

FOX TERRIER—Head: The skull should be flat and narrow, broader between the ears and gradually decreasing in width to the eyes. Stop: slight. Cheeks: not full. Ears: V-shaped, rather small, of moderate thickness, dropping forward close to the cheek, but not hanging by side of the head. The jaw should be strong and muscular, but not too full in the cheek, of fair punishing length; in front of the eyes it should be moderately chiselled out, but not wedge-shaped. Nose: black, tapering towards muzzle. Eyes: dark, small and rather deep-set, full of fire and life, nearly circular. Teeth: level and strong, as near together as possible. Neck: Clean and muscular, without throatiness and of fair length, gradually widening to the shoulders.

Body—Shoulder: fine at the points, long and sloping, well laid back. Chest: deep but not broad. Back: short, straight and strong. Loin: broad, powerful and very slightly arched. Forelegs: moderately arched, back ribs deep. The dog should be well ribbed-up, and not flat-sided. Hindquarters: strong and muscular, free from crouch. Thighs: long and powerful. Stern: set in rather high, carried gaily, but not over the back or curled and of good strength. Legs: must be straight, strong in bone, short and straight in pastern. Both fore and hind legs carried straight forward when traveling, elbows working freely, just clear of the sides. Feet: round, compact and not too large, soles hard, toes moderately arched and turned neither in nor out. No dew claws behind.

Coat: smooth and flat, hard, dense and abundant. Belly and under side of thighs should not be bare.

Color: white should predominate; brindle, red, or liver markings objectionable.

Weight: not over twenty pounds, although weight is not an absolute criterion as to fitness for work.

Disqualifying points: white or cherry nose, or one spotted with these colors. Ears, prick, tulip, or rose. Mouth under or overshot.

The Wire Haired Fox Terriers should resemble the smooth species in every respect except the coat, which should be broken. The harder and more wiry the coat is, the better. The dog should not look or feel woolly, and there should be no silky hair. The coat should not be too long, but it should show a marked difference to the smooth species.

General appearance is that of a gay, lively and active dog with plenty of bone and strength, but no coarseness. The dog should on no account be leggy nor too short in leg, yet be a cleverly made hunter. Speed and endurance must be looked to as well as power.

San Francisco Dog Show.

The Premium List issued yesterday shows a plethora of rich prizes and awards in every breed and most all classes, limited space prevents an extended list of the same being given in this issue. In addition to the general mention of cups, etc., heretofore given, we call attention to four beautiful gold and blue enamelled medals valued at $25 each, offered by Herman Oelrichs, Esq., for award in the mastiff, English setter and cocker spaniel classes.

Irish water spaniels will receive more attention this year from the committee on awards than has been usually paid this breed, owing to the increased interest taken in these dogs; this encouragement is commendable. The leashmen are coming to the front in a generous and plentiful manner, both in prizes and entries promised. The benching of the fleet-footed coursers will be an important and beautiful feature of the coming show. We notice that E. V. Sullivan, Esq., who is always in the van in matters pertaining to sport not only offers a valuable cup, but also purses aggregating $175 for distribution among the greyhound fanciers. R. E. de B. Lopez Esq. offers a fine trophy, the Union Coursing Park Association have contributed an elegant silver cup and the Interstate Coursing Club, D. Shannon, President, gives a silver cup to be awarded the best greyhound exhibited. Messrs. Barker, Carlton and De Ruyter each offer a medal.

The club will not make a change in the selection of judge, the engagement of Mr. George Bell will stand, the gentleman being considered a very competent and capable judge. The selection of a judge in the greyhound class is yet to be made.

Oakland Bench Show.

The Oakland Kennel Club will give their show shortly following the dog show in this city, the dates set are June 1st, 2d, 3d, and 4th. The gentlemen selected for judging the various classes are John Davidson, Esq., the well-known veteran fancier and judge and Henry E. Lacy, Esq., also well and favorably known to Coast fanciers. Both these gentlemen have been communicated with in respect to the bench show in Oakland, but up to date of this issue response has not been received. It will not be making an ill-starred prophecy in saying that the prospects for a brilliant and successful bench show in Oakland never were better than at present.

COLT'S NECK, N. J.

H. C. GLOVER, Esq.—Dear Sir:—I have used your Imperial Mange Cure and find it to be all that is claimed for it. My first trial was upon an old dog that had been afflicted with mange for over two years, and was sore from head to tail. Two bottles effected a positive cure, after many other remedies had failed. I have also used it on cracked heels of horses, and found it very beneficial.

Yours respectfully, T. FORMAN TAYLOR.

Big Farms.

There is a general impression—or it may be better to say—that a few years ago the prevailing opinion over the whole of the country was that California was entirely occupied with immense ranches. Leagues in extent and whatever industry was pursued it was carried out on a mammoth scale.

The big grain growing estates of some of them of greater area than Eastern countries, the huge breeding farms, with thousands of cattle and sheep and where the largest horse farms in the East included some three thousand acres more than forty thousand in one place, breeding thoroughbreds being the main feature.

Then, too, a vineyard of three thousand eight hundred and fifty acres in bearing vines; and a man, A. T. Hatch with several thousands of acres in fruit trees, warranted the conclusion, that everything from an agricultural or horticultural standpoint was on the same brobdingnag scale.

While wheat, barley, or other cereals can, probably, be produced at a smaller cost, per bushel, when all the improved machinery of agriculture can be used advantageously, there is little question that eventually small farms will be the rule. Comparatively small. Large herds of cattle and sheep, large bands of horses, and the employment of traction engines will compel the use of many acres, but with breeding operations on a mammoth scale, agricultural pursuits, based on the dimensions which prevail in the East, smaller areas will be more likely to prove remunerative, proportionally, where much capital is necessary to carry on the business. One hundred acres of the most fertile of California lands will carry as much stock as twice that number in even the most favored portions of the East. With land adapted to the growth of alfalfa pasturage is so largely increased—especially when soiling is followed that is safe to say one acre is equivalent to four of the richest of Eastern lands. Four tons of wheat hay to the acre can be grown here, and that will afford as much nutrition as six tons of timothy and two tons to the acre is more than average return of the timothy field of the East.

One hundred and thirty bushels of barley was the product of a five-acre field in Alameda county, and a field of one hundred and twenty acres, near Mayfield, in 1874, returned eighty bushels of wheat to the acre. There are, of course, exceptionally large crops, so large that unless well attested would be considered by eastern farmers as beyond belief, but both illustrations were attested by the actual weight of the grain in the sack.

Truck farming" cannot be said to cover large areas, and the man who has a few acres would be in a good position to compete with the "land baron" with hundreds at his disposal. Therefore, in the production of vegetables and fruits the "small farmers" of California are not handicapped adversely. The term handicap is little understood. The usual acceptance is that a handicap means something against the chances of the person who is handicapped, while the apportionment of weights may give him a decided advantage over all of his competitors. Nevertheless, the small farmer in California may have the "best of the weight" in a race with the large owners of land. Whatever the products intended to produce, it may be that the small producer is not at a disadvantage. Breeders of horses and cattle, even with limited acreage, may be enabled to rear them at a smaller comparative cost than when provision has to be made for a large number of animals.

Horses for instance. The man who has few mares, just enough to do the work of the farm, can rear the progeny at smaller expense than on the larger establishments.

One of the most successful of the old time breeders of thoroughbreds in England did nearly all the work of his farm with thoroughbred mares, and in the eastern states, until horse farms became established institutions the mares were regularly worked. All of the horses used in cities were produced by farmers who made horse breeding pay by rearing them at small cost, geldings sold as soon as they were of a marketable age, the mares doing by far the largest share of the work. A few weeks exception from labor when nearing foaling time and until the foals were old enough to follow their dams without injury, and it was quite a common practice to have some of the foals come in the fall when the busy season was over.

Mares that were worked continuously, well fed and well cared for were better fitted for the duties of maternity than if allowed to run in pasture fields with only grass to support them. It is quite safe to say that at least 95 per cent of carriage, road and work horses in the early days were bred and reared by small farmers, that is farmers who nearly had more than half a dozen mares, quite a proportion of them having still fewer.

While the breeding of thoroughbreds and fast harness horses is now largely confined to stud farms, so much so as to have nearly a monopoly of the business, the breeding and rearing of all other varieties can be carried on by the smaller breeders with just as good or a better chance to make the business remunerative.

Horse Breeding in California.

However well informed a person may be in regard to the horse products of California he would think that only two classes of horses had been bred here with any great success. Thoroughbreds, trotters and pacers, and the conclusion reached that only these breeds had been produced advantageously to the breeder well justified by the horse history of the State. Still the fact that these classes are brought into a prominence that overshadows all others, while warranting losing sight of minor breeders of the horse family, it does not follow that coach, carriage, draft and driving horses, outside of fast trotters and pacers, cannot be reared here with fair profit to the breeders. Being so far away from the prominent horse markets of the country, and, consequently, heavy expenses incurred in transportation charges, the higher priced animals can only be expected to prove remunerative, and outside of these the home demand will be the source to look for a return for the outlay.

Heavy horses, in which class can be rated animals from 1500 to 2000 pounds, are always in demand in cities and towns, and for certain kinds of work on the farm are also useful, but the cost of transportation to far away markets will so far decrease the profits that it would not be advisable, perhaps, to rear them in such numbers as would necessitate looking to foreign customers. That there is a shortage of truck and heavy draft horses in California seems to be fairly settled from the answer to inquiries to dealers here. "Big, well former horses can always be sold for a fair price" is the ready answer, but it will not do to jump at the conclusion that weight alone will fill the bill.

The cut presented on the first page is a good representation of one of the English breeds, the "Shire Horse." Famous there when tested with other families of draft horses, and though few specimens of the breed have been brought to the Pacific Coast, so far as tried, have given satisfaction.

The subject of the illustration, Black Prince, was bred by James Cropley, of Cambridgeshire, England, and he and his colts have been frequent prize winners in that country.

A good idea of his form can be obtained from the cut. A massive, powerful horse, his weight running from 1850 to 1950 pounds.

The breed has been firmly established in England and holds a good, if not the best place, in the affection of the breeders of that country. And in adhering to any one favorite breed it may be that mistakes are made.

In the purest of all breeds of horses there is a combination of many. Barbs, Turks, Arabs, Persian, Spanish and the native English have been mixed together to form the highest type of the horse, when symmetry of form, speed at the gallop and the highest rate of endurance are the measures of excellence. Fair to infer then that the draft breeds can be improved by combinations. The Shire horse may be superior, in some respects, to the horses of France, Belgium or Holland, or any one of the heavy breeds that found favor in this country fifty years ago, and at the same time be deficient in other desired qualities.

The mixing of breeds, whether horses, cattle, sheep, swine, or poultry may prove so beneficial that the query will be, Why not discovered sooner? Useless in a majority of cases to convince fanciers of Norman, Clydesdale, or other distinct varieties of the heavy breeds, that his particular admiration fails in any degree, and yet when he looks as carefully after defects, or, it may be better to express it, where additional excellence can be secured, bring in individuals that are free from these defects, or are endowed with these excellencies, regardless of prior favoritism. In at least 95 per cent of the most famous heavy breeds there is an excess of bone. "Bone" has been magnified into a prominence that has blinded otherwise close observers. Weeds there are in which bone, tendons, and muscles have been reduced until they are only shadows of what horses should be. The great defect in all draft horses is that there is a superabundance of bone, a diminution of tendons, and at the same time a softened mass that is represented to be muscles.

The framework of a horse that will weigh from 1,200 to 2,000 pounds, must necessarily be larger than one which is less than two-thirds of that weight, but the only advantage in large bones is the better attachment of muscles and these attachments are connected above metatarsals and metacarpals.

The careful breeder of big horses therefore should look to harmonizing proportions, and in addition to size might look to securing good looks as well as other qualifications.

While Black Prince is, unquestionably, a fine specimen of the race, it would be an underrating of the intelligence of our readers to call attention to points that could be bettered. Too much bone, a little coarseness of ankles with an increase in size of tendons would certainly be improvements. A horse weighing from 1,600 up might certainly be bred which would assuredly be a betterment of the model, and within bounds to say: that whenever California breeders pay as much attention to breeding big horses as they have to producing thoroughbreds and fast harness horses, the higher type will surely be seen.

Types of Beef Bulls.

A subscriber in Northern California writes:

"There has been a discussion here as to which is the larger—that is, weighs most—strains of cattle bred high on legs or low? To get nearer to the argument, there is a bull here that is large, big-boned, round-bodied, and high on his legs. One party says that style of beef is larger than one bred low on legs. Please give your opinion on it. Also which style is the better to breed to for the Western markets for the money there is in it for beef alone? Which is the heaviest of the two types of Short-horns when fully matured, the 'low-downs' or the taller sort?"

Weight at maturity bears no fixed relation to height. Some of the heaviest bulls of the beef breeds stood with their brisks within twelve inches of the ground and one required no step-ladder to get at their backs, either. For example, the champion Short-horn Young Abbottsbuan and the famous old Hereford show bull Archibald. Generally speaking, however, the big-boned, large-framed, up-standing animal will weigh more at maturity than cattle of the opposite or so-called "pony" type, but in no case are the former as valuable for the feedlot. No animal that is coarse in his legs, heavy in his shoulders and hips, and high in his banks will prove a quick feeder. He may weigh more after he is finally matured, but it will take longer to finish him than it will to fatten the other sort, and after he is hung upon the hooks it will be found that he carried too large a proportion of offal to please the butcher and too much bone, outside tallow, and coarse-grained meat to satisfy the fastidious consumer. Hence he rarely brings as much per pound as the earlier-maturing, fleshier, neater-boned sort—a fact which offsets possible differences in weight. No coarse bred steer yields well-marbled, finely-fibred beef. The highest-priced meat comes invariably from the neat and tidy type.

THE BREEDER would not minimize the importance of scale. When coupled with quality it is what is most to be desired, and in countries where feed is not abundant or where the animals are much exposed to storms the big-framed, strong-boned cattle will do better than the opposite type. This simply means that the stamp of cattle best suited to endure hardship can never hope to command the best prices in this market, for their conformation is such that they can never compete with the duck-legged, prime "baby beeves" of the corn States in point of carcass value. They have their place and will pay better under certain conditions than the low-down, sappy fellows so much in favor both with feeders and slaughterers of fancy natives. Such place, however, is not in the West. Possibly the conditions existing in the locality from whence this query comes may justify the use of the old-fashioned kind described. That is purely a local question which we cannot undertake to answer. As a general rule no man is wise in this generation in using a big, leggy bull of the beef breeds unless climatic conditions or the necessity of such a cross upon a small, delicate herd of cows demand such heroic treatment. In the range country the big-framed bull that can travel and endure cannot be denied position. On the feeding and breeding grounds of the older States he is a back number.

Latest Crop Report.

The following summary up to Tuesday last of the crop conditions is based upon reports received from Weather Bureau Stations, agents of the Southern Pacific Company and other sources scattered throughout the State.

Shasta County—Fruit not so badly injured by early frosts as supposed. Figs are setting nice with promise of large crop. Grain at a standstill. Driving stock to summer ranges earlier than usual. Rain badly needed.

Tehama County—Crop outlook very discouraging. Doubtful if rain now would do any good. Favorable for fruit; orange trees in full bloom.

Glenn County—Summer fallowed grain is standing the dry weather better than expected; some farmers expect to raise feed for their stock.

Butte County—Orange trees in bloom. Good indications of heavy crop of lemons, plums, pears, and prunes. Feather river rising; snow melting on the high ranges above.

Yuba County—On adobe lands and rich river lands moisture is failing and the grain looks very bad. All apricots and almonds and almost all of peaches gone; no hay; small crop of pears and prunes. Outlook discouraging.

Sacramento County—Ten days more of this weather and hay and grain will be an absolute failure; if good showers occur will give one-third of crop.

Yolo County—Fruit advancing rapidly; spraying fruit trees. Heavy orchards on low lands still being irrigated.

Solano County—First box of cherries to go East this year shipped on 15th, eleven days earlier than last year; good crop expected. Other fruit not showing up well. Summer fallow may yield half a crop; winter sown will be a failure.

San Joaquin County—Dry, with northerly early in week. Grain damaged considerably.

Merced County—Wind drying land very fast. Winter sown grain and grass too far gone to benefit by rain. Summer fallow looking well.

Stanislaus County—Drying up fast. Crops inside inside canal district doing well but outside, beyond hope. North winds.

Kern County—Irrigation water scarce. Fruit trees that are not frosted doing well. Limited acreage in dry lands still promises grain. Some dry lands will produce hay, some nothing.

Fresno County—Weather warm. Increased flow of water from the mountains; much needed for irrigation.

Kings County—No grain. Fruit that escaped frost is doing well. Vineyards leafing out.

Tulare County—Outlook for grain very poor. Will have some pears and prunes.

Sonoma County—Grapes budding. Prunes a good crop. Rain needed.

Napa County—Indications of good grain and hay crops. Very fair fruit yield.

Alameda County—Grain on southern exposures drying out. Prospects for hay and grain poor, grass drying fast; fruit and nut season fair; grapes budding; vegetables doing well.

Lake County—The 12th was the warmest April day in 14 years. Early sown grain looks very well, late sown will amount to nothing unless rain falls soon. No plowing. Peaches, pears and apples promise well.

San Mateo County—Some early hay being cut. Strawberries ripening but crop will be short. Ground very dry.

Santa Cruz County—Hot weather and dry winds have had bad effect on crops and feed.

Santa Clara County—Drought is beginning to be seriously felt. Hay and grain must be a failure. Ranchers have little hope. Much fruit on trees but how it will mature is problematical, as orchardists have never experienced a dry year since fruit growing reached its present proportions.

Monterey County—Very warm and dry. Small chance for any crop.

San Luis Obispo County—Crops look very bad. Apples and peaches coming out better than anticipated. Grass and grain gone. Horses selling for $1.50 each; poor ones turned out to die. Shipping cattle away.

Santa Barbara County—Hot wave middle of week. No particular damage.

Ventura County—Hot wind damaged apricots. Many falling.

Los Angeles County—Bassett. Grain drying. Some alfalfa on market; little corn planted. Duarte. All cereals suffering for rain. Navel oranges all shipped. Los Angeles. Fruit of all kinds looking well; hay and grain a failure. Acreage sown to hay and grain will afford some pasturage. Palmdale. No pasture and very little grain. Pomona. Hay crop short; citrus fruits doing fairly well. San Fernando. North wind. Hay and grain a failure; deciduous fruits fair.

San Diego—No rain. Oranges and lemons blossoming profusely. Strawberries ripening slowly. Unusually windy.

Riverside County—No improvement in grain and hay. Orange shipments slightly increased.

Orange County—Hay and grain crop light; fruit trees looking well.

Eureka Summary—Drying north winds checked growth of grass and grain. Pear and cherry trees in full bloom. Rain will soon be needed.

Los Angeles Summary—Intense heat and dry winds fore part of week about ended prospect for hay and grain. Dried up vegetation not under irrigation and injured apricots and walnuts to some extent.

First Silo in San Joaquin County.

The first silo built in San Joaquin county was finished at Bellota on the 18th inst., for the Lewis Brothers, dairymen, by the contractors, Lewis, Todd & Co. It will hold two hundred and sixty-five tons of ensilage and cost $1,000.

There are probably many farmers in this region of the State who do not know what a silo is, and perhaps some who have never heard of ensilage.

Ensilage is a green fodder preserved by packing it wet in an air-tight place and allowing it to heat to 150 degrees Fahrenheit, which destroys the fermenting principles and thus saves it from decay. Fodder prepared in this way retains three-fourths of its milk-making properties, whereas if dried and converted into hay it loses nearly seven-eighths of its strength. This is the main reason why the Lewis Brothers, who own a creamery, have built the silo—the box or vat in which the fodder is packed to convert it into ensilage. Another reason is that if the fodder capable of being packed in the silo were dried and made into hay instead, it would require a barn costing twice as much as the silo does. Another consideration is the fact that stock prefer ensilage to hay, and will even leave the green fields to get it. Besides all these advantages the silo furnishes the cows with the equivalent of green feed the year around.

The structure is 46 feet long, 14 wide, and 25 high, and is divided into three compartments by transverse partitions. It has a concrete floor. The walls are made of heavy timbers of Oregon pine, lined on the inside with finished inch redwood. Two thicknesses of tar paper are tacked on the inside to make the structure air-tight. The green fodder, as it comes from the field, is chopped up by a steam chopper and is then lifted to the top of the silo by means of an elevator operated by steam, and is dumped into a huge bin, where workmen tramp it down tight. At the same time a stream of water is kept playing on the mass. When the bin is almost full a top coating of straw is put on and pressed down, and then the work is done. The mass soon generates heat, which kills the fermenting principles, and the stuff becomes ensilage. It improves with age.

When the time comes for using the ensilage it must be fed daily off in layers at least six inches deep to prevent spoiling. It weighs about 40 pounds to the cubic foot, and a ton of it is equivalent to three and a half tons of hay in milk-making qualities. The Lewis Brothers will use alfalfa as a material for their ensilage, but corn leaves make the best.—Stockton Mail.

SCARCITY OF FODDER.

Will Raise the Price of Milk Twenty Per Cent.

The first day of the coming month will find you paying 20 per cent. more for your milk than you have been paying heretofore. And all this because of the increased price of animal feed. Barley hay is unobtainable and alfalfa costs from $14 to $18 a ton now, and the prospects are that the price will be raised before long. Last year at this time hay cost ranchers but $2.50 a ton, and now they are glad to buy it for $12. The lack of rain has brought this condition of affairs about, says the Los Angeles Herald.

At a meeting of the Los Angeles Dairymen's Association Saturday evening the following schedule of prices, by the month, were agreed upon, to go into effect May 1st, dairymen not members of the association also signing the agreement:

One pint, $1.25; one quart, $2.25; three pints, $3.25; two quarts, $4; two and one-half quarts, $5; three quarts $6; three and one-half quarts, $6.75; four quarts, $7.50.

Hay is so scarce now that dairymen anticipate the price of it will be $20 before the season is over. Any quantity of rain now, they say, would not change these conditions. Moreover, they assert, there is also a scarcity of water for irrigating purposes, and the little that can be obtained is high. Under these circumstances they defend themselves. There was nothing left for them to do but raise the price of their wares.

Secretary Hamilton of the association says that 20 per cent of the men in the dairy business on the first of the year have sold their property at auction or disposed of it to other dealers, not being able to continue with profit under the existing lack of fodder and the high prices attendant upon it.

Fifteen per cent more cows, Secretary Hamilton claims, have gone to the butchers' block this year than last, owing to this lack of feed. He believes their will be a scarcity of cows next year as a consequence of this wholesale slaughter, and that a good cow will bring $100.

At the next meeting of the association ways and means will be discussed for preventing grocers from selling milk, the smaller dealers claiming it works a hardship on them, as it prevents them from getting customers they might otherwise get.

California Herds Threatened With Death From Starvation.

Our Fresno correspondent writes us as regards the outlook for pasture in Fresno and adjacent counties as follows:

Unless something at present unforeseen happens, fully 10,000 head of sheep and cattle will die of starvation in this county alone in the next few months. The order of the United States Government revoking for the present the restriction by which cattle and sheep are prohibited from being pastured in the reservations and opening these reservations for pasturage until further notice will not afford the desired relief. The herdsmen are not slow to point out that the order still excludes the stock from the parks, and it is in these alone that the requisite pasture can be obtained. The forest reservations, as such, are as bare of grass this year as the plains themselves.

The entire track of country on the west side from Newman to Bakersfield, embracing an area of 100 miles in length by thirty in width, and which in previous years has supported enormous herds of cattle at this season, is now a desert. The waters of Tulare Lake will be lower this year than at any time within the memory of the oldest inhabitant. To reach the water the cattle will have to wade through three feet of mud and the prospects all through the slough country are for a repetition of the scenes of 1877, when hundreds of sick and thirsty animals died on the banks from sheer exhaustion and inability to wade further.

The cattlemen are also pointing out that the quarantine which Nevada has established against California cattle will work a great hardship to them. There is no pasture in the Mount Diablo range where it borders on this valley, and stockmen at Hollister and points on the west side of the range are complaining quite as loudly as their neighbors on this side. It is understood that an urgent representation has been made to Senator White asking that the Sierra reservations in this part of the State be thrown completely open to sheep and cattle this year, with no restrictions as to the parks. Urgent necessity is held to be of more consequence than scenic beauty and the glacial meadows represent the last hope of the stockmen of the valley this year.

Although no rain has fallen this month the rapid melting of snow has greatly augmented the volume of water in the Kings and San Joaquin rivers, and in the irrigation ditches connection with them. But this cannot relieve the conditions on the west side, and at best the flow will be only temporary. Old residents say that they do not remember at any time to have seen less snow on the mountains, and the snow banks are the only source from which water can reach the valley during the long dry season that is near at hand. The San Joaquin rose a few feet this week, but much or most of this water will flow straight away to the sea because there are very few ditches connected with this stream.

California Cattle Sell Freely.

J. S. Iman of Grand Island, Neb., arrived at the Russ House on Wednesday last, and after a few moments' conversation with a California cattleman, bought 500 head of cattle outright. He has come here, it is said, to buy all the cattle he can get. He will probably be given immediate opportunities for other purchases, as several cattlemen are on the spot to make sales. Among them are S. T. Corner, of Los Alamos, Santa Barbara county, now at the Russ, who disposed of several hundred head yesterday to another buyer, and J. J. Hebron and Arthur Hebborn, of Salinas, who are guests at the Grand. The extreme scarcity of feed is hastening sales.

Dipping Sheep Necessary.

Dipping sheep, like the spraying of our fruit trees and using of insecticides generally, has become a necessity. True, we can grow sheep and fruit on our farms without these measures, but the sheep and fruit will be of the unprofitable kind.

The sheep have been sheared and the ticks seem to desert them for the lambs. Within ten days or two weeks after shearing the lambs will be found rubbing and biting themselves and show a lack of thrift. Delay in dipping reduces the vigor of the flock. Lambs covered with ticks are less thrifty than lousy pigs. Both are miserable and unprofitable property and a reproach to the breeder. The farmer who keeps a bunch of sheep as scavengers generally leaves them to shift for themselves. Too few farmers think sheep need any care. They are left to the mercy of hungry dogs and vermin and are seldom sheltered or fed. It is this class of sheep-owners that say, "Sheep don't pay and we would not keep them except to keep down briars and weeds."

In driving through the country it is easy to tell the character of the farmer by the appearance of his sheep. It is no uncommon thing to see locks of wool hanging from sheep and on the wire fence and brush and thickets, and where we see it adorning fencestakes and posts we conclude the farmer knows nothing of the value of sheep dip. Sometimes we have met men who said they had tried snuff, tobacco, and sulphur, but they did no good. When sheep get ticks and scab they sell the sheep to a shipper for a song to get rid of them. As the outlook for sheep is better we find some of these men buying from shippers even poorer sheep than they sold. It is amazing that such methods continue when we have so many successful handlers of sheep and so many good papers that are full of information as to how to handle sheep. Unfortunately the men who lose so much by neglect and breed ticks, parasites and insect pests to annoy their neighbors and deplete their own pockets are too busy to read and have no time to fool away dipping sheep or spraying fruit trees. They tell us they have no luck any more.

The merciful man would dip sheep even if it did not increase profits, but one generally gets a dollar back for every dime invested in sheep dip. If your neighbor will not take the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, or some other good stock journal, then for the credit of your neighbor do some missionary work on him. It is hard to preach to unbelievers, but they need exhortation as well as example. A well kept flock, like a well kept farm is a valuable object lesson and one that can be easily learnt by carefully perusing the columns of this journal last week.

Sheep and Wool Notes.

The importation of wool in the past six months, under the Dingley law, was only 51,786,000 pounds against 73,195,000 in the corresponding six months of the preceding year, under the Wilson law, while in the six months just prior to the enactment of the new law the total importations of wool were five times as great as those of the past six months, being 280,000,000 pounds in round numbers.

A sheepman of Colorado had a range in which the grass had attained a luxuriant growth but useless because so infested with prickly pears that the sheep could not graze among them. He set fire to the range when the grass was dry. The flames burned the thorns of the cactus and the sheep have been feeding and thriving well on it since it was brought to a condition that enabled them to eat it.

Large numbers of sheep are being shipped north from the southern counties, and Friday thirty carloads from San Luis Obispo county passed through Sacramento for the pastures in the vicinity of Marysville.

The pastures in the southern counties are little better than deserts at this time, and the exodus of sheep to the north has been going on for nearly two weeks and promises to continue.

The railroad officials have received notice from stockmen that as soon as the necessary permission can be received from the Secretary of Agriculture, to send cattle over the splenic fever quarantine line which crosses the State a few miles north of Sacramento, transportation for 5,000 head will be required.

It is expected that a great number of owners of southern herds will take advantage of the arrangements whereby they may be moved to the green pastures of the northern counties.

Henry Gardner, of Porterville, has been shipping from Exeter, Tulare county, several carloads of sheep to Oakland during the week.

Swine Notes.

Never use a vicious animal for breeding.

It will often pay to sow oats and clover for hog pasture.

Keeping good stock helps to market the bulky products to the best advantage.

Too much fat is not desirable in a breeding animal, as it renders them less sure.

Hogs will enable you to make money—earn money rapidly—better than almost any other kind of stock. One reason is they increase so rapidly.

If young pigs are taken away from the sows at farrowing they should be fed fresh cow's milk, but not much at a time, and at the same temperature as it comes from the cow.

To have a good healthy pig he should have a variety of feed. This gives them a better appetite and makes their digestion better, and by these means they mature more rapidly.

Don't feed the brood sow too much, but keep her in good flesh by feeding her good, succulent food. You will find her pigs better, and she will be a better mother. Too many brood sows have been ruined by over-feeding.

No matter how small the farm, pigs may be profitably kept on food suitable to them that without them would probably be wasted.

It doesn't pay to send hogs to market without getting them first fat and smooth, and at the very least they should be fed a few weeks on grain. Keep them in good flesh from the time of weaning—strong, thrifty, and developing frame—and have them ready to market by the time they are ten months old, earlier if possible. Let them have plenty of grazing, but some grain should accompany it.

It pays best to raise for market hogs of the best grades and it pays to give them the treatment necessary for their best development all the time. This should be begun with the pigs through the sow from before the time she brings her litter and continued without interruption. It is an actual loss to permit them at any time to permit them at any time to become stunted. It is more than a loss of time. It takes more feed to start them again and much more after getting them started, for every pound added to their weight than would have been necessary had their improvement been steadily continued.

In Wisconsin some years ago an experiment was made in feeding that shows the importance of feeding liberally the sow while suckling. A litter of seven pigs was taken, weighing, when first dropped, 18 pounds. At the end of three weeks their weight was increased to 98 pounds. All this gain was, of course, through the milk of the dam. Shortly previous to farrowing the diet of the dam should be light, and no increase should be made for twenty-four hours after the pigs are born. Then the increase should be gradual, so as not to disturb the digestive organs. The gains of the pig should be growth instead of fat, and it is recommended for that purpose that the dam be fed bran, shorts, oatmeal, or other food of that character instead of corn. Such a diet is certainly better for the health of the sow and gives to her milk a more healthy quality.

Pielmelons with unthrashed barley seems to be the main dependence for hog food at present in some portions of Southern California.

Cattle Notes.

As experience shows the superior value of good blood in cattle bought for the feed pen the tendency will be to discriminate more strongly against common and scrub steers. The number of men who will buy anything that has horns and hoofs will grow smaller year by year. It takes more science to fatten the "thoroughbred scrub" than the ordinary feeder possesses, as well as very much more feed and time, and after all that is done that can be done for such an animal it never has the appearance that enables its owners to secure top prices.

Santa Rosa, during the past week has been shipping considerable hay to Contra Costa stockmen, feed is reported as very short in the latter county.

Charles T. Schreiner returned this week from a several days' stay at his ranch beyond Bridgeville. He says that stock in that section is in a fine condition, many of the cattle being fat enough for beef.

Henry Miller, of the multi-millionaire firm Miller & Lux, was in Suisun this week looking for pasture land for some of the extensive droves of cattle he has scattered throughout Southern California. He succeeded in renting several thousand acres of land belonging to the Hasting's estate near Maine Prairie. Like many other who have visited that section, Mr. Miller says the prospects in Solano county are far better than elsewhere in the State.

The Jacksonville, Org., Democrat, says: The large band of cattle recently purchased by Slinger & Ulrich in Del Norte county, Cal., are now being driven to this section. A part of these cattle will be taken to Hanley Bros.' ranch in Harney county.

The Sutter County Farmer says: "Joseph Haugh, the cattle buyer, purchased fifty head of beef cattle last week for Frank Armour of Nevada city from W. F. Hoke, A. Graffis and Dr. Jackson of this county.

A band of over 200 head of cattle, the property of Reyman & Evans, passed through Yuba City, Cal., on the 19th inst., on the way to the tule range.

The Carson, Nevada, Board of Health has reported resolutions placing horses on the quarantine list, also suggesting the establishment of a quarantine station at Verdi, Nev., on the State line, for sheep seeking admission to the State. An inspector will be appointed and each sheep thus inspected will be taxed at the rate of 2½ cents per head, which compensates the inspector.

Poultry Notes.

Lettuce is one of the best kind of greens for young chicks.

Keep the chicks busy. Lightly litter their pens with chaff. Exercise is a splendid tonic.

Rolled oats, pinhead oat meal and canary seed are good for part of the diet of chicks.

Up to two weeks of age, chicks can stand confinement; after that they must be let out of their quarters.

Do not keep young chicks with ducklings. The latter pollute the water and get the brooder in a bad mess.

It is not so much in learning how, as to be willing to give the constant care and attention that secures good work with the incubator.

Every one who has used alfalfa clover in winter, or at any other time, knows the great value of it as a poultry food and egg producer. It is easily prepared in winter when the hay is dry. With a little pounding it is astonishing to see how little bulk there will be of the stems. This chaff, well sprinkled with bran, makes a feed for poultry in winter that may be equalled, but it is doubtful if it can be excelled.

Dairy Notes

Applying the very reasonable rule that a successful dairyman laid down at a recent institute that a standard cow should produce 5,000 pounds of milk and 260 pounds of butter, or 600 pounds of cheese in a year, it would seem that a good many more cows ought to go to the butcher.

It is well to remember that not more than half the calves are heifers, and not more than half of these are just the type from which you wish to build up your herd, a certain per cent. of these may have something happen to them before maturity. And then, a cow is not at her best till fresh the third time. It has been proven at experiment stations that a heifer is only a third of a cow, the second time fresh two-thirds of a cow and the third time fresh as good as she ever will be.

While a cool store room is better, yet where you haven't one, any amount of butter may be kept sweet and firm by covering the butter with a brine. Make the butter into rolls and wrap in pieces of muslin. Make your brine in the following manner: Put enough salt in six quarts of water to cause an egg to float in it; add two tablespoonfuls of granulated sugar, and half a tablespoonful of saltpeter. Let the brine come to a boil and when cold strain it over the butter, which should be weighted sufficiently to keep the rolls beneath the surface and exclude the air.

THE MARKETS.

Reports of Butchertown, Western Meat Company Refrigerated Meats, Local Wool, Hides, Tallow, Butter and Cheese, and Eastern Cattle Markets by Telegraph.

EASTERN LIVE STOCK MARKETS.

SHEEP—Receipts none. Market unchanged.

BUTCHERTOWN.

The tone of the local market at Butchertown has been decidedly off throughout the past week. Arrivals of stock from all parts of the country where feed is particularly short are coming in too freely to meet the present demand, consequently prices are being cut on all grades of live stock.

"Slaughterers are of the opinion that the market will continue to remain in its present unsatisfactory condition, but the reaction will be very strong just as soon as those localities which are compelled to want of feed to ship their stock to market. To quote the language of a prominent wholesaler, "Beef and mutton, if the present condition of affairs exists, will go higher than any prices we have seen in the past fifteen years, and that before the next ninety days." What grass cattle are coming in are far from what should be coming to market at this season of the year, and what are likely to arrive within the next sixty days is not calculated to be an improvement.

CALVES—Are coming in more plentiful and, in sympathy with the beef market, are quoted lower this week.

MUTTON—Sheep men are hurrying stock to market and prices have fallen a full half a cent throughout the week. Spring lamb is in good demand and slightly weaker in price.

HOGS—Owing to continued high price offered packers are not buying except as their requirements call for, consequently buyers have to make or less their own way. As we have previously stated, hog raisers will find it to their advantage to hold back their hogs until the present surplus is worked off. This will undoubtedly insure a better result from a ¼ to ½ cent per lb. which will amply compensate them for additional feed. We quote as follows:

Steers—First quality, very choice, 5½¢; Steers, No. 1, 1¼¢@5½¢; Steers, No. 2, 6¢; Steers, No. 3, 5¢@5½¢. Extra Choice Cows and Heifers 5½¢@6¢; Good to Fair, 5¢@6¢; Bulls, stags and old Cows, 4¢@5¢; Calves, choice range, large, 10¢@12¢; Dairy, 6¢@6½¢; Wethers, first quality, 8¢@8½¢; Wethers, second quality, 7¢@7½¢; Ewes, first quality, 7¢@7½¢; Ewes, second quality, 7¢; Lamb, yearlings, 7¢; Lamb (this Spring), 9¢@10¢; Hogs, dressed hard, 5¢@6¢; Hogs, live, hard, medium, 3¼¢@4¢; Hogs, live, hard, heavy, 3¢@3½¢.

HIDES AND SKINS.

There is no change to report in the hide or pelt market. Arrivals are plentiful to meet all requirements and tanners are showing no disposition to purchase beyond actual requirements. We quote as follows:

TALLOW.—Is finding sale at our figures with a moderate demand.

WET SALTED HIDES—Heavy Steers, over 56 lbs, 10¢, culls, 9¢; Medium, 48 to 56 lbs, 9¢, culls, 8¢; Light Steers, under 48 lbs, 9¢, culls, 8¢; Steers, over 50 lbs, 9¢, culls, 8¢; Light Cows, 30 to 50 lbs, 9¢, culls, 8¢; 3 eggs, 6¢, culls 5¢; Klips, 9¢, culls 5¢; Veal, 9¢, culls 8¢; Calf, 10¢, culls 8¢; Dry Hides, 16¢, culls, 13¢; Dry Kip and Veal, 14¢@15¢, culls, 11¢; Dry Calf, 18¢@20¢, culls, 15¢@16¢. Hides, large prime, $2 25 each; medium, $1.75; small, 75 cents.

TAILS—Large size 35 cents per dozen.

PELTS AND SHEARINGS—20¢@30¢ each; do, short, 4¢@70¢ each; do, medium, 70¢@90¢ each; do, long wool, 90¢@1.30 each; Deer Skins, summer, 2¢@30¢; do, good medium, 20¢; do, winter, 10¢ per lb; Goat skins, 20¢@37¢ c; piece for prime to perfect; 1¢@20¢ for damaged and 10¢@10¢ each for Kids.

TALLOW—We quote: No. 1, Rendered, 3¢@3½¢ per lb; No. 2, 2¢@2½¢; Grease, 2¢ per lb.

REFRIGERATED DRESSED MEATS.

Business in refrigerated meats has been particularly good for this past week, owing to the excellent quality of the dressed meats offered for sale. Mutton was particularly choice, and compared with other stock offered by slaughterers was superior to anything in the market. Prices for all grades of dressed meats are lower this week than previously reported. We quote as follows:

Wholesale Market, Sixth and Townsend, San Francisco.

Beef carcasses, prime, 6¢@6½¢; beef carcasses, second quality, 6¢; No. 1, Cows and Heifer, 5½¢; No. 2, Cows and Heifers, 5¢@5½¢; Mutton, Wethers, carcasses, 8½¢; Mutton, Wethers, carcasses, No. 2, 8¢; Mutton Ewes, carcasses, No. 1, 8¢; Mutton, Ewes, carcasses, No. 2, 7½¢; Lamb (this year's Spring) 8¢@9¢; Veal, light, 6¢@6½¢; Veal, heavy, 5½¢@6¢; Pork, carcasses, 6¢.

WOOL &amp; POOL.

The local wool market remains very quiet and inactive, in fact there is no speculative tendency on the part of buyers to operate. The war question is agitating manufacturers and until something is finally settled the dealers are not disposed to do business except on a limited scale. Considerable spring wool is coming in and is being stored in warehouse and prices so far as quoted are nominal. We quote as follows:

NEVADA SPRING—Light and choice, 10¢@13¢; Fall Clip, plain, 6¢@9¢; Moun, 9¢@11¢; Northern, def. culv, 8¢@10¢; Mendocino and Humboldt, 15¢@16¢.

OREGON SPRING—Eastern, choice, 10¢@11¢; Eastern, poor, 9¢@11¢ Valley, choice, 14¢@16¢; Valley, low grade, 12¢@13¢.

DAIRY AND POULTRY.

The butter market has ruled stronger than last reported and prices are firmer all along the line. Owing to reported scarcity in the local market dealers are importing the Eastern article and two to three carloads are expected to arrive at the end of the week which are being offered at 19 cents delivered. This may have a tendency to weaken the domestic article. We quote:

Creamery's, 20¢@20½¢ per lb and occasionally higher for extra fine seconds, 19¢@19½¢; Daries, 17½¢@18¢.

CHEESE—The demand for cheese has been fairly good and arrivals have not been in excess of the supply. Prices have accordingly been well sustained.

We quote: California per lb, Cheddars, 10¢@11¢; Flats, mild, new, 9½¢@10¢; fair to good, 8½¢@9¢; Young America, 10¢@11¢; Eastern, New York Cream, Cheddars and Flats 12¢@13¢; Western, 11½¢@12¢.

EGGS—The egg market has ruled somewhat weaker than last reported and prices are lower than asked a cent lower than last week. We quote: California Ranch, 13¢@14¢; California Store, 12¢@12½¢; Eastern, 12¢; Duck eggs, 16¢.

POULTRY—Is in liberal supply and quotations are slightly weaker than previously reported. Receipts of Eastern are not meeting with a brisk demand. We quote: Old Roosters, per doz, $3 75@4; young, $7@8; Fryers, 6¢@6.50; Broilers, large, $4@4.50; small, $2 50@3.50; Ducks, old, doz, $3.50@4.50; young, $6@7; Turkeys, live, Hens, per lb, 12¢@12½¢; Gobblers, 10¢@11¢; dressed, per lb, 12¢@15¢; Geese, pair, $1.25; Goslings, pair, $1.75@2.25; Pigeons, young, $1.50@1.75; do, old, $1.25.

Eastern Poultry—Old Roosters per doz, $4.50; Hens, $5.50@6; Fryers, $6.50; Broilers, —; Young Roosters, $8; Ducks, $4.50; Turkeys, per lb, 12¢; Geese, pair, $2.

WHEAT—The rise in prices has completely stopped the demand for shipping, and the only inquiry is for local consumptive account. Tide-water quotations are as follows: $1.60 for No. 1, $1.62½ for choice and $1.61½ for extra choice for milling.

HAY—Wheat and Oat Hay has gone up again. There is no longer any Stock Hay on the market. (Ex-car in round lots)—Wheat, $24@27 per ton; Wheat and Oat, $21@25; Oat, $20@23; Barley, nominal; compressed Wheat, $22@25; compressed Oat, $20@22.50; Alfalfa, $14@16; Clover, nominal; Oregon Timothy, $14@16.

STRAW has made a sharp advance, it now being used for feed in the country. 70¢@80¢ per bale.

BRAN—$21@21.50 per ton.

MIDDINGS—$23@25.50 per ton.

FEEDSTUFFS—Rolled Barley, $30 per ton; Ollcake Meal at the mill, $31@41.50; jobbing, $32@42.50; Coconut Cake, $34@35; Cottonseed Meal, $2@30 per ton; Cornmeal, $24; Cracked Corn, $21@25.

FLOUR—Net cash prices are: Family extras, $5.25@5.35; Bakers' extras, $5@5.10 per barrel. Superfine nominal.

MILLSTUFFS—Prices in sack are follows, usual discount to the trade: Graham Flour, $3 per 100 lbs.; Rice Flour, $6; Cornmeal, $2.50; extra cream Cornmeal, $2.50; extra cream Cornmeal, $3.25; Oatmeal, $4; Oat Groats, $4.25; Hominy, $3.25@3.50; Buckwheat Flour, $4@4.25; Cracked Wheat, $3.75; Farina, $1.75; Whole Wheat Flour, $1.25; Rolled Oats (barrels), $5.80@6.20; in sacks, $5.60@6; Pearl Barley, $4.75; Split Peas, $4.25; Green Peas, $4.50 per 100 lbs.

BEANS—Bays, $2.90@3; Small Whites, $1.50@1.70; Large Whites, $1.55@1.70; Pinks, $2.55@2.65; Reds, $2.25@2.35; Blackeye, nominal; Butters, $1.40@1.60; Limas, $2.40@2.50; Peas, $1.60@1.70; Red Kidneys, $2.25 per cbl.

SEEDS—Brown Mustard, $2@3 per cbl.; Yellow Mustard, $3@3.15; Flax, 2.35; Canary seed, 2¼¢@2½¢ per lb.; Alfalfa, 26¢; Rape, 2¼¢@2½¢; Hemp, 2¼¢@3¢; Timothy, 5¢@5½¢.

DRIED PEAS—Niles, $1.75@2; Green, $1.90@2.10 per 50 cbl.

POTATOES—Early Rose, 30¢@35¢; River Reds, 50¢@60¢; River Burbanks, 50¢@60¢ per sack; Oregon Burbanks, 55¢@65¢; Petaluma Burbanks, 50¢@70¢; Sweet Potatoes, $1.25@2.25 for Merced; new Potatoes, $1.20 per lb.

ONIONS—Choice, $2 50@2.70 per cbl; cut onions $1.50@2.25; per sack. Colorado Onions, 75¢@1.00.

VEGETABLES—Asparagus, $1.75@2.00 for extra large, $1.25@1.50 per box for No. 1 and 40¢@1.00 for No. 2; Rhubarb, 25¢@50¢ per box for good, and 60¢@75¢ for extra choice; Alameda Green Peas, 7¢@1¢ per sack; Urie Peppers, 6¢@7¢ per lb; Dried Oat 12¢; Cabbage, 65¢@75¢ per cbl; Carrots, 25¢@60¢ per sack; Garlic, nominal; Cucumbers, 25¢@1¢ per dozen; Mexican Tomatoes, $1@1.75 per box.

Some Facts About Calf Feeding.

The following is quoted from the Indiana Experiment Station. "The first experiment was made with two calves, one of which was fed skim milk and the other whole milk. They were fed sixty-two days. The one fed skim milk consumed nineteen and three-tenths pounds per day and gained seventy-eight pounds in sixty-two days, a daily gain of one and seven-tenths hundredths pounds. Estimating the skim milk at twenty-five cents per hundred, the seventy-eight pounds of growth cost three dollars, the cost per pound being three and eighty-four hundredths cents. With the calf fed on whole milk, estimating it to be worth one dollar per hundred pounds, the seventy-three pounds of growth cost seven dollars and forty-two cents or over ten cents per pound. These calves were both pure-bred Jerseys; there was but one day's difference in their ages. In the various experiments made at this station, it was found that the feeding value of skim milk was thirty-two cents per hundred." The person conducting this experiment believes that much better results might have been obtained had they fed some grain in connection with the milk. Pennsylvania station work for 1897 gives the results of work done with whole milk and skim milk fed to calves. In the summary of results they say: "Counting whole milk at one dollar per hundred and skim milk at twelve cents per hundred, it costs nine and nine-tenths cents to make a pound of increase when whole milk was fed, and three and four-tenths cents to make a pound of increase when skim milk was fed."

Fruitless Search For Pasture.

P. J. Dooling, Manager of the Hollister Creamery, returned last Monday from a trip through the northern part of the State where he had gone in search of pasture for the milch cows connected with the creamery. His time was principally spent in the vicinity of Marysville. He made a thorough canvas of that section for a radius of fifty miles and was unable to find any pasture that would answer the purpose, in fact did not find any pasture at all that was for rent. The land which is usually used for grazing purposes does not contain an over-abundance of feed, and is the case in all other sections of the State, will require considerable rain to keep it alive during the summer. There are several tracts of good bottom pasture in that vicinity but the owners would not consider any proposition as to the renting of them.

New Cattle Disease.

It is reported that a large number of cattle on pasture in the tules between Bay Point and Cornwall are dying with a disease called the Black Leg. Our informant states that the death rate amounts to about twenty-five per day. Just why the disease is called Black Leg or where and how it originated is not known, but it is reported to be very fatal. When an animal is stricken with the disease it dies in a very few hours. It is said that the disease first developed among cattle from the Hyde ranch. It will also be remembered that it was said that the venomous fly that made its appearance among cattle and horses last year came also from the Hyde ranch. It is thought that these diseases and pests came with the importation of Texan cattle. If the reports are true it is indeed too bad, for it is enough to have to contend with a dry year without being assailed by disease.—Martinez County Paper.

Beets Destroyed at Anaheim.

The most destructive windstorm of the season blew from the west all day Saturday at Anaheim. In addition to spoiling large areas of barley, it sealed the doom of the best crop around Anaheim. About 300 acres, almost ready for thinning, are now covered with sand to a depth of several inches or blown completely out of the soil. Considering the dryness of the season, replanting is out of the question. Senator Jones, local agent for the Chino sugar factory, has ordered all the beet seed sold to the farmers to be returned, and no beets will be shipped from here to Chino this season.

Beecher on the Trotter.

A long time ago Henry Ward Beecher wrote Robert Bonner a letter in which he said: "I am entirely of your mind, that if a horse has swiftness put in him, it is fair to develop his gifts. Of course there is a bound and reason in all things—even in trotting. It is much easier and pleasanter for some horses to go twelve miles an hour than for others to go three, for they were made so. Does it hurt a swallow to go swifter than an ox? Why not? Because he was made so. A good horse was made to go fast. He does it when wild of his own accord. He does not lose the relish of speed even when domesticated. Fastness is a virtue. Our mistaken moderation is to deprive him of it. I drive fast on principle. I do it for the sake of being in touch with nature. To drive slow only and always is to treat a horse as if he were an ox. You may be slow if you think proper; but your horse should be kept up to nature. If he had but two legs, then that would mean slow; but he has four and ought to go fast. Why do I say these things to you? Not to caution you of your duty; but I feared in your taking me out to ride you would feel disposed to think I had scruples and would jog along moderately, as if doing me a favor. Not at all. The wind does not go fast enough to suit me. Let the horse be well groomed, well harnessed. Let the wagon be thoroughly looked to; no flaw to betray us. Mount, and I am by your side. Let the whip be not disturbed; let it stand in its place. The graceful hint of authority in reserve, which is always wholesome to man and horse. Do not laugh if I clutch at the seat more firmly. I am not afraid; it is only excitement. You may be used to this bird's business of flying. But don't draw the rein; I am getting calm. Just see that play of muscle! Splendid machinery was put into these horses. How they enjoy it. No forcing here. They do it to please themselves, and thank you for the chance. Look at that head! Those ears speak like a tongue; the eyes flash with eagerness and will. Let's draw up now. Let me get out and look at them. Brave creatures! No painful puffing; no throbbing of the flanks. They step nervously and champ the bit and lean for your caresses, as if to say, all this to please you. Now, just let us go to please ourselves."

VON HAEBIGER, champion harness horse under 15.2 hands at the last New York Show, has been sold by Mr. Joseph E. Widener to Mr. George Watson, the well-known buyer for the London market. Along with him goes the chestnut Silver Leaf, one of the most beautiful horses that Mr. Widener has ever shown the public. The price published is $4,000 for the pair.

E. L. MEYERHONER, Maquoketa, Ia., sold a consignment of twenty-three head of draft horses in the Chicago market last week that top the market for the season, making the average of $175 per head. Several teams in the lot brought $450, and the highest price for single animals was $237.50.

The Trotting Horse.

BY CHARLES MARVIN.

This great practical horse book is a handsome, three hundred page octavo, bound in cloth, elegantly printed and superbly illustrated, and explains in every detail the remarkable success of CHARLES MARVIN and the whole plans and methods pursued at Palo Alto as to breaking, training, shoeing, gaiting, driving, keeping racing and breeding trotters. Read what J. C. Silby, the owner of St. Bel, says of this book: "In this work Marvin has let out all the mysteries of the craft, and it is so simple and plain that any breeder, owner, trainer or rubber who has any relish for his business can take a colt as a yearling and develop to the highest and fullest extent that colt's capacity as a trotter. The work impressed me so strongly that I have ordered twenty copies, and shall place one in the hands of every rubber on our farm."

Mailed postpaid for $3.50. Address THE BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN 413 Bush St., San Francisco, Cal.

The Greatest Trotter in America,

Has trotted 40 heats as a three-year old better than 2:27 1-2, 31 in 2:20 or better and 12 in 2:15 or better. Won 13 races out of 17 starts as a three-year-old, and a total of $5,400 in his three-year-old form.

ZOMBRO, 2:11 (Registered No. 28,029), brown stallion, foaled in 1892, stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds, and is one of the most perfect formed horses in America. His career on the turf in 1895 stamps him as one of the greatest three-year-olds the world has ever seen.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, sired by McKinney, 2:11<sup>1</sup>, son of Alcione, by George Wilkes.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, first dam Whisper, by Almont Lightning, son of Almont 33, dam by Mambrino Pilot 29.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, second dam May Berry, by Kentucky Clay 194, whose dam is also the dam of Mambrino Patchen and Lady Thorne, 2:12<sup>1</sup>.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, third dam by Edwin Forest 49.

Whisper, the dam of Zombro, was bred and raised by Gen. W. T. Withers, of Lexington, Ky., and is a handsome brown mare, 16 hands high, weighing 1,150 pounds. She has never been beaten in the show ring, always carrying off first prize.

ZOMBRO, 2:11, won the first prize over all three-year-old stallions at the Horse Show in San Francisco in 1895.

This grand stallion will make the SEASON of 1898 at SACRAMENTO RACE TRACK, from FEBRUARY 1st to JUNE 1st, 1898. Terms, $30 cash at the time of service.

(REGISTERED 0232)

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

J. H. White's Stock Farm, Lakeville, Cal.

TERMS—$25 FOR THE SEASON

SEYMOUR WILKES was sired by the King of the Wilkes family, Guy Wilkes, 2:15<sup>1</sup>, dam Early Bird, by Playmail (brother to Barney, 2:25<sup>1</sup>); second dam Lucy, by Odd Fellow (son of Chloroform); third dam by a son of Williamson's Belmont; fourth dam by Blackhawk 767. Playmail was by Mike 3403 (he by Vermont 322, out of the Penigermare), out of Kate McDonough (dam of Ella Lewis 2:27, and grandam of Saladin, 2:07<sup>1</sup>).

SEYMOUR WILKES stands 16 hands high and weighs 1,200 pounds. He is a seal brown in color, and in conformation is one of the most symmetrical of any in California. His qualities as a level-headed, game and speedy race horse are known to all horsemen. He is the fastest son of the mighty Guy Wilkes, and on his maternal side traces to the very best of sires and dams. He has an iron constitution, and all owners of good mares that want horses that will have breeding, size, bone, quality, good disposition and extreme speed should not overlook this horse. His service fee is placed at a very low figure considering his merits. He never was bred but to a few mares, and his progeny are models of perfection. Mares can be shipped direct to the ranch via steamer "Gold." The best of care taken of them on the farm, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes. Pasturage $3 per month.  Sire and Grandsire of ALL the 2:10 Performers ever Produced in Oregon and Washington.

WILL MAKE THE SEASON OF 1898 AT

Alameda, at $100 the Season.

(WITH USUAL RETURN PRIVILEGES.)

LIMITED TO TWENTY-FIVE MARES.

ALTAMONT shares championship honors with Baron Wilkes, a horse of great opportunities, in having six 2:10 performers to his credit. He has taken a leading position among the foremost trotting sires of the country under such conditions that phenomenal ability alone has saved him from oblivion. A very small proportion of his progeny has been trained, and an extremely small number of these by competent men. As a partial illustration of his meagre advantages, it may be stated that he has never produced a colt from a pair-bred mare or from one with a fast record. Nor until 1897 had he ever been crossed with a descendant of George Wilkes, Electioneer, Dictator, Sidney or Dexter Prince. Oregon and Washington have produced seven 2:10 performers, and EVERY ONE of these are ALTAMONTS.

ALTAMONT is a horse of iron constitution, and at twenty-three years of age is in the full vigor of his prime, a sure foal-getter, and, except for his blindness—the result of an accident—is without blemish. He has never sired a sorrel, all of his colts having been solid colors—bays, browns or blacks.

NOTE—Besie Rankin, by Altamont, sold November, 1897, brought the highest price obtained for a harness horse at public auction in California during the year. Address

	Montana, 2:16¼	Sire of	and 13 others.

If MONTEREY begets colts like himself he will prove to be the poor man's friend, for it will cost but little to bring them to the races.

MONTEREY had but five months' training before making his record of 2:13¾, last half in 1:03¾. Last season I had no idea of getting him beaten, but his foot was injured in the blacksmith shop, consequently he had to be let up in his training. Previous to this unfortunate accident, I drove him a mile in 2:11¼, last half in 1:02¾, last quarter in 30 seconds. This was done in the presence of 3,000 people about July 10th. I could have driven him better than 2:10, as he seems to be all right. I look for him to get the harness record this year, which ought to make his produce very salable.

MONTEREY is a thorough race horse, as he is level-headed and game as a pebble. He has a fine, resolute way of going a gait so much admired by all. A glance at his pedigree will convince any horseman that he is bred in the purple and is justly entitled to his extra speed. Every one of his family are producers of early and extreme speed.

MONTEREY is one of the gamest horses I ever drove, and, like his full brother, Montana, 2:16¼, the races are never too long for him. Montana won the Occident Stake in seven heats and many a hard-fought race since.

Hattie, dam of Montana and Monterey, is a grand-looking bay mare, and I consider her one of the very strongest, as well as one of the best-bred mares in America. Her sire is strongly bred, and sire speed. To his credit may be mentioned Meteor, 2:17¾; Carrie Bell, 2:23½; the dams of Iago, 2:11; Fell-fare, 2:10¾; Galette, 2:12½, and thirteen others in the list.

I have every reason to expect that Monterey will be the "King of all Trotters." In color he is a rich chestnut, and in conformation he has strong loins and back, good shoulders, fine head and neck, and the best of feet and legs. He weighs 1,200 pounds and stands 15.3 hands.

I will have Monterey at my ranch at Milpitas any time mares are sent there.

TERMS, $50, With Usual Return Privileges.

SEASON CLOSES JUNE 1, 1898, as Monterey will then be prepared for the races. All bills payable not later than that date. Address all letters to

THE AMERICAN CHAMPION RACERS, SOME OF THEIR ACHIEVEMENTS, AND THEIR DESCENT, TRACED IN THE FEMALE LINE.

As we have in this country no such turf classics as the Epsom Derby, The Oaks, the 1,000 or 2,000 Guineas, or the Doncaster St. Leger, the oldest stake now being run for in this country, the Travers, at Saratoga, being instituted in 1864, we will take the recognized champions of America from 1800 to date and trace them to the furthest source the stud book compiler carries them, or to the "tap root." We believe that in this way we can get a better idea of the worth of the various racing families of this country than by any other method, and, after all, championship form is better than the win of a Derby, Oaks or St. Leger, when that victory might have been in the nature of a fluke and subsequently the animal proved of no account. But a real champion racer is a different proposition. That is, to our minds, a galloper which has shown the ability to go a long journey, at least a St. Leger distance as a three-year-old, a Cup distance as a four-year-old or upward, to carry its entitled weight for age and to defeat the best that could be pitted against it in a majority of cases. While Sensation, Tremont, French Park and El Rio Rey were undefeated racers, they only ran as two-year-olds, and could scarcely be put down as real champions, for it is not known whether or not they would have liked a Derby or a Cup route had they not been retired when they were. His Highness and Domino, too, were great two-year-olds and hard to beat up to a mile as three-year-olds, but they cannot be put down in the championship table that follows, for the reason that they did not like a long journey.

The undefeated American racers were American Eclipse, Ball's Florizel (sire of the dam of Boston), imp. Monarch, Norfolk, Asteroid, Sensation, Tremont, French Park and El Rio Rey. Lexington was practically undefeated, for the only black mark on his record was when Lecompte beat him at four miles, and then his rider pulled up at three miles, thinking he had gone four. Harry Bassett won all his three-year-old races. Wagner won fifteen out of seventeen races, and it was declared that in one (where Gamma defeated him) he was "dosed." Imp. Monarch, owned by Gen. Wade Hampton, was what was termed "a well-managed horse," for although he won every one of the ten races in which he engaged, he never met the redoubtable Boston nor his rival, Wagner. Boston was perhaps the most remarkable of all the champion racers of America enumerated below, for he won thirty four-mile heat races, nine races of the three-mile heats, capturing altogether forty of the forty five races in which he was a starter, and his owner had for a long time a standing challenge to race any horse in the world at four-mile heats. Ariel is credited with winning forty-two races out of fifty-seven starts, seventeen of the wins being at four-mile heats. Of Ball's Florizel it is said: "He never paid forfeit, was never defeated, and never felt the touch of a whip or spur." His stride, measured on a damp track, was twenty-six feet. Sally Hope, by Sir Archy, won nineteen races in succession without losing a heat, this in the day of four-mile heat racing.

It is our belief that Hanie's Marie never met defeat and should be added to the list of invincibles, but as we are not positive on the point, will let it go. Reality (grandam of Fashion, was declared by Col. Johnson, "the Napoleon of the Turf," to be the best racer he ever owned, which was saying a good deal, considering that he had had in his stable Henry (Sir Henry), Betsy Richards, John Richards and many other turf notabilities. Col. Johnson always declared that Henry should have beaten American Eclipse—that it was the inexperience of the rider that lost the race. He also used to say it was "the lobsters that beat him" and not the race horse, for he (Col. Johnson) had partaken freely of that shell fish on the night previous to the great $20,000 match and therefore did not look after Henry as well as he otherwise would have done. Balloon, of the above champions, accomplished the most remarkable feat. It was to win at one meeting races at mile heats, two-mile heats, three-mile heats and four mile heats. Kingston, with eighty-seven wins to his credit, tops the list of race winners among the American champions, though old Boston, with forty-five races, most of them at four mile heats, probably did more actual running than Kingston in his 120 odd. Kentucky was defeated on but one occasion, and won all the great three-year-old stakes of 1864. Mollie McCarthy's lone defeat was from Ten Broeck and Falsotto's from Lord Murphy, in the Kentucky Derby of 1879. Luke Blackburn won twenty-two races out of twenty-four starts as a three-year-old, and this is probably the record of wins for a horse of his age. Hindoo, with his entitled weight up, ran two and one-quarter miles in 3:57 and 3:58, and also won the Kenner Stakes, two miles, in 3:32. Bertrand ran twelve miles in one day in 23:20 (just thirty seconds faster than when American Eclipse defeated Henry) and was never beaten at four miles, though he took part in at least seven races of four-mile heats during his turf career. Thad Stevens beat the pick of the land here at four-mile heats in 1873 for a $20,000 purse and in another race, at Oakland, with 115 pounds up, ran a second four-mile heat in 7:30, the best on record to date.

Ruthless, Relentless and Remorseless were from imp. Barbarity, while Marion threw three that were accounted champions in Emperor of Norfolk, El Rio Rey and Yo Tambien. Balloon by Yorkshire threw a champion in The Banshee, and True Blue, sister to The Banshee, was nearly a champion. The following also might be credited with producing foals with racing ability equal to that possessed by themselves: Lady Lightfoot, Black Maria; Gabriella, George Martin; Betsy Malone, Charmer; Nina, Planet; Magenta, Duke of Magenta; Maiden, Parole, and Salina, Salvator.

Excepting Amanda (dam of Daroc), imp. Monarch, Fashion, Balloon, Planet and Magenta, all the champions in the table below traced to Herod in the male line, and it was not until the late '60's that the Eclipse stallions began to attract a great amount of attention. Of the thirty-six champions on our list foaled from 1870 to 1894, twenty-four are of the Eclipse male line, showing that our breeders had awakened to the fact that they had blood other than Herod possessing merit, and that they hastened to correct their errors.

Following is the list of horses we regarded as being champions of the American turf, taking from 1800 to date. Previous to 1800 Slammerkin, by imp. Wildair, was never beaten and her sire became so famous that he was reshipped to England. Other very celebrated racers were Wildflyer (foaled in 1774), "Overseer's Mare" Bellair, Calypso, Virago (called the Irish Beauty), Shark (owned by Gen. Wm. Washington, a nephew of Gen. George Washington) and Gallatin:

*Almost without exception those tracing to the Why Not mare do so through imp. Selima, by the Godolphin Arabian. It is our belief that some day it will be proved that Wagner and Norfolk trace to the Burton Barb mare through imp. Mary Gray, who had seven fillies by imp. Jolly Roger. (See pages 106, 135, 436 437 and 562 volume I, and page 180, vol. 2, American Stud Book, for our reasons for saying this.)

The Bellair mare was probably Calypso, and traced to a son of Fryall, as did Gabriella and George Martin.

Sir Archy, Harry Bassett and Kingston traced to the same Royal mare through Gypsy by King William's No-tongued Barb—mare by Makeless—Royal mare.

Ninety-one horses are included in the above list of champions, and those tracing on the mother's side of the house, the direct female line, to the Old Montague mare often more than to any other, therefore on the Buca Lowe plan they would rank:

If it is ever proven (and we believe it will) that Wagner, The Banhee, Balloon, Norfolk, Freeland and others in the above champion list, traced to the Burton Barb mare, that would make her descendants No. 3 in our list. It is a peculiar fact that the Tregonwell Barb mare (No. 1, Lowe plan) does not figure in the above table of champions. In future articles we will discuss the merits of the various lines when siring winners is the desideratum, and we believe that the above compilation will be interesting to breeders, if indeed not of considerable benefit.

FIRST FOALS.

Of the numerous lessons to be derived from the Stud Book few are more instructive than that appertaining to the first born progeny of mares. Research in this direction is rendered all the more interesting because of the admitted prejudice against giving high or fancy prices for yearlings by sires, or from dams who are on their trial at the stud. The few exceptions which can be instanced by way of proving this rule are more in favor of the male than the female progenitor, and as far as Australasia is concerned, Musket and his illustrious son, Carbine, are the most striking cases in point. The subject is such a comprehensive one that but scant justice can be done to it in the limited space at my command, yet I will strive to show that much of the prejudice which prevails against first foals is of a fallacious order. In this connection I will confine my observations to the maiden offspring of mares. Amongst the most famous first foals contained in the English Stud Book—that sacred volume which will not permit its pages to be soiled by the inclusion of the Australian champion, Newhaven—are the famous Touchstone, Pyrrhus, Marc Antony, Wild Dayrell, Barcaldine, Carlton, Melton, Hampton and the "old" Pantaloon. Of Wild Dayrell it has been recorded that he was so feeble at first that he had to be wheeled about in a barrow, thus causing his owner to observe—he had never bred a thoroughbred before—that if this was the class of animal that he had gone in for raising, he had better go back to crossbreds, for he was sure "he was sure he could never make up his mind to have his foals wheeled about in barrows." Yet this sickly foal eventually grew into a fine horse, and, trained by his owner's groom, he won the Derby. To come nearer home, the Stud Book tells us that some of our most famous and stoutest horses were first foals. A trio of Champion Stakes winners, as Richmond, Wellington and Portsea, stand prominently forward in this connection. It has been alleged against first foals that as a rule they are puny and soft, but nothing of this kind can be said of the three horses named, who, in addition to annexing the championship, accounted between them for a Victoria Derby, Australian Cup and Adelaide Cup, besides numerous other events of lesser importance. Were further proof necessary to show that the prejudice against first-born animals is based upon a fallacious foundation, one would not require to go beyond the Australian Cup, the longest handicap race in the Southern Hemisphere. Included in the roll of winners of this classic handicap are: Columbus, Ringwood, Broken Hill and Portsea, all first born offspring of their dams. Not to be behindhand, the Melbourne Cup bears valuable testimony on the same point through the agency of Chester, Darriwell, Sheet Anchor and Malvolio—truly a quartette of magnificent stayers. In addition to Chester and Wellington, three other first foals are found amongst the Victoria Derby winners in Miss Jessie, Florence and Oriflamme, the last named of which likewise won the V. R. C. St. Leger, as also did Caspian, another first foal. The mention of the latter's name reminds me that there is at least one man—I know another, Mr. S. G. Cook—on the Australian turf who does not share in the popular dislike to first foals, for he has bred a few that could gallop in Avernus (Hobart Cup), Caspian, Maid of All Work (Maribyrnong Plate), Miss Jessie, Belmont, Artful Joe and Free Citizen. Mr. Cook is one of the few men I know who has a particular fondness for first foals, and when you twit him that horses like The Harbor Light, A. B. C. and The Inquisitor are only sorry examples, you must be prepared for the naive retort, "How about The Captain?" Well, The Captain was, of course, a good handicap horse, but not to be mentioned in the same breath as Goldbrough, or Cranbrook, or Althotas, or Masquerade, or Imperial, or Sardonyx, or The Plunger, or Pluto, or Mistake, or a dozen other first foals that could be readily named. Having mentioned Cranbrook, his first foal record in the Newmarket Handicap was equalled by Tyropean and beaten by Aspen, who won the sprinting handicap championship in consecutive years. The Caulfield Cup is not without its first foal, and who that saw Ben Bolt respond to the late "Mick" O'Brien's demoniacal call doubted that first foals were as game and generous as any other. Singular to say, Ben Bolt's sire was also the virgin issue of his dam, who, more peculiar still, was only a yearling when she conceived the sire of the Caulfield Cup winner. In this particular bearing it may be mentioned en passant that the mighty Chester and another

Melbourne Cup winner in Sheet Anchor were got when their dams were two years old, and Cranbrook when his "mamma" was twelve months older. The V. R. C. Oaks supplies a whole host of first foals in Florence, Rose d'Amour, Gaslight, Maid of All Work, Royal Maid, Melita, The Nun and Uralla. The Maribyrnong Plate contributes a couple of testimonials to the "first foal tribute" in Maid of All Work and Habena, and it would be an omission not to mention other notable "firsts" such as Tom Brown (Tattersall's Cup), Hortensius (Adelaide Birthday Cup), Trump Yoss (Hawkesbury Handicap), The Lawyer (Adelaide Birthday Cup). Were one to search further afield for lesser lights, quite a number could be unearthed in Disfigured, Newmaster, Foxtail, Santa Claus, John S., Waterford Wandering Jew, Belladrum, Kohai, Silverton, Erlani, Lesbia, Glenormiston and Aconite, all performers of some ability. Of the horses now on the turf, Straightfire, Canoon and Armenia are the initial progeny of their dams. Before exhausting the list I would do the jumping brigade a grievous injustice were I to pass over the V. R. C. Grand National winner, Sussex. The Stud Book returns give all these as the maiden produce of their dams. Although I find that amongst the innumerable events won by Australian first foals are included three Championships, four Melbourne Cups, four Australian Cups, four Victorian Derbies, eight Oaks, two V. R. C. St. Legers, two Maribyrnong Plates, four Newmarket Handicaps, one Sydney Cup, two Hawkesbury Handicaps, three Metropolitan, one Caulfield Cup, two Hobart Cups, one Adelaide Cup, two Adelaide Birthday Cups and one Victorian Grand National Steeplechase. Truly this is a formidable score, and ought once and for all to dispel the popular fallacy that the first-born offspring of mares are inferior to their subsequent progeny.—"Asmodius" in N. Z. Referee.

BARNEY SCHREIBER'S BABY RACERS.

Sixteen foals are reported from Barney Schreiber's farm in St. Louis county, only three of which are colts. Two were sired by Foul Shot, the imported Australian stallion, and the other is a son of the great Kingston, out of Park Ridge, a mare that used to race in the colors of D. A. Honig. One of the Foul Shots is a son of Ellen, a mare that was raced at the Fair Grounds by Green B. Morris two years ago, and the other is a son of America, a full sister to Assignee.

Ada Reese and Miss Howard, two of Schreiber's broodmares, at J. U. Shippee's farm in Kentucky, have foaled safely. Ada Reese is the dam of Climacus, a colt that best the speedy Gay Parisienne at Little Rock this spring. Pennyroyal and the sister to Uncle Bob slipped their foals. A list of the Schreiber youngsters will be found below:

Bay filly by imp. Foul Shot—Parolee.
Chestnut colt, by Riley—Miss Howard.
Bay filly, by Huron—Ada Reese, dam of Climacus.
Brown filly, by imp. Foul Shot—Ottawa.
Bay filly, by imp. Foul Shot—Caroline Hamilton.
Brown filly, by Kingston—Estelle.
Brown colt, by imp. Foul Shot—Ellen.
Chestnut filly, by Balgowan—Spozie.
Chestnut filly, by imp. Brutus—Grand Lady.
Brown filly, by imp. Foul Shot—Ohio Belle.
Chestnut colt, by Little Minch—Laura Agnes.
Bay filly, by imp. Foul Shot—Innocence.
Bay filly, by Balgowan—Duchess.
Bay filly, by Kingston—Daisy Woodruff, dam of Lieber Karl.
Bay filly, by imp. Foul Shot—Miss Hall, Kamsin's dam.
Chestnut filly, by Service—Derfargilla.
Chestnut colt, by Kingston—Park Ridge.
Bay colt, by imp. Foul Shot—America, sister to Assignee.—St. Louis Republic.

A HORSE'S TEETH.

Every horse has six teeth above and below. Before three years of age he sheds his middle teeth. At three he sheds one more on either side of the central teeth. At four he sheds the two corner and last of the fore teeth. Between four and five the horse cuts the under tusks, at which time his mouth will be complete. At six years the grooves and hollows begin to fill up a little. At seven the grooves will be well nigh filled up, except the corner teeth, leaving little brown spots where the dark brown hollows formerly were. At eight the whole of the hollows and grooves are filled up. At nine there is very often seen a small bill to the outside corner teeth, the point of the tusk is worn off, and the part that was concave begins to fill up and become rounding. The squares of the central teeth begin to disappear, and the gums leave them small and narrow at the top.

HARRY REED, the six year-old gelding by Himyar—Violet, by Vauxhall, who has for several years past been one of the principal breadwinners in the stable of M. F. Dwyer, has at last broken down, and the veterinary surgeons who have examined him, although they cannot locate the trouble, have agreed that he will never be able to train for racing again. Of the many good horses owned Mr. Dwyer during his career on the turf, Harry Reed probably brought him more money in stakes, purses and bets than any other and although the Brooklyn turfman has been accused many times of being utterly devoid of sentiment regarding his horses when they had passed their usefulness for racing purposes, he has in the case of the old gelding declared that if in a short time the surgeons again decide that his racing career is at an end, he will send him to Kentucky to browse on the blue grass of his native State until he dies. Harry Reed's difficulty is with his fore legs, which gave him some trouble. His trainer, Hardy Campbell, succeeded in getting him in shape for racing last spring, but when the old trouble broke out afresh last week the trainer was hopeless. Harry Reed was bred in Kentucky, and was brought here as a two-year-old in 1894 by John E. Madden. He ran under the colors of Gus Strauss at Morris Park in the spring of the year and won two races. Mr. Dwyer's stable was a weak one at the time and he bought the gelding at the reported price of $14,000. Harry Reed won thirteen races for Mr. Dwyer during the season, and his winnings alone saved the Brooklyn plunger from a disastrous year. During the four years Harry Reed carried Mr. Dwyer's colors he won thirty-six races. He was one of the string of horses in the unfortunate Dwyer-Crocker combination in England in 1895, and he was the only horse Mr. Dwyer brought back with him, most of the others being claimed in selling races.—N. Y. Times.

ED CORRIGAN has leased the Monument Ranch, a few miles out of Sacramento, and will send to it those of his gallopers that he does not deem worthy of being sent East to which need a let-up. For some time past the big turfman has had his horses turned out at Brentwood Farm, a model establishment near Antioch, but of course he will save a lot of money every year by having his own place, for he it known that he has not far from fifty gallopers in California. Mr. Corrigan has a number of young Riley mares out here, and as the Monument Farm is not far from Rancho del Paso, will have an opportunity to breed them to some of the celebrities that make their home upon "the grant." The veteran turfman, who heretofore has bred horses at a farm near Midway, Ky., will be a good addition to our list of breeders, and doubtless many good winners will come from Monument farm.

SEVERAL very annoying errors crept into "The Saddle" department last week in the article regarding sires of winners of England's great classic races—the Derby, Oaks and St. Leger. Where it reads "the names of the sires of the Epsom Derby," etc., it should be "the names of the sires of the winners of the Epsom Derby," etc. Further on, instead of "Doncaster Derby" it should be "Doncaster St. Leger," and instead of Diomed being the first winner of the St. Leger it should be "the first winner of the Derby."

It is expected that Tommy Burns will be quite a rival of Toddy Sloan at the far East this season. Burns is three-quarters of an inch taller than Tod and weighs seven pounds less. His legs are longer by two inches. Tod's chest measures three and a half more than that of Burns and the mid-gut man wears a No. 7 3/8 hat, Burns a 6 1/2, but an Eastern wag says Toddy may be wearing Tommy's size before the season is over. Burns is described as "a thin, long-legged lad, and rides with a long stirrup reach and with his thigh much nearer straight than does Sloan. He uses a longer rein than does the Eastern favorite, though at that he takes holds of his bridle much closer the bit than the old-fashioned ideas of jockeyship approve of."

We have just seen a beautiful oil painting of the handsome and fast Golden Garter colt, Lobos, executed by the trainer of the youngster, Harry Mason. It is not only a true likeness of the colt, but a splendid work of art, and it strikes us that Mr. Mason, if he were to branch out and make a business of painting horses, would be second to few artists in America.

Saddle Notes.

GRADY has been entered in five stakes at Butte and Anaconda.

COL. DAN BURNS is expected here from San Dimas, Mexico the week after next.

PAT DUNNE has sold Czarowitz, b f, 4, by Martenhurst—Mabel F., to Simms & Anderson for $1,000.

THE reason that Barney Schreiber sold Marplot was that the colt was too sick to ship with his other horses.

RICHARD J., by Morello—Bonnie Leaf, won a six-furlong race in a gallop at Newport, Ky., April 20th. Time, 1:14½.

'GENE LEIGH is now the owner of Pop Dixon, having "run him up" at Newport Thursday and secured him for $600.

MANNIE HIMYAR (own sister to Domino) has recently dropped at Hira Villa a chestnut colt by Prince of Monaco, brother to St. Carlo.

THE good mare Derfargilla, who raced out here in the colors of "Pittsburg Phil" Smith, has a filly foal by Servitor at Barney Schreiber's ranch.

DATING from next Saturday the management of the Newport track charges an entrance fee of $10 to all races under a mile. This is done to keep down the large fields.

W. P. NORTON of Hopkinsville, Ky., is now the owner of Ornament and May Hempstead. At the close of his turf career Ornament will join imp. Albert of the Alberta stud.

'GENE LEIGH, acting for Colonel Pepper, has sold to W. Rothert of Canada, the two-year-old chestnut colt Deblaire, by Perblaise—Devotee. The price was reported to be $950.

THE stable of Oots Bros., consisting of twelve horses, and consisting of such fast ones as Turtle Dove, Banastar and Margaret Jane, was shipped to Louisville on Thursday last.

FORMULA, by Hanover, out of Falerno, by Longfellow, property of J. S. Barkley, South Elkhorn, Ky., foaled April 19th a bay colt by St. Saviour. Mare will be bred to Onondaga.

HUGH HENRY on April 22d had another bunch of bad luck, his two-year-old colt by Flambeau, out of Flam (for which he a few days ago refused $1,500) dying of inflammation of the stomach.

AT the second days' racing of the Sandown spring meeting April 22d Lord Wil iam Beresford's five-year-old American bred horse Diakka won the Esther Stakes, a handicap of 1,000 sovereigns.

COL. W. S. BARNES and Ed. Hopper, Secretary of the Latonia Jockey Club and the American Turf Congress, will probably be judges on the Montana circuit. James B. Ferguson will do the starting.

RENO was a good buy. The sum paid for him less than a month ago was very small, yet the first time his new owner, Louis Ezell, started the old gelding he won a full-course steeplechase, the California, value $1,000.

FLOODMORE, the hero of many a good race through the field at the old Bay District track, has been going so well recently that it was expected he would soon be seen in public again, but he hit his style the other day and will have to be shelved again.

THE California Jockey Club will give a race for gentleman riders at one mile the first Tuesday of the next meeting, entries to close this Saturday. Weights thirty-five pounds above the scale for three-year-olds and up, the riders to select their own mounts.

JOHN D. SMITH, brother of Mrs. Byron McClelland, has shipped his stable of ten to Louisville. In this stable is the great 2 year-old His Lordship, by Rayon d'Or—Sallie McClelland. He has developed into one of the best looking youngsters in the State.

FOXHALL KEENE sailed for England Wednesday, where he will superintend the training and racing of his father's horses. Uriel is thought to have a chance of winning the Epsom Derby and young Keene will closely supervise the preparation of the colt.

CHARLEY BOOTS recently brought down six Brutus fillies from his Milpitas rancho, and the first one tried out, Salstace, sister to Nebula, worked a quarter very nicely in 0:23½. Mr. Boots hopes the rest will do as well, and if they do he will take them right on to New York.

THE first page of the last issue of The Thoroughbred Record contains excellent pictures of the Castleton stallions, Tournament, Chorister, Kingston, St. Leonards and Hardspring, the one of Kingston, greatest of all American racers, being in the center. He is the premier stallion at Castleton.

CHARLEY MACKLIN, who rode for Galen Brown for several seasons, has had bad luck for a long while. One of his brothers was killed a couple of weeks ago and yesterday afternoon he received a telegram that his youngest brother, a promising lightweight rider, had been killed at St. Louis.

E. P. BYRNE, a young Englishman who has graduated from Joe Cannon's stable, is at the Ivy City track with four horses belonging to J. Storey Curtis. Byrne will train Mr. Curtis' second string in this country and one in South Africa. Curtis is about the most cosmopolitan owner in the world.

AT McGrathiana Stud, April 15th, Semper Paratus (dam of On Deck and Cathedral) foaled a bay colt by Badge. Mare bred to Requital. April 20th, Maria D. (grandam of Ornament) foaled a bay or brown filly by imp. Eothen. Mare will be bred to imr. Ben Strome. E. C. Cowders owns the mares and foals.

At the sale of stock on Wednesday belonging to the late H. A. Guthrie, Milton Young purchased a bay two year-old filly by Onondaga, out of Astrakan, by Strathmore, for $185. Jake Sloan purchased Nervine, 8, by imp. Kantaka out of Nirvana, by King Alfonso, with a foal by Timothy for $30.—Thoroughbred Record.

THERE is no let-up in the selling race war at Newport, Ky. The last race was won in a canter by W. M. Rogers' Morello—Bonnie Leaf colt, who was entered to be sold for $800. Charley McCafferty, who is still smarting under the effects of his having been bid up, raised him to $1,105, at which figure he was bought in by his owner.

MODWENA and Ann Page in R. Hughes' stable ran first and second in the opening race at Ingleside Monday. Both were very sore before the race with badly bucked shins and under the circumstances performed very creditably. The winner is by Morello from Glen Ellen, dam of De Bracey, and was bred by J. B. Chase at Sonoma.

FLEUR DE LIS is to be declared out of the Brooklyn Handicap, but she may go to the post for the Suburban. The Maxim mare had a saddle on yesterday for the first time in three weeks and was trotted several miles. Ab Stemler says that she moved as if sound, but how she will acquit herself when asked to gallop is a matter of conjecture.

AT Nantura Farm, April 18th, Betsy Broeck foaled a chestnut colt, white face (own brother to Traverser) by imp. Rosington. This colt in every respect (except that he has a little more white in his face) is considered by Mr. C. B. Hawkins, who bred both, an exact reproduction of Traverser at the same age. He is a slashing big, stout colt.—Thoroughbred Record.

BEN EDER, for whom Mr. J. W. Jolt paid a long price, in the interest of timber conversion, will not jump and has been given up as a sad case. Every method was tried to induce Ben to take to the timber. He rejected all, probably on the idea that he deserved better things. Ben always was a fanciful kind of a "hoos." He has been turned over to W. Hueston for flat racing.
